The Commissioners were slow to act which wasn't in accordance with Mr. Duncan's original plan so he mailed each one and the Mayor a herald. This brought results. The whole official family got busy with emphatic "no's" for the plan. Naturally this was news for the papers and the Colonial and Duncan garnered more publicity with no advertising bill to be settled later.

The Mayor decreed that Duncan's aviator could not fly over the city. Later after consulting with the law perhaps, he modified his edict and stated no "stunt flying." The landing was positively prohibited.

This was exactly what Duncan had wanted, the landing in the street part having given the showman cold feet anyway. However, the Colonial manager wasn't going to let an opportunity to obtain some more free publicity so he put up a terrible kick and actually had the Mayor on the defensive, all of which found its way into newspaper print.

The time for the scheduled flight found the streets of Lincoln filled as only some sensation properly advertised or a circus parade can do it. The police had to be called in to handle the crowds that blocked traffic and gathered about the Colonial entrance waiting to get into see the picture. The flight was minus the advertised street landing, but it still had plenty of thrills. Gardner put over some sensational stuff in the way of tail spins, loop the loop and nose dives and to cap it all raced at top speed from all directions just clearing the buildings.

When the exhibition was over, which as you may guess, was just before it was time to open the Colonial, Duncan watched the crowd push and jam in an endeavor to get into to see his show with the satisfaction of the man who knows he has done a good job. "The Great Air Robbery" went over like a house afire and Duncan's advertising stunt will go down in Lincoln history as the most successful bit of showmanship ever pulled in the city.

Schade Gets Much Publicity Through Novelty Card

"CLOSED for the day, gone to see Alice Lake in 'Shore Acres' at Schade's theatre" read more than 10,000 of these cards hung on store latches and on houses in Sandusky all of one Sunday, recently, when George Schade, of Schade's Theatre, Sandusky, Ohio, was playing "Shore Acres." Schade had 'em all put on after midnight of the Saturday preceeding the Sunday on which the picture opened at his theatre. Of course, they hung on the store latches all day Sunday. And many of them hung on the houses too, for this is vacation time, and many houses were deserted by their owners. So, with little expense, and an idea that isn't altogether new, Schade made a very neat little profit with "Shore Acres."

Duncan Gets Attention of Des Moines Newspapers

A publicity success with "The Virgin of Stamboul" is reported from Sioux City where J. C. Duncan, manager of the Plaza theatre, broke into the front pages of the local newspapers for the first time in the history of the house by inaugurating a Priscilla Dean Mathematical Competition.

Other good exploitation was put over for the picture.

The Hotel Martin, the leading hotel of the city, served a "Priscilla Dean Punch" and a "Priscilla Dean Salad" during the week of the showing. Three large confectioners included "Priscilla Dean Special" and "Priscilla Dean Sundae," two new and tasty ice cream preparations, on their menus. Duncan served Turkish coffee in his lobby during the showing.

Rivoli Specialty Makes Decided Hit

THE Rivoli faculty of synchronizing its program is again in evidence this week.

The bill opens with "Southern Rhapsody" which is followed by a scenic "On the Mississippi," being a semi-travogue number showing Southern plantation and Mississippi river views.

This fades into a two-part stage number under the title of "Southern Idyl." The drapes part on a dimly lighted interior of a log cabin typical of the Southern negro. An open door and windows look out on a river and sky scenic backing. The lightings used suggest moonlight. At a rough table in the cabin a colored woman sits with her head on the bowed as if asleep. A river packet lighted from stem to stern hoves in sight on her journey up the river, viewed by the audience as the miniature crosses the stage back of the open door and windows. This scene is faded out and into a cartoon film showing three negro characters being drawn by the artist with a sketched cabin backing as shown on the stage.

The film runs a couple of minutes and at its end the light colored drapes on which it had been projected part, showing the stage setting previously described fully lighted with three dancers identical to those shown in the cartoon film distributed about the stage in the same manner as in the cartoon. The orchestra strikes into a characteristic negro "hoe down" and two of the performers dance a plantation number while the third, a corpulent "mammy," keeps time to the music and shuffling of feet. The orchestral accompaniment during the screening of the scenic and the showing of the first part of the specialty number is compiled from familiar Southern melodies.

Small Town Managers Get Results with Something Different

THE value of booking a special brand of pictures for a week or more, solid booking, and going the limit in publicity and exploitation, was amply proved recently by the manager of the Lyric Theatre, Valley Junction, Iowa.

He booked a solid week of Universal features, comedies and short stuff. He focused attention on his theatre by means of a spirited contest in which he offered various prizes for essays to be written after the week of Universal pictures.

The subject of the essay was "The Universal Star I Liked the Best and Why." The competition was opened to everyone. It aroused great interest. The local paper ran a column story on the front page with the heading "Universal Week."

Martin Originates Excellent Calendar

J. P. Martin, manager of the Swan theatre, Columbus, Neb., one of the A. H. Blank string, comes through with what is perhaps the best and tastiest example of a monthly calendar for the announcing of current attractions at a theatre which has come to our hands.

The days of the week are spaced across the page directly under in two days' spaces is announced the Swan attractions. The dates are printed in red directly under the day headings and the balance of the calendar, except some announcements at the top of the card, are in black.

Mr. Martin reports that the use of this calendar is greatly appreciated by his patrons and that he is firmly convinced that the publication of the sheets are good business getters for the house.

Somerville Fights Old Sol with Avidity

"Jazz" and Hula-hula is What Charlotte Showman Employed in His "The Idol Dancer" Campaign

EX-P-L-O-I-T-A-T-I-O-N divided so as to admit the injection of jazz and hula-hula was the treat spread last week before the people of Charlotte, N. C., by Harry Somerville, manager of the Broadway Theatre of that city. Naturally, this is no guarantee to exhibitors that they can learn rag-time exploitation with the reading of this item, but it is a certainty that a description of Mr. Somerville's campaign may have a degree of benefit for exhibitors who are anxious to get a laugh on hot weather.

June as a summer month means considerably more in Charlotte than it does in Greenland and some scorching weather had arrived when Mr. Somerville's playdates for "The Idol Dancer" arrived.

Mr. Somerville fought the hot weather with a quartette of new and old devices. To enumerate: with the newspapers, inside his theatre, outside his theatre, and a special remedy that was equally acceptable, inside or out.

The Broadway lobby was designed to represent a South Sea setting. The thatch and twigs from palm trees gave a woodland atmosphere to the cutout of the maid of the South Seas who was described as "Oh, how she can dance." In fact, this phrase was used as a trade mark, so frequently did it appear.

The most unusual feature of the lobby display was the fact that it gave an extraordinarily cool appearance to the theatre.

Atop the lobby canopy was another original exploitation feature of Mr. Somerville's. Five negroes, in jazz band arrangement serenaded from the balcony. Those walking along the sidewalk adjacent to the theatre were puzzled at the source of the hidden music. Those on the opposite side of the street, however, could see the black-and-tan musicians whaling the daylight out of some popular rags. With a little encouragement and there would have been dancing in the lobby of the Broadway.

Another great exploitation asset and one that created a great deal of word-of-mouth gossip among men and women and young girls was "Lolueha," only "two girls like her in the world and she's both of 'em," Lolueha was a dancer. She could don the weeds and a smile and shake the shimmy out of its house and home. The faster the jazz band played the more Lolueha wiggled and she wiggled herself to fame during the engagement of "The Idol Dancer."

In addition to using liberal display advertisements in the local newspapers, Mr. Somerville specialized on an assortment of striking posters and window cards. Boys distributed heralds through the residential sections.

But it was the hidden jazz band, the naughty hula dancer, and that cool South Sea lobby display which took the major part in putting over "The Idol Dancer."

Franklin Stages Prologue for "Virgin of Stamboul"

The atmosphere of old Araby was "piled on thick" at Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo, when managing Director Harold B. Franklin presented "The Virgin of Stamboul." As a prologue to the presentation Mr. Franklin offered an elaborate stage setting as a background for a dance such as we read of in the Arabian Nights. A Buffalo girl with real terpsichorean talent tripped the light fantastic. The stage scene was one of the best seen at this big Buffalo house this year. The figures, representing desert tribesmen, were cut out and placed around a large fire, the brilliant red color of which formed a striking contrast to the vari-hued costumes of the Sons of the Sahara. Following the dance and with the setting still unveiled, the big symphony orchestra played Victor Herbert's selection "Algeria."

As this selection was ended the curtains were drawn on the center setting, the two side panels were disclosed in which were striking scenes of the Far East, and the feature was thrown on the screen.

Navy Recruiters and Theatre Co-operate at 'Frisco

As an exploitation aid in putting over

"Below the Surface" at the Imperial theatre, San Francisco, the publicity department for the Roth-Partington houses co-operated with the Navy recruiting service, which furnished a motorcycle to drive a man dressed in a diver's suit about town the week the picture was shown at the Imperial.

On the Navy's posters which has been previously put up all over the city, many of them in locations which were barred to ordinary publicity mediums, an extra strip bearing the words, "Below the Surface—Imperial Theatre," was added. J. D.

Japanese Atmosphere for "Willow Tree" Lobby Display

One of the most effective lobby displays ever seen in Dubuque was constructed at the Strand theatre for the showing of "The Willow Tree."

The spacious lobby formed an ideal spot for a huge Japanese umbrella, from the points of which hung varied colored lanterns. The umbrella was of white card board, artistically fashioned and so arranged as to catch the eye not only of the people entering the theatre, but also passers-by. The theatre itself was resplendent with Japanese lightings, and Mr. Reith, the organist, played a most appropriate score.

Fisher Builds Lobby Display for Dean Picture

The spirit of the East permeated the Alhambra theatre in Milwaukee for two weeks as a result of one of the most complete lobby transformations ever effected in a motion picture theatre. The accompanying photographs (opposite page) give some idea of the extent to which Manager George Fisher went to secure the proper effect. The entire setting, made of wood and canvas, was placed inside the long Alhambra lobby, none of the real lobby showing. The ceiling was canopied with strips of bunting which had been sewed together in Oriental effect. Bright orange, red and yellow were the predominating colors. From the lobby the patrons of the Alhambra stepped into a dimly lighted foyer which was illuminated by red lights. The photographs, which were taken with bright lights, show the wall decoration in bold outline and lose the effect which was secured by the dim lighting. The foyer wall coverings were done in different shades of black and gray which in the red light gave an effect of space and showed shadowy forms of camels and Oriental buildings on all sides. The entire display caused no end of comment in Milwaukee and it was noted that many persons who were not patrons merely came to look at the lobby, having heard of its exceptional beauty from their friends.

Treasure Hunt Adds to Newmman's Treasury

Novelty Exploitation for "Treasure Island" Highly Successful At Kansas City

A GENUINE treasure hunt brought a treasure of admissions when "Treasure Island" was shown at Frank L. Newman's New Royal theatre, Kansas City.

The stunt was pulled off in such a manner that it enlisted the active cooperation of leading business firms in the city and not only interested them in the hunt but made them active boosters for the picture.

The Kansas Post, one of the most influential papers of the Middle West, took active hold of the idea as soon as it was suggested and offered the assistance of its news and advertising staffs. Double-column front page stories were run for several days before the hunt began, all prominently mentioning the name of the picture and the theatre, in arousing the zest of countless kiddies for the lure of Captain Kidd's treasure. By arrangement with two real estate companies four treasure boxes were buried, two in each of the plots offered for sale by the respective companies. In addition to the $10.00 prize offered ostensibly by the Kansas City Post to each of the successful treasure hunters, one of the real estate companies offered in each of the boxes hidden on its property, a certificate good for $250 toward the purchase of any lot offered for sale by the company.

At that point Cady and Olmstead, leading jewelers of Kansas City, found themselves vitally interested in the hunt, not only because the jewelry house published a monthly magazine called the "Treasure Chest," but because of the advertising advantages it saw in tying up with a picture like "Treasure Island." They immediately offered a $65 diamond ring to the winner bringing in the first box to the office of the Post. Then they filled the chests with odd articles, souvenir Pershing spoons, a sword, knitting needles and other articles.

Prominent displays featuring stills from the production were given in windows of the Post and Cady & Olmstead. On the day the hunt started a full page advertisement, said to be the most artistic page ever gotten up in a Kansas City paper, appeared in the Post. It represented the combined advertising of the two real estate firms, the jeweler and the theatre but every line centralized upon the forthcoming showing of "Treasure Island" at the New Royal theatre.

The boxes were hidden Saturday night at midnight and the hunt began immediately. How immediately can be judged from the fact that 11:30 Sunday morning a 13-year-old boy brought to the Post office not one, but both of the boxes buried on one of the tracts—the one with the $250 certificate. It gave a splendid opportunity for a picture story to the Post which has been giving preference to "Treasure Island" throughout the week and which concluded this treasure hunt yarn again by the line: "And he's going to see 'Treasure Island,' the photoplay at the New Royal this week."

The fact that this boy promptly gave the $65 diamond ring and the knitting needles to his mother furnished another good yarn for the paper.

The third box was found by a little seven-year-old girl which gave the news writers another chance to spread themselves. The fourth box was buried in a field of alfalfa and up to four days after the burial had not been unearthed. The delay offered an opportunity for a daily story on the treasure hunt which the Post used to full advantage. And all the time the attention of every motion picture fan was being directed to the photoplay at the New Royal theatre by a stunt which automatically brought the cooperation of business men and, for a very small outlay, directed a degree of attention to the showing of "Treasure Island" that could not have been obtained by the expenditure of hundreds of dollars in just straight advertising.

Double for Ray Novelty at Grauman's Theatre

A MOST clever bit of imitation work that has been carried on at all performances at the Grauman's theatre, Los Angeles, the week of June 21 in connection with the showing of the Charles Ray picture, "Homer Comes Home," is that of Manager Sid Grauman introducing a double for Charles Ray who was successful in making many of the former Ince star's friends think it was he appearing on the stage.

This act, it may be said, is a partial repetition of one used at Grauman's in connection with the showing of a previous Ray release. At that time the double for Ray was introduced as Ray, took a bow and left the stage. Since that time Sid Grauman has had the young man at work continuously studying the mannerisms and actions of Ray with the result that in the prologue for "Homer Comes Home" he so successfully impersonates Ray and is so near like Ray in appearance that the deception may be referred to as about ninety-nine and forty-four hundredths per cent pure. The prologue requires a setting that is an exact duplication of the interior of the garage used in "Homer Comes Home," with the same automobile that is used in the picture and various other props from the Ince studio.

The act opened with a musical introduction by the orchestra, and as the curtains opened, four mechanics were seen at work on the car in which the young lady was seated. As they tinkered with the vehicle one of the men began humming the refrain of a popular song and soon the four mechanics were all joining in, reminding one of the small-town quartette. After several numbers, which were enthusiastically received, one of the men, looking off-stage, exclaimed, "Here comes Homer now!"

Ray's "double" made his entrance here and was given hearty applause by the big audiences at every performance. After a few bashful bits of introductory "business" the "double" seemingly began to sing the chorus of "You Are the Ideal of My Dreams" to the young lady in the car. Toward the last of the chorus one of the mechanics who had been at work underneath the car rose up and started brushing the hood and it was then discovered that he and not the Ray "double" was the singer. This bit of play gave the "double" an excellent chance to portray the mannerisms of Ray when registering embarrassment and the number received a big laugh from the patrons. The act closed with another number by the quartette with the Ray "double" in a tableau with the girl.

Two overflow pages of Service, both of exceptional value are to be found on pages 680-681.

Title of Picture Suggests Unique Exploitation

How the manager of the Fiolle theatre, San Francisco, tied up with Cynthia Grey, the editor of the woman's page of the San Francisco Daily News, and with Judge Graham, San Francisco's most noted divorce court judge, to exploit "The Road to Divorce," is an interesting example of simple but effective publicity.

Miss Grey started a Prize Essay competition on her page, offering prizes for the best essays on the subject, "How to avoid the road to divorce." More than three thousand 350 word essays were sent in. Judge Graham and a representative of the Universal Film Company were the judges.

School Children Help Put Over Picture at Des Moines

An unusual amount of publicity and a keen interest on the part of every school child in Des Moines, was obtained in that city recently in connection with the showing of "The Virgin of Stamboul" at the Rialto theatre.

Prizes were offered to school children sending in the longest lists of words made from the letters contained in the title of the picture.

The affair was arranged through the Des Moines Evening Tribune, which gave it much attention, carrying daily stories of the progress of the event.

Cassidy's Exploitation Conquers Peoria

Nothing Was Left Undone When "The Copperhead" Played the Majestic

IN planning the campaign for "The Copperhead" at the Majestic Theatre, Peoria, Ill., Frank A. Cassidy, one of Famous Player-Lasky's exploitation representatives in Chicago, found it necessary to take into consideration a street car strike that had the town pretty well tied up. In a city of 70,000 a street car strike is a serious matter for theatres, especially after the first week, when the novelty has worn off. The folks simply get out of the habit of coming downtown at night.

Cassidy's big tie-up was with the Army recruiting office. At first thought, one might think that any tie-up that had a war angle might not bring results. But "The Copperhead" is a patriotic if not a war picture, and all the paper and the photos emphasize the Civil war atmosphere. As there are two recruiting scenes in the picture—one for the Mexican war and one for the Civil war, it was an easy matter to get the Army's interest.

The recruiting offices donated a six-ton Renault tank to run on the streets downtown for three days. It carried seven "Copperhead" dated banners, and attracted more attention than a circus parade.

The recruiting office also placed a d's-play of cannon and machine guns in front of the theatre and in the lobby. They also placed a soldier on guard, all the time the theatre was open. The display attracted lots of attention and besides the recruiting service through its own press agent placed a couple of good special stories in the newspapers.

A penny display was used in a prominent window adjoining the opposition theatre. Two hundred and eighty-three "Copperheads" were placed in the window in a pile, and the public invited to guess at the number. A catch line "How many Copperheads Were There in Peoria County During the Civil War?" drew the attention of the passer-by. The window was filled with "Copperhead" pictures and advertising, and the effectiveness of the scheme is shown by the fact that more than two thousand guesses were recorded, and each person who guessed carried home a card containing an announcement that "The Copperhead" would be at the Majestic.

An invitation was issued to the members of the local G.A.R. post to attend the Tuesday matinee in a body and fifty of them marched from their hall to the theatre. The Post accepted and on returning from the show declared the scenes true to life, and the details of uniforming, etc., absolutely perfect, which presented an opportunity to break into the newspapers with a strong endorsement of the picture from several prominent veterans. The old boys were great boosters, and several of them came back a second and third time, and brought their wives and other members of their families.

The front of the theatre was decorated with the national colors, and the lobby also was draped with flags.

There were two carnivals in the city against the Majestic show—one only six blocks from the theatre. Cassidy figured to make the best of their presence, and as he knew that they would send their hands uptown in the afternoons, he arranged with them to play near the theatre.

There were many stray "customers," from the concert each afternoon, as they could not pass by the lobby display without going in. There was also the opening of the park season to combat, and the inauguration of a summer stock engagement at the vaudeville house, but in spite of all handicaps the picture did a great business for which no little part Cassidy is willing to credit to the exploitation campaign conducted.

No Short Cuts to Successful Motion Picture Exhibition

Don't Follow Line of Least Resistance Says Manager of the Blackstone

THE short-cuts to exhibitor success were outlined by Elmer Harris, manager of the Blackstone theatre, Pittsburgh, Pa., in an interview given this week exclusively to Motion Picture News.

Mr. Harris prefaced his remarks by stating that:

"There are as many short-cuts to successfully operating a motion picture theatre as there are hips on snakes. Following the line of least resistance, often brings an exhibitor to a box-office line of even smaller proportions. A motion picture theatre is an industrial unit of more scope than fifty per cent of the business institutions operated today.

"And any evasion of industrial issues with reference to the exhibiting business will carry the exhibitor far out to sea where competitive current is strong. There are no 'short cut' rules that an exhibitor can trust if he is conscientious. The most valuable assets that an exhibitor can have are nerve, tact, foresight and an ability to judge human nature. And this quatitette is the world's best box-office harmonizer.

"I know of an instance," said Mr. Harris, "when nothing but a gigantic supply or nerve put over a special feature attraction that absolutely could not have been put over in any other way. It was nerve or failure. He happened to have the nerve. It occurred in a small town in Kansas where the lid was on tight. Sunday motion picture was unknown quantity and the feasibility of the exhibitor using a picture on that day looked, indeed, small. It happened that he had booked 'Auction of Souls'—over Sunday. His only chance to book the picture was on a Sunday. He had heard of its money-making possibility and wanted to play it.

"To make a short story shorter, this exhibitor engineered an Armenian Relief deal, had the town constable's family in a box during the showing and had a reporter for the weekly newspaper write a speech which the Constable delivered from the box. The exhibitor made a literal cleanup. He gave no proceeds whatever to the relief fund because; as he told the audience in a speech before the show started:

"I feel Armenia needs our help. I'd love to spend this Sunday with my family but when there comes a time when I can help the cause of suffering families across the sea, I'll gladly throw open my doors. And no one applauded louder than the Constable.

"At the time, I thought to myself that it was one of the best examples of exhibitor-nerve—the kind that means money for his house—that I had ever come across. By making the plan go over he not only was allowed to use Sunday for his attraction day, but he got the attendance of the entire population, that had been so starved up to blue Sundays that they would have gone to see Chauncey Olcott or hear William J. Bryan make a speech. The whole town turned out in a body to welcome the showman's efforts for humanity.

"There's a million and one such happenings in every-day exhibiting that comes up to test the exhibitors' nerve, or tact, or judgment or sense of showmanship. It takes more than an ex-bartender to put over a motion picture house nowadays.

"The biggest thing that I have found to come up and test an exhibitor's tact is the complaint from the patron. That sort of thing is a daily occurrence—and if it is not handled properly and with diplomacy the exhibitor will find himself losing a patron, instead of cementing the friendship, that already should exist. Every complaint that comes in to an exhibitor can be made into an asset—if it is handled diplomatically. 'The patron is always right,' is the big motto at the Blackstone. No matter what the difficulty that arises and no matter how apparent is the patrons' mistake if he is given the benefit of the slight doubt he can do a great deal for the house—in the way of making new friends.

"Foresight is the result of a great deal of experience in the field and a combination of good sound horse-sense and artistic application. Any jackass can book a picture and hire somebody to operate the machine. But 1920 exhibiting includes more than the two operations. You've got to be an intelligent business man to buck the current competition. Foresight is what is needed on the planning lobby displays, display advertising, exploitation campaigns and all manner of publicity. It is the one big watch word the exhibitor is trying to put over a picture. Trying to dope out just what the 'other fellow' is going to do and then beating him to it is the big article that comes under the head of 'foresight' in the catalogue of motion picture exhibiting.

"I managed at one time to put over a big scoop on another exhibitor in another city, in getting ahead of him on renting a special feature attraction that I had advertised for my house—and that I simply HAD to exhibit. If an exhibitor can keep faith with his patrons no matter what the cost to him—he is doing the proper thing. I had to have this picture. I had advertised it—feeling assured that there would be no trouble in getting the booking.

"But just as I had announced the attraction so had the rival house. It took a great deal of diplomacy to put the deal over but we finally agreed on a day-and-date showing. And we both made money and both kept faith with our patrons.

The fact that the picture went over big and made money for my house was to be considered, of course. But the big thing that did me good—was the fact that I had kept faith with my patronage. I had made good the promise to give them the attraction. And they had responded as I had hoped they would.

"These four traits cannot be developed by the 'short-cut' method. They come by steady plugging and the exhibitor individuality."

Daylight Saving Announcement Used to Advantage

Daylight Saving has been generally adopted in Canada and a considerable number of exhibitors have bewailed the fact because of a possible difference that the changing of the clock makes in the attendance at theatres during the spring and summer season. This did not apply to Herb Jennings, manager of the Allen Danforth theatre, Toronto, however, because, when the order was issued by Mayor Church of Toronto to advance the clocks one hour on Saturday night, May 1, the Danforth manager also issued a proclamation in behalf of the local mayor.

"To the Citizens of Toronto—A Proclamation by Mayor Thomas Church" read the front page of the folder. Turning to the second page, one read as follows:—"All time pieces are to be put forward one hour so—." Then to the third page:—"If you wish to see what Sari saw in 'The Virgin of Stamboul' at the Allen's Danforth theatre, May 6, 7, 8, come early—and come by the new time." Not only did Manager Jennings help to advise the people to change their watches but he capitalized on the opportunity.

Paper Bags Advertise Film

An effective but inexpensive little stunt devised and carried out by Manager F. H. Klink, of the Hippodrome, Toledo, during his recent run of "The White Dove," brought him a lot of compliments, as well as a lot of business. Klink had about 15,000 paper bags made, on one side of which was a neat little advertisement on "The White Dove." He distributed these bags among twenty-two local grocers, and had no difficulty getting them to use the gift bags instead of their own bags. The only stipulation was that only one bag was to go to one customer.

Revolving Miniature Stage Feature of Window Trim

Two scenes from "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde" were staged on a miniature revolving stage as a window display when the picture was shown at the Imperial. Barrymore was shown "on stage" both as Dr. Jekyll and also as Mr. Hyde. Miniature stage furniture was used in the sets. In the Hyde set, it was badly disarranged to denote that a struggle had taken place.

One of the cleverest novelties used for exploitation purposes yet to be recorded is that which was originated by Nick Ayer, publicity director for the Eugene Roth theatres, the California and Imperial of San Francisco for the engagement of "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde."

"Splendid Hazard" Seen in Six Key Cities

One hundred per cent representation in the country's first run centers is the goal set by John W. McKay, general manager of the Mayflower Photoplay Corporation for Allan Dwan's "A Splendid Hazard," presented by Mayflower through the First National Exhibitor's Circuit. Despite the fact that the country is in the throes of a warm weather wave, advance bookings indicate that the goal will be reached before the close of the summer season.

Up to date, six key cities in the middle west have been covered with first-run bookings. They are Indianapolis, where the Dwan production had its premiere at the Circle Theatre, Milwaukee, where it was accorded its first run at the Alhambra Theatre; Detroit, where it played a week's engagement at the Madison Theatre, and St. Paul, Minneapolis.

Sixty Film Libraries Opened in Siberia

Charles Urban, president of the Kinetio Company of America, Inc., recently wrote an article on film libraries. An immediate result from the suggestions he made in that article is the establishment of sixty film libraries by the governmental authorities in Siberia.

Mr. Pierolf, representative of the Siberian government, following his perusal of the Urban article, immediately got in touch with David P. Howells, who handles the Urban production abroad, and after receiving additional suggestions through this source Mr. Pierolf established his film-library system, "Movie Chats," and the "Kinetio Reviews," which are produced by Mr. Urban's organization, have taken their place in the government library of Siberia.

Bessie Love is Feted in New York City

Bessie Love, who has been visiting in New York City, finds that vacationing in the Metropolis is not entirely restful. In her few days in the East she has been the guest of honor at a continual round of entertainments and theatre parties.

Live News From The Producers

Brady Resumes Production

Engages Peerless Studio, Ft. Lee;
To Make "Life" and Other Films

WILLIAM A. BRADY has again become active in the making of motion-pictures. Mr. Brady has secured studio accommodations at the Peerless studio in Fort Lee, and in association with Travers Vale he has started making big special features. His first production is a screen adaptation of the melodrama, "Life," written by Thompson Buchanan from a story provided by Brady himself.

"Life" was originally produced at the Manhattan Opera House under the management of Mr. Brady in 1914. It ran in that big theatre for nine months, and its receipts equalled those of "The Whip," the great Drury Lane drama that preceded it. It was afterwards given a run at the auditorium, Chicago. The New York papers proclaimed it as the biggest melodrama of the time—one of them stating that it "out Drury Landed Drury Lane." When it was ready to go on tour, after the Chicago engagement, it was found that no stage could be secured that would be big enough to stage its enormous effects, and a week would have to elapse between city engagements in order to install the machinery and scenic effects that the staging required.

The scenes are all laid in and about New York City, and every act is replete with sensation. A varsity boat race, the robbery of a bank, a murder on Fifth Avenue, which suggest the Elwell case, the capture of the murderer during a spiritual seance, an escape from Sing Sing, several sensational murders in Mexico during the Villa rebellion are some of the thrills that abound throughout the story.

It is said to be Brady's intention to follow up "Life" with several other of his famous stage productions, one of which is "The Man Who Came Back." Brady is said to have refused $250,000 for the screen right of this play alone.

"Life" will be released September 25 next. The name will shortly be announced of the distributing company that will handle it.

H. G. Mapes, president; L. A. Todd, vice-president; G. C. Mapes, secretary-treasurer. They are now operating by buying franchises for the States of Oregon, Washington, Idaho and Montana. Franchises on other territory will eventually be contracted for. It is a comedy-drama and was written especially for Carey.

Strong Cast Supports Fox, Cowboy Star

Few stars have had stronger supporting companies than the one given to Tom Mix, the daredevil cowboy star of William Fox, in "The Untamed," a virile, fast-moving tale of the West from the pen of Max Brand just completed for the screen under the direction of Emmett J. Flynn, at the Fox West Coast Studios.

Pauline Stark, one of the youngest leading women appearing before the camera, plays opposite the star. Another notable member of the cast is George Seigman, who enacts the heavy, while P. M. McCullough is a third member of "The Untamed" company.

"Fickle Women" Being State-Righted

"Fickle Women" with David Butler as the star, is the first of the D. N. Schwab productions to be offered on the state right market. Franchises Given Allen Brothers

FIFTY-THREE of Canada's leading first-run theatres were officially enrolled in the independent exhibitor cooperative movement this week when Allen Brothers of Toronto, owning and operating that number of houses through the Allen Theatre Enterprises, signed individual Associated First National Pictures franchise for each of their properties.

This, according to an announcement made this week, is the greatest single franchise grant that the Executive Committee for Associated First National Pictures has ratified since the awarding of memberships to independent exhibitors was started shortly after the Chicago convention last April.

Admittedly the largest motion picture theatre organization in Canada, and one of the greatest and most influential in the world, the Allen Theatre Enterprises, indefinitely pledging their entire theatre interests to co-operative participation in the new plan for mutualizing independent exhibitor activity through collective purchasing power, and in centralized defensive strength, have officially launched the franchise system in Canada with consequences which, it is said, in their later effect will be even more sweeping and revolutionary than the revision of distributing and exhibiting methods which the franchise is bringing about in the United States.

The franchise grants to the fifty-six theatres owned by Allen Brothers is described as the last step in the Dominion's exhibiting and distributing situation which divides the Canada motion-picture field finally into two factions—the Allen Brothers associated with the independent exhibitor element in the States and applying the same protective features to their local conditions, and the so-called producer-exhibitor group which, it is declared, has started actual theatre building in Canada as a directly controlled market for its own pictures.

Evidence that the Canadian exhibiting and distributing branches were slowly separating into two separate and opposing units was apparent months ago when Allen Brothers purchased a large interest in the First National Exhibitors' Circuit Franchise for western Canada. This transaction, which affiliated them with W. P. Dewees of Vancouver, was concurrent with the realignment of the Canadian distributing channels which had started to acquire theatres in the United States. Allen Brothers together with many other important independent exhibitors in the Dominion, viewed this producer-exhibitor policy in this country as a certain prophecy of a proposed invasion of the Canadian field. Supposition gained strength in facts when a large theatre corporation, sponsored by producing interests, was organized in Canada with resources of an extent which clearly indicated an intention to go very extensively into theatre operations.

Allen Brothers took the initiative in seeking defensive measures, and with the instant realization among independent exhibitors of the protest of the producer-created theatres corporation, the Allen interests consummated negotiations which included them in the First National membership.

Associated First National Pictures issues the following pertinent statement in summarizing the conditions now existent among independent exhibitors in Canada:

"Protection against any proposed theatre monopoly is just as essential and important to exhibitor interests in Canada as it is to the future and welfare of individual theatre owners in the United States and, accordingly, the co-operative plan sponsored by First National has been sought as the foundation on which to make a major defense. An independent theatre organization, whether it owns one or a hundred houses, must cast its support to independent stars, producers and directors, if resistance to producer aggression is to be successful. The value of collective purchasing power, and of an exhibitor co-operative organization which is conducted by exhibitors who, in acting for the interests of their associate members, automatically establish conditions and policies to which their own theatres are subject in every detail, becomes immediately apparent when need for some such grouping arises."

Two B'way Houses Book Metro

REPRESENTATION for Metro on Broadway for two successive weeks will result when a pair of that company's most recent releases will be shown one after the other at Broadway theatres less than half a mile apart. The two productions are "The Best of Luck," the spectacular melodrama, with an all-star cast, at the Capitol, and "Burning Daylight," the picturization of Jack London's famous novel, at B. S. Moss's Broadway theatre. Both S. L. Rothapel and B. S. Moss of the respective theatres have devised special exploitation matter for the two notable openings.

"The Best of Luck," which will be shown at the Capitol the week beginning July 4, is the picturization of the melodrama of the stage by Cecil Raleigh and Henry Hamilton. The production abounds in startling scenic effects which include the plunging to destruction of a big automobile over a precipice and a duel to the death between divers at the bottom of the sea for the jewels contained in the wreck of an ancient Spanish galleon. The story of the picture concerns the persecution of a beautiful Scotch girl by General Lanzana, a rich and unscrupulous Spaniard of royal blood and her protection by Lord Glenayr, a poor but gallant gentleman who loves her deeply.

Beginning Sunday, June 27th, "Burning Daylight," a picturization of the late Jack London's famous novel of the frozen northland wild, will have its first run production at B. S. Moss's Broadway theatre. An all-star cast including Mitchell Lewis is presented in the picture, which was adapted for the screen by Albert Shelby Le Vain and directed by Edward Sloman. In addition to Mitchell Lewis the cast includes Helen Ferguson, William V. Mong, Newton Hall, Alfred Allen, Edward Jobson, Robert Boulder, Gertrude Astor, Arthur E. Carewe and Lew Morrison.

Two Comic Releases July 4

Billie Burke and Bryant Washburn
Are Stars of Paramount Pictures

TWO Paramount comedies, one a comedy-drama and the other a farce, were released July 4. The former is "Away Goes Prudence," starring Billie Burke, and the latter is "The Sins of St. Anthony," in which Bryant Washburn is featured.

The scenario of "Away Goes Prudence" was written by Kathryn Suart from an original story by Josephine Lovett. The director was John S. Robertson, who has produced all of Miss Burke's recent pictures for Paramount as well as those starring John Barrymore, including "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde."

Miss Burke is said to have originated a role showing an abundance of pep, mischievousness and fun. She has the part of Prudence Thorne, a young society girl, who spends all of her leisure time in her airplane. When it comes to a choice between her lover, Hewlitt Harland, and her plane, she decides in favor of the latter. She fakes a kidnapping by way of retaliation for her fiancé's interference with her personal liberty, but Hewlitt turns the tables on her and stages a kidnapping of his own.

Percy Marmont is Miss Burke's leading man, making his first appearance in a Paramount production in many months. Charles Lane is seen as the father and Maud Turner Gordon as the mother of Prudence and Dorothy Walters, Bradley Barker and Albert Hackett have interesting character roles.

The original story of "The Sins of St. Anthony," in which Bryant Washburn is featured, was published in the Saturday Evening Post last December and gave the Post readers many a hearty laugh. Charles Collins wrote the story. Elmer Harris adapted it for the screen and James Cruze directed the picture.

It is a pretty little romance that is unfolded against a jazzy background of the type which Bryant Washburn revels and excels in. The cast also includes Margaret Loomis, Guy Oliver, Lorenza Lazzarini, Viora Daniel and Lucien Littlefield, as well as a host of lavishly attired young women.

Billie Burke, whose latest Paramount picture, "Away Goes Prudence," is the current week's feature at the Rivoli theatre

Serials for Hot Weather

Vitaphone Thrillers Do Heavy
Summer Business for Exhibitors

IT would appear that Vitaphone serials are the secret of summer business with a large number of exhibitors all over the United States and Canada, judging from reports being received at the executive offices of that company.

Added bookings are being received daily for William Duncan's million dollar serial, "The Silent Avenger," which Duncan completed last week and which already has set a record for Vitaphone episode plays. Vitaphone has been able to look unusually far ahead in serial production, because of the number of exhibitors who make a practice year after year of showing its serials. With this certain thousands of bookings accurate production budgets may be made months ahead. It is announced that the number of regular serial exhibitors dealing with Vitaphone was augmented by 2,400 new accounts on "The Silent Avenger" alone, making the grand total of houses running this serial well over 6,000.

Mr. Duncan will shortly start on another serial, the title of which is yet to be announced, and this will bring Vitaphone serial production up to May, 1921. Vitaphone advertised Duncan's serial, just completed, as a million dollar production, and it is said that "The Silent Avenger" even exceeded this figure, including, of course, Duncan's salary which is announced as the highest ever paid a serial star. Edith Johnson will continue as Duncan's leading woman in his forthcoming serial, and his supporting cast will include many of the favorites seen in "The Silent Avenger."

Paramount Scenic Has Rare Siamese Views

On July 11 there will be released "The Land of Laos," a Paramount-Burton Holmes Travel Picture. This shows scenes taken in the interior of Siam in the Laos States, inhabited by a race differing in appearance, costumes, and customs from the ruling race of the Siamese.

Fine Cast in "Twin Beds"

William Desmond and Helen Raymond to Support the De Havens

THE promise of Mr. and Mrs. Carter De Haven that in the picture presentation of "Twin Beds" they would be surrounded by a supporting cast entirely adequate to the great possibilities of the Selwyn play is amply justified by the announcement of William Desmond's selection for one of the leading roles. Mr. Desmond's film career, during which he has appeared in a long line of successes and achieved a series of personal triumphs, is well known. Before answering the call of the motion picture he had played many important roles on the stage, but it is as a star before the camera that he has won greatest acclaim. It is understood that Mr. Desmond responded with enthusiasm to the offer to appear in "Twin Beds," the production of which is proceeding most satisfactorily, for release through First National Exhibitors' Circuit.

No less pleasing is the announcement from Los Angeles that Miss Helen Raymond is to appear as Signora Monti in the De Haven picture. William J. Irving, Miss Katherine Lewis and Miss Lottie Williams, each of whom is well and favorably known to followers of the film drama, complete the list of principals, and, with the artists already mentioned give assurance that the triumph scored by "Twin Beds" in the spoken drama will be maintained in the screen offering.

Jungle Humor as Seen in Animal Serial

"The Son of Tarzan," says National Film, which is producing this serial, demonstrates that the jungle has its humorous as well as its tragic side. For instance, explains the producing organization, a family row is started by a group of monkeys over the efforts of the father monkey to step on the toes of one of his off-spring so as to make the youngster's toes turn inward. Mother monkey seems to resent father's attempt to improve baby's toes.

In another scene," says National Film, "a tiger is shown playing with a giant python, all the world like a couple of children. Neither seems to be afraid of the other, though both are aware of the possibilities of a sudden fright or instinctive change of demeanor on the part of its play adversary."

Charles Rosenzweig Is "U" Exchange Mgr.

Charles Rosenzweig has been appointed manager of the Big U Exchange, it is announced by Carl Laemmle, president of Universal. Prior to his appointment Rosenzweig had charge of the selling of special Attractions and Jewel productions in the Big "U" territory. Rosenzweig began with Universal four years ago.

Rosenzweig has inaugurated a new policy in the Big "U" Exchange.

Hereafter, the local sales force will not be divided between short-stuff on one hand and special attractions on the other. One corps of salesmen will handle Universal-Jewels exclusively. Another group will concentrate on the Star Series five reel features, and the short comedies, westerns and news reels.

Henry MacRae With Dominion

WITH the engagement of Henry MacRae as supervising director of productions, Ernest Shipman, president and general manager of the Dominion Film Company, Inc., announces the immediate entry of the new company into active picture-production. The new company has the exclusive motion-picture rights to all of the Ralph Connor stories, and the preliminary work has already been started toward putting the first three of these into production. These will be "The Foreigner," "Cameron of the Royal Mounted," and "The Patrol of the Sun Dance Trail." These will be followed immediately by "The Man From Glengarry," "The Sky Pilot," and "The Prospector."

The first picture to be actually put in production will be "The Foreigner." Mrs. Faith Glenn, who is collaborating with Ralph Connor on the scenario, has just returned from Winnipeg, Canada, where her first draft of the script received the author's O. K. "The Foreigner" is a story of the prairie and wheat-country of Canada, replete with human interest, love, romance and action.

The following statement has been issued by the Dominion Film Company:

"The policy of the Dominion Film Company will be to make big out-of-doors pictures, photographed in the identical locale called for by the story. No expense will be spared to obtain this result, as it has been found through practical experience that the results show on the screen and for that reason in the box office. This policy was followed to be enormously successful, as witnessed by the box office results obtained with 'Back to God's Country,' the James Oliver Curwood picture produced by Ernest

Henry MacRae, supervising director for Dominion Film Co., Inc.

Shipman and distributed by First National.

"'Cameron of the Royal Mounted' will be made in the foothill country of Canada, while the 'Patrol of the Sun Dance Trail' will be made in the heart of the Rocky Mountains. In connection with the taking of this picture Mr. Shipman has leased the mining town of Anthracite. He has likewise contracted for the use of a herd of 3,000 buffalo, the largest herd in existence. This is owned by the Honorable Archie McLean, member of parliament for Canada from the province of Alberta. When 'The Man From Glengarry' is produced, the entire Canadian lumber industry will be placed at the disposal of the company by the Lumbermen's Association of Canada.

"Another firm and established policy of the new company will be the elimination of permanent studios and permanent stars. Each picture will be produced on its own merits with every attention paid to the demands of the story. Each picture will contain an all star cast made up of the best people obtainable fitted to the demands of the parts they are to portray. There will be no large overhead to maintain, every cent that enters into the cost of production will go into the picture and will be seen on the screen. In this way it is estimated that each picture with a negative cost of $100,000 will in reality equal a negative cost of $150,000, if the other items which are generally figured in the cost of production were included.

"Immediately on the signing of the contract with Henry MacRae plans were formulated for the immediate start of active production. He expects to have several other directors working under him and is now engaged in selecting them. He expects to leave for the north country in about two weeks. In the meantime he will select as many characters for the first three pictures as are available in the east. The majority of them, however, he will obtain in Los Angeles, where he has a larger field to choose from.

"In making these pictures the story will receive the main consideration. As is well known the Ralph Connor stories are so strong in themselves and so fitted for photoplay adaptation that it can be truly said that the story is the thing. Nevertheless every effort will be made to find people for the principal roles who are ideally fitted by nature for the parts they are called upon to portray."

"If I Were King" Gets Pre-Release Showing June 29

The consensus of opinion regarding the art of William Farnum and the support afforded him confirms the conviction of both William Fox and Winfield R. Sheehan, his general manager, that in this feature the Fox organization has one of the greatest, if not the greatest, master-drama of the time.

"Throughout the film, which at the time of the showing approximated 8 reels of human interest, romance, live action and intrigue, J. Gordon Edwards, who directed it, succeeded finely in attaining and maintaining the spirit so essential to a correct interpretation of the theme.

"From the scenario by E. Lloyd Sheldon, who has done much notable work in this line for Fox productions, Mr. Edwards has made of this story a picture replete with dramatic and humorous moments, suspense and swift action.

"While William Farnum scored an unequivocal triumph by his performance, each member of the sterling cast achieved personal distinction. The players are Betty Ross, Clarke, Fritz Lieber, Walter Law, Henry Cavill, Claude Payton, V. V. Clogg, Harold Clairmont and Renita Johnston.

"John W. Boyle, who has been associated with Mr. Edwards for more than a year, is responsible for the artistic lighting effects and general photography, many scenes of the play being shot by a battery of cameras under his guidance.

"A special line of most effective paper is being issued by Fox for the advertising of 'If I Were King,' and the press sheet which goes to the theatres on this production is a work of art which equips the showmen with every conceivable angle of exploitation on the picture."

Ince Purchases Story for Douglas MacLean

Charles Belmont Davis' story, "When Johnny Comes Marching Home," has been purchased by Thomas H. Ince for adaptation to the screen with Douglas MacLean in the title role, according to an announcement made this week from the Ince studios on the West Coast. The production will be released through Paramount.

In support of MacLean in "When Johnny Comes Marching Home" will appear many favorites of the screen, including a leading woman whose identity is held secret for the present, but who promises to greet audiences as one of the greatest "finds" of the current season. The production will be directed by Jack Nelson, recently placed under contract by Thomas H. Ince, and Bert Cann will be at the camera.

William Duncan Finishes Final Episodes

William Duncan this week emerged from six months of the hardest kind of effort to finish the scenes of his million-dollar Vitagraph serial, "The Silent Avenger."

Vitagraph's most expensive serial to date is now completed, and the even bigger things that are being planned for William Duncan will soon be announced by Albert E. Smith.

The final episodes were replete with huge sets and difficult action. In fact, while Duncan was working in the thirteenth, fourteenth and fifteenth episodes, the twenty acres of Vitagraph's studio grounds proved insufficient to hold the large sets he required, and additional space on each side of the lot was leased to meet his demands.

Hydroplane Stunts in Ruth Roland Serial

The Ruth Roland Company, filming the Pathe serial "Ruth of the Rockies," completed the work at San Diego, where several hydroplane scenes were produced. These scenes complete the seventh and eighth episodes of "Ruth of the Rockies" and Miss Roland and her associates are now working on the twelfth chapter.

"Blind Husbands" Scores

In London Debut Picture Is Given Royal Reception, Says Universal

"BLIND HUSBANDS." The first big von Stroheim picture, has been royally received in Great Britain, is the word which has reached the Universal office from George Kann, the Universal export-manager, now in Europe. Only one objection was raised to the feature. Mr. Hussey, one of the leading censors of the English film world, worried over the picture because he thought the British public might be cool towards a photo-play they knew to have been taken in Austria, so recently an enemy country.

The censor was astounded when he was assured that every scene in the big Alpine picture had been filmed in California. His objections vanished in a broad smile.

The initial showing in England was held in the Alhambra—one of the largest theatres in London. A representative audience was present and loudly acclaimed the feature, it is stated. British critics were unanimous in praising the film. "In my view," said one, "it shows an advance in method over 'The Miracle Man,' although its theme is less ambitious. Certainly there has been no more remarkable example of the importance of continuity and timing; not a thought of the characters is missed, and I cannot recall an instance of faulty pace. The principle of developing a theme logically according to its dramatic value and without any regard to film length, is obviously sound. Stroheim's method is remarkably successful."

Another voiced his opinion that Stroheim's originality has achieved something remarkably like a masterpiece. "Blind Husbands" grips," he said. "It creates the illusion of reality as do very few photoplays, save the best of Griffith's; its individual scenes are powerful, 'suspense' value is very marked, and its incidental effects, including photography and back-grounds, are magnificent."

Details of Setting to Be Given Much Care

Great care has been taken at Universal City to assure proper settings and atmosphere for "The Adorable Savage," the latest Universal production, based on Ralph Stock's story of the South Sea Isles, "Marama," in which Edith Roberts appears as a Fiji Island maid.

In the first place, Norman Dawn, her director, had spent a year and a half in the Islands of the South Seas, gathering material for travelogues, and he knew the various islands in the southern waters as well as he knew Los Angeles.

Just about the time she was ready to begin the picture she was visited by her friend, Mrs. Frank Lloyd, wife of a prominent Liverpool marine insurance man, who had just returned with her husband from a trip to the South Seas, where Mr. Lloyd was establishing branches, and she presented the star with many trinkets and ornaments direct from Fiji which Miss Roberts used in making-up.

News Reel Shows Some Earthquake Scenes

What a real earthquake will do is convincingly shown in the International News Reel No. 39, just released through Universal Exchanges in which scenes depicting the severe shake-up that destroyed many homes at Inglewood, Cal., are included. Pictures of the wreckage in the little American city, show in an interesting way, the actual pranks of one of these remarkable convulsions of nature.

Gaudio Behind Camera in Skinner Picture

Antonio Gaudio, one of the best known cameramen in the profession and official photographer for Allan Dwan will handle the camera work for the forthcoming production of "Kismet" in which Otis Skinner will star in the role he created on the stage. The arrangement was made with the full sanction of Producer Dwan who holds a contract with the cameraman and who released him for the filming of this production.

Overland Limited Will Have Picture Show

After three days of planning with railroad officials Marshall Neilan has completed plans whereby his forthcoming production, "Go And Get It," will be projected on the Overland Limited, the train that will carry the majority of the newspaper men and delegates back from the Democratic Convention in San Francisco to New York.

Carpenters and electricians are working day and night, it is stated, in an effort to equip an observation car in such manner that it will be able to take care of the projection. Special electrical apparatus is being installed, according to reports. "Go And Get It" will be presented with the assistance of the Tivoli Quartette especially loaned for the occasion by the Tivoli Opera House of San Francisco, and Professor Marcelli, well known in the Tivoli symphony orchestra, will play a piano score during the showing.

In order to allow all newspapermen and delegates on the train to see the picture it will be necessary to show the picture eight times.

"Life's Twist" Completed

Bessie Barriscale Finishes Picture for Robertson-Cole Release

THE thousands of exhibitors who have cashed in on the many Bessie Barriscale productions, produced by B. B. Features and released through Robertson-Cole, will be pleased to hear that Miss Barriscale's latest picture, "Life's Twist," has been completed and will be ready for release soon.

The appeal of "Life's Twist" will be confined not alone to the followers of Miss Barriscale's art, but to all lovers of the ultra-modern motion picture, which besides having a popular star has also a capital story, heart moving interest, strong suspense element, superior acting and beautiful scenic features.

Miss Barriscale, famed for her captivating delineations of society roles, deviates from her accustomed dramatic path in "Life's Twist" sufficiently to show, through her interpretation of a girl of the slums, that she is equally at home in other roles as well as in her usual ones.

"Life's Twist" was adapted to the screen by Harvey Gates, from the magazine story by Thomas Edgelowe. William Christy Cabanne was the director. Cabanne is not unknown to directorial fame, and the wise exhibitor will profit from his summing up of "Life's Twist." He says:

"Miss Barriscale, in my mind, has achieved the outstanding success of her career in 'Life's Twist,' a story which teems with dramatic situations, amplified to the fullest extent by the exceptional cast of players. 'Life's Twist' is a picture with a 'twist' in every reel capable of remarkable exploitation in the hands of the intelligent exhibitor."

"No. 99" Going Well in Detroit Theatres

Joe Bloom, the W. W. Hodkinson representative for Detroit and Pittsburgh, reports that the Regent theatre and the Ophelim at Detroit have played Robert Bruntton's production, "No. 99," starring J. Warren Kerrigan, for a full week, and realized a capacity business despite the hot weather. As a result the Miles Circuit have contracted for all the Kerrigan pictures released by Hodkinson up to 1921.

In addition, "No. 99" has been booked by Rowland and Clark, Pittsburgh, Pa.; Regent, East Liberty and the Savoy theatre, 5th Ave., on a ten day basis.

Louis Levin Starts on His Tour of Fox Offices

Armed with complete plans of the 1920-1921 season production campaign, Louis Levin, special representative of Fox Film Corporation's sales department, left Sunday for Omaha, Nebraska, the first stop in a six weeks trip that will carry him to ten of the Fox branches in the West and Southwest. The trip is for the purpose of outlining to the managers of the exchanges the plans and policy to be followed during the new year.

Ethel Clayton in New York—Going Abroad

Ethel Clayton, the Paramount star, arrived in New York this week from Hollywood, completing the first stage of a long vacation-journey. Her stay in the city will not be long, however, for she will leave soon for Europe where she will spend several weeks in traveling. Following her tour she will return to London where she will make two, possibly three, productions at the London studios of Famous Players-Lasky British Producers, Ltd. This is Miss Clayton's first visit to New York in more than a year.

"The Husband Hunter" Completed on Coast

Eileen Percy has completed work at the Fox West Coast Studios, on her second production as a William Fox star. This is "The Husband Hunter," based on F. Scott Fitzgerald's story "Myra Meets His Family."

Emory Johnson heads a cast of excellent players supporting Miss Percy, other members being Jane Miller, Harry Dunkinson and Evans Kirk. Some novel effects in lighting have been obtained, and the scenic work is said to be especially fine.

States Booked Solid on Kerrigan's "No. 99"

J. Warren Kerrigan in "No. 99" has been booked solid in West Virginia and Western Pennsylvania until the middle of September, says the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation.

Lesser Release Sought by Business Men

The Sol Lesser organization is now completing distribution plans for "That Something," the inspirational picture, dedicated to the Rotary Clubs of the World, which is being handled by Irving Lesser. The initial plans call for an opening at one of the Broadway houses in New York City for an extended engagement.

Max Roth, general manager for Sol Lesser, is organizing a staff of efficient men, and already contracts have been closed, states the Lesser organization, with some of the largest industrial organizations in New York City.

The picture played a five week engagement at the Victory Theatre in Los Angeles, and in most cases the entire house was taken over by various companies which bought the entire house out for a night for their employees.

"The Decorator" First Aubrey Comedy

"The Decorator" will be the title of the first of Jimmy Aubrey's new comedy series. This was completed on the West Coast last week under the working title of "Camou flage," and was produced by Jess Robbins. It will probably be released by Vitagraph in the early fall.

New Serial Production at Universal City

Another serial is to go into production at Universal City shortly, directed by Edward Kull and starring Eileen Sedgwick. This new thriller is based on "The Diamond Master," the famous Saturday Evening Post story by Jacques Futrell, considered by many critics the most perfect mystery story of a decade.

Charles Urban, president of the Kineto Company of America, Inc., which publishes the "Movie Chats" and the "Kineto Reviews" is in receipt of a communication from the Y. M. C. "We are in the market," he writes, "for high-class educational films."

Mr. Loomis has been advised of the subjects the Kineto Company has available, and the chances are that very shortly the "Movie Chats" and "Kineto Reviews" will be shown in all the educational centers of Hawaii.

A weird story of adventure in Frisco's unsolved and mysterious Chinatown. A love story of thrill and sentiment—an adventure tale of breath-taking suspense. It is Vitagraph's contribution to lovers of modern romance. A superb character portrayal by the screen's most polished actor.

Washburn Sails for Europe

BRYANT WASHBURN, heading his own company as an independent producer, has left New York for England, where he will make his first picture. The former Famous Players star and Mrs. Washburn, who is accompanying him, will be followed in August by the remainder of the company, including Max Parker, technical director, and Eugene Mullen, Washburn's director.

Mr. Washburn has chosen "The Road to London" as the story in which he will make his bow as an independent star. This is a farce comedy from the pen of David Skeets-Foster, and in the screen adaptation of the story, a bit of melodramatic farce will be injected. The cast, with the exception of the star, will be entirely English, and a popular English actress will be engaged to play the leading feminine role. The picture will be taken in the actual scene of the story, and Mr. Washburn hopes also to obtain a studio for the interiors on the other side of the Atlantic.

In telling of his future plans, the star stated that he would make only three or possibly four productions during the year, depending upon the number of suitable stories obtainable. "When you put out ten pictures a year," stated Mr. Washburn, "you are not making motion picture productions. Rather it is a canning factory."

Lee Ochs, who has been associated with the screen star for a number of years, and who will take charge of the business matters of the new company, stated that no arrangements for distribution have been made and no distributor has been even approached on the subject. The picture will be made first, and then distributing organizations will be shown the finished product. "If we make a good picture," said Mr. Ochs, "we expect to be paid for it; and if we make a poor one we will take the consequences."

Mr. Washburn said that his second independent production would probably be a trifle heavier than his previous pictures, and that in time he might turn entirely to drama.

Glady Brockwell in "Sister to Salome," a new Fox production

Suggests a "Stunt" for "Moon Madness"

In its press-book on "Moon Madness," Robertson-Cole suggests the following "stunt": A young man of dark skin, who can speak French and play on the violin, registers at a second-grade hotel. He carries out certain instructions to attract newspaper attention and gain publicity. He tells all inquirers of the story of the desertion of his fiancée, Zora. Zora had been a baby-girl of French parentage adopted by his Arabian parents. They had grown up together. At the great horse-race, following the full-moon, he had won and thus gained the right to choose his wife from the eligibles of the tribe. He had chosen Zora, but just at this juncture a party of French travelers had met the tribe in Tunis. When they departed, Zora was found to have left with them to learn more of her parents. From Arabia he had traced her to Paris, and from Paris to America. He is still intent on locating her.

George Cochrane Not a New-Comer in Trade

George Cochrane, just elected vice-president in charge of production for Sumner Charles Britton, Inc., is no new comer to the screen. He has been making pictures for many years—all the way from two-reel comedies with Christie to five-reel features, and for more than eight years he has been continuously with Universal Film Company.

"Up in Mary's Attic" Song Makes Hit

Advanced sales on the new song sensation "Up In Mary's Attic," which is based on the comedy-drama of the same name now being distributed by Fine Arts Pictures, Inc., through independent exchanges, indicate that it will prove a great success. The song is being published by the Brooker and Conn Music Company, 63 Fifth avenue, the words and music having been

"Week End" Now Ready Is the Last of Cosmo Hamilton's Dramas to Be Put on the Screen

THE New York office of the "Flying A" has just received the first print of the new Cosmo Hamilton drama, the last of the productions of that writer to be put on the screen. When the picture was run at the Pathe exchange for the inspection of representatives in that field E. B. Wright, S. S. Hutchinson's personal representative, was enthusiastic.

Some of the charming out-of-door scenes in "The Week End" might easily have been filmed on some beautiful estate on Long Island, and the camera man got some shots of the star, Margarita Fisher, in bathing suit attire which seemed not only up to the minute, on the warm day selected for the first private showing, but particularly attractive and apropos. "An ideal summer attraction, a seasonable attraction," said Mr. Wright, "both as to the theme and the method of handling it."

A typical Cosmo Hamilton subject is "The Week End" produced, it is stated, at the request of the star herself, who is at her best in a comedy entirely to her taste. The story is of a very modern young miss, bubbling over with youth and high spirits, who finds relief from her conventional home surroundings and the burden of her Mayflower antecedents, through the friendship of a gay young widow. A week end's visit at Hideaway written by Ethel Broaker and Cottage by the sea, a hasty note which explained the sudden departure of the hostess, and the presence of an unexpected guest, a young man ready for a love-at-first-sight affair with his former little schoolmate, start a lively plot. This plot moves on in double quick time, and all the action is crowded into three tense days. The interference of curious neighbors, scandalized parents, and the offer of the respectable shelter of his own fair name by an ambitious young fortune hunter, complicate the situation. But trust Cosmo Hamilton's heroine to use her wits, and in this case he permits her to work out her own salvation entirely to the liking of the audience, while the American director, George L. Cox, seconded the original motion with zest.

"The Green Flame" to Be Issued July 18

Impressed with the enthusiastic reports being received from all over the country from their branch managers, which register a great demand for J. Warren Kerrigan's recent successes: "No. 99," "The Lord Loves the Irish," "$30,000," and "Live Sparks," the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation have decided to put out their latest Kerrigan release, "The Green Flame," on July 18th, at which time prints will be on hand at all Pathe Exchanges.

"Married Life" Scores at Strand Theatre

The nine days wonder of the New York motion picture fraternity last week was the phenomenal success registered by Mack Sennett's new five-reel comedy, "Married Life" at the Strand theatre. Booked in at the eleventh hour—to be exact—just four days before the opening date of this super comedy, its exploitation required a comprehensive campaign in order to let the public know of its coming. Realizing the importance of quick and intelligent action, Mr. Sennett deputized E. M. Asher, his personal representative, to handle the work.

That his judgment was good in this is demonstrated by the fact that Mr. Asher had the "fans" talking "Married Life" within a few days after he started his campaign. Unique and attractive lobby displays were installed, the management of the Strand devoting the entire lobby and all of the countless electric lights to this display. Special advertising for the great New York dailies were planned and executed and publicity stunts and news stories put in circulation.

Fox Cameraman Shoot Races Despite Ban

As an instance of the timely service rendered under difficulties by its News-Reel forces abroad, the William Fox Film Corporation submits a cablegram received from the manager of the Paris office which describes the activities of Fox cameramen operating at the Grand Prix races in Paris against the ban of the Jockey Club. The message reads:

"Scored big beat Grand Prix, taking race from air and ground despite Jockey Club ban on movie cameramen. Airplane forced land on track. Pilot and operator arrested, but soon released. Obtained pictures before arrest. Showed film three theatres three hours after race. Forwarding negatives today."

"The White Moll" Due Soon

Release Set for August; Is First Fox Vehicle for Pearl White

AMONG the earliest of the big William Fox productions listed for the new year is "The White Moll." The fact that author of this story is Frank L. Packard, who wrote "The Miracle Man," would be in itself sufficient to challenge universal interest," says the Fox statement, "but beyond this is the further fact that 'The White Moll' is to be the vehicle for a double first appearance by Pearl White, famous hitherto as a serial star.

"Having abandoned serials, Miss White, in 'The White Moll'—produced as a special—is to make her first appearance in a feature film, and at the same time will make her first appearance as a Fox star. Acute interest is evinced in this as a leading event of the 1920-21 film season. The production is said to be the most elaborate and packed with situations of tremendous dramatic power. Release is promised for August.

"Since Pearl White was signed by William Fox as a star, to make big features, the executive offices of Fox Film Corporation have been flooded with inquiries from exhibitors in all parts of the world seeking information as to when Miss White's first picture would be released. In a majority of cases the queries set forth that the host of admirers of the star in the territories concerned were clamoring for her latest productions.

"In selecting 'The White Moll' for Miss White's first appearance, William Fox was convinced that in this story she has a role far stronger than any she ever before enacted. A number of conservative judges who viewed the picture at private showings were unanimous in declaring it the most thrilling and appealing photodrama of its kind ever made by Fox, and that the performance of Miss White in the title role was a revelation in dramatic power and in that force which rests in emotional suppression as well as expression.

"Following the purchase of the screen rights to Mr. Packard's great story, which enjoyed a record sale as a book as well as an instantaneous success when published in a leading magazine, the Fox company turned the story over to E. Lloyd Sheldon, noted as a dramatist, to put it in shape for the screen.

"In conjunction with Director Harry Millard and A. Island Director Anthony J. Marlo, Mr. Sheldon prepared a scenario that follows faithfully the Packard story, with all its thrills, adventure, sacrifice and romance. Miss White was highly elated over her role after she had read the script.

"With a corps of expert technical men engaged especially to study the types of character and the locations in the picture, every point involved in making the story most effective on the screen was covered.

"The production was made at the Fox studios in the East and many of the sets depicting the underworld life of the big city—where most of the most thrilling incidents of the story are enacted—are the last word in realistic effect.

"Utmost care was observed by Mr. Fox in selecting the supporting cast for Miss White. Richard C. Travers, well known on the stage and screen, was chosen as leading man. J. Thornton Baston, prominently known on the stage but a newcomer to the chief heavy role, was selected to enact the chief heavy role. The remainder of the company includes Eva Gordon, William Harvey, Walter Lewis, Blanche Davenport, Charles Slatter, John Woodford, George Farnsworth and John P. Wade.

"Extensive plans have been perfected by Mr. Fox for a special publicity and advertising campaign to help the exhibition put this initial Pearl White production over big. A new style of press book covering every phase of exploitation has been prepared, and an unusually lavish array of posters, designed with a view toward making the production one of the biggest bookers and money pullers ever put out by Fox Film Corporation."

Joseph LaRose Works Under Riesenfeld

Joseph LaRose's return to the Rivoli, Radio and Criterion theatres as production manager of the three photoplayhouses on Broadway under the direction of Hugo Riesenfeld, has been responsible for much complimentary comment during the first week of his new regime.

LaRose's remarkable sense of living color and his knowledge of atmospheric scenic combinations have made him an important factor in production at the Riesenfeld theatres. Not only can he instantly contrive the proper tones which bring harmony into a stage composition but he also gives expert advice on the synchronization of films and music.

Americanism Taught in "Strangers, Beware!"

He is being assisted in the preparation of the continuity by Julia Burnham.

Mary Beaton, the young Philadelphia society girl, who recently made a successful debut with Metro in pictures, has been selected for the leading woman's role.

Exclusive Views Seen in President Is Regular Fox News "Movie" Fan

The Fox News has obtained exclusive views of the designing and manufacture of the famous Victory Medal. James Earl Frazer, designer, appears in an intimate view, in which he shows the vast amount of work entailed in getting out the sketches from which the medal is struck.

These sketches are turned over to Ferriss Powell Merritt, a member of the American Numismatic Society, who supervises the entire construction and manufacture. Some decidedly novel views are then shown of Mr. Merritt instructing and assisting in the fashioning of the medal.

The White House has its regular motion-picture department to furnish the chief-executive of the United States and his family with choice selections of the screen art. The East Room of the presidential mansion serves as the projection-room during these exhibitions. Charles Plunkett, a local operator, operates the crank. Tom Moore, the well-known exhibitor of the national capital, takes charge of the screening; and Robert E. Long, Moore's Rialto manager, is the gentleman upon whom devolves the duty of selecting the subjects for the entertainments.

Since the president's recovery from his recent illness, the picture-entertainments have become a matter of daily occurrence, it is stated, and every day, except Sunday, usually about 11 A. M., the president goes to the "movies" in the East Room. The best that the various companies turn out are served for the president's pleasure during his "movie" hour.

It is said to be a snappy, whirling story, full of "pep" and rapid action and with an unusual amount of the daring stunts for which Mix is noted. Thrill follows thrill in rapid succession, from the beginning to the last foot.

General Manager Dan Barton states that the rapid growth of the business has warranted the placing of a man of Mr. Comstock's ability in charge of this department.

The Bartola Company since its beginning, has trained players and placed them with purchasers of its instruments and this service feature has been one of the causes of the steady growth of the Bartola Musical Instrument Company. The facilities for handling players now have been enlarged and Mr. Barton announces that under the guidance of Mr. Comstock, the Bartola Company will be in a position to furnish a player service that will be unexcelled. At the same time the policy of making no charge for instruction or for placing players with exhibitors will be continued.

Mr. Comstock has had valuable experience as a moving picture organist in Sid Grauman's theatres in California as well as other leading theatres throughout the country and is well known as a composer and teacher. He has for sometime made a particular study of motion picture music and has specialized in teaching up-to-date musical instrument methods as applied to motion pictures.

"Going Some" Is Available

Goldwyn Announces the Immediate Release on Rex Beach's Comedy

"GOING SOME," the photoplay adaptation of Rex Beach's comedy, will be distributed immediately to exhibitors through the twenty-two Goldwyn exchanges, according to an announcement received from Goldwyn Pictures Corporation. Those who have seen the theatrical version of Mr. Beach's story are assured by the producers that the picture not only retains every original comic situation, but adds several touches that were impossible of presentation on the stage, owing to the limitation of stage technique.

"Speed," the vocal athlete of a famous university, who is compelled to make good his boast of being the fastest foot-racer in America, is played by Cullen Landis, who has made a reputation for himself in several former Rex Beach pictures. His trainer is portrayed by Willard Louis, whose expressive eyebrows and forty eight inch waist line are the sources of many laughs, it is stated. Ethel Grey Terry, Helen Ferguson, Lillian Hall and Lillian Langdon supply beauty to the picture as well as the reason for all the efforts and trouble of Speed and his trainer, while such experienced actors as Kenneth Harlan, Walter Hiers, Maurice B. Flynn, Frank Braidwood and Nelson McDowell furnish the tragic-comedy which keeps "Going Some" going a breakneck speed.

Mr. Beach, as president of Eminent Authors, has taken an active part in writing the scenario and conferring with the directorial staff in bringing out the humor of the situations. "Going Some" is in six reels. It was directed by Harry Beaumont. The man behind the camera was N. Brodin.

Plunkett Will Exploit Charles Ray Picture

Joe Plunkett, manager of New York's Strand theatre announces that he has already made plans for an elaborate presentation and exploitation of Charles Ray's initial First National offering "Forty-five Minutes From Broadway," to be featured during the run of the film at this Broadway playhouse. Although this production, the first in which Ray is being presented by Arthur S. Kane, is not quite completed, Manager Plunkett is said to be looking forward to Ray's first independent film as the most important film offering of the Fall season.

According to Manager Plunkett, the Ray adaptation of George M. Cohan's comedy drama will be distinctive for the sentiment that attaches to it through its association with the days of a decade or two ago, easily within memory of audiences of to-day and tenderly treasured as a particularly bright period of Broadway history.

Shriners Crowd Portland Theatres

Exhibitors in Portland, Ore., took advantage of the thousands who attended the Shriners' Convention in that city recently to fill their houses many times a day, and two theatres, the Circle and the Hellig, were kept open from 9 o'clock in the morning to 4 a.m. to satisfy the demands of the visitors.

Pictures shown at some of the larger theatres were "Treasure Island," "Paris Green," "The Conqueror," "Why Change Your Wife?" and "Excuse My Dust."

Moreno on "Location" in Truckee Region

Antonio Moreno left this week for Truckee, California, with his entire supporting company, to spend three weeks in the mountain country filming scenes for the eighth episode of his new Vitagraph serial, "The Veiled Mystery." This serial is progressing steadily under the direction of William J. Bowman, and will be completed well in advance of the release date, which will probably be sometime in the early fall.

Big Drive for "Mystery Mind"

FULL capitalization will be made of the name of Arthur B. Reeve, creator of "Craig Kennedy" and author of scores of noted detective stories, in the exploitation of "The Mystery Mind," the serial produced by Mr. Reeve and John W. Grey for Supreme Pictures, Inc., which has been taken over by Educational Films Corporation.

Tentative plans have been made for the release of the first of the fifteen episodes through the Educational exchanges in the United States and Canada during the week of September 6th. All of the branch managers have been advised of the acquisition of "The Mystery Mind," and the full selling force will be ready to start a determined drive.

Arrangements have been completed for the publication of the story by Mr. Reeve in six generous installments in "Detective Story Magazine," a Street and Smith publication with a circulation of about 300,000. The magazine itself will give the story the advertising that the name of Mr. Reeve merits, the express permission of his publishers having been obtained in this specific instance.

Shortly after the start of the story in the Detective Story Magazine the entire novel will be published in a popular edition by Grosset and Dunlap, the volume being illustrated with a number of scenes from the various episodes. Arrangements have been made to have booksellers all over the country devote special window displays to the book, this following closely on the news stand advertisements of the magazine story.

In order to encourage the bookseller to be more generous in such displays, Grosset and Dunlap have obtained from Harper and Brothers the right to publish several volumes of the "Craig Kennedy" stories in the popular editions and these will be ready at the same time, so that the local dealer will himself derive benefits from cooperating with the exhibitors. Details of the plan will be sent to both the exchanges and to exhibitors.

Following this there will be a third avenue for publicity through a well known syndicate which will handle the story for daily newspaper use, states Educational.

Name of Arthur Reeve to Be Feature of Exploitation Campaign

Still another large volume of newspaper and magazine publicity is promised the exhibitor through articles on hypnotism. J. Robert Pauline, who is featured in "The Mystery Mind," is probably known to a greater public than any other hypnotist through his thousands of stage appearances, and it is expected that articles telling his experiences will attract unusual attention. Hypnotism enters in a great degree into the story, regarded as unusually timely on account of the present interest in the occult and psychic.

"We believe," says Educational, "that the exhibitor will welcome the opportunity to take advantage of legitimate exploitation with 'The Mystery Mind.' We intend to afford him a cooperation that is in keeping with the slogan, 'the aristocrat of serials.' He has had to depend for a long time on 'hookum'; he will not have to do it here. Better stated, he will have this invaluable, unpurchasable selling cooperation in addition to all the other aids that he has ever had before."

"It is unnecessary for us to call attention to the fact that Arthur B. Reeve is one of the best known of living authors. There are few who have not read at least some of his 'Craig Kennedy' stories. There is hardly a home library that does not contain one of his volumes. Pick up the magazines today and you will find advertisements of sets of his books staring you in the face. He will novelize 'The Mystery Mind' and it will appear in 'Detective Story Magazine,' in book form and in newspapers."

"Exhibitors, especially those outside of New York City, know that every patron is familiar with the name of Pauline, the hypnotist who has appeared on practically every stage. His very name will afford a vast clientele at the start and the articles on hypnotism are bound to arouse the greatest amount of interest. Incidentally, they afford the exhibitor an opportunity to use 'back angles' in their exploitation. We will offer a class of publicity that will attract the fullest attention without resorting to the hally-hoo form of advertising."

Big Movement Flourishing

Exhibitor Support of Independent Productions Increasing Is Report

THE W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, in a statement just issued, declares that its representatives report a nation-wide interest in the movement of exhibitors to support independent productions and that the Hodkinson releases have come in for an unusual share of attention in the spread of the movement. Following is the Hodkinson statement just issued from the headquarters of that organization.

"James Clemmer, of Seattle, Wash., who runs the Clemmer Theatre, advises the Hodkinson representative that he will co-operate with that organization on all the features they release, that he is very well satisfied with the photoplays he has used and has made good money on all of them. Mr. Clemmer says that Hodkinson has an extra good list of productions."

"Sol Harris of Little Rock, Ark., owns the Gem, Crystal, and several other theatres, and gives his hearty support to the independent productions released through Hodkinson.

"From Latrobe, Pa., Mr. Natobols of the Paramount theatre, sends word that Hodkinson has one of the best selections of film on the market today; that he has booked every feature that Hodkinson has released and will continue to do so.

"Jim Velis of West Virginia lends his support to the Hodkinson policies, by agreeing to figure with Hodkinson on all releases for the coming season.

"Mr. Watts of the Gayety theatre, Springfield, Ill., is counting on Hodkinson features, and the manager of the Majestic theatre, Jackson, Ill., expresses his satisfaction with Hodkinson features, which he has always found extra good.

"Mr. Eland of the Myles Theatre Circuit, Detroit, considered Hodkinson's service most consistent and satisfactory, according to word received from Joe Bloom, the Hodkinson special representative."

"La La Lucille" Ready Soon

Famous Musical Comedy to Be Released by Universal on July 28

"LA LA LUCILLE," which had an eighteen months run on Broadway as a musical comedy, will be released by Universal as a screen production July 26th. The picture closely follows the play and is from the pen of Fred Jackson, author of "A Full House," "The Naughty Wife," "The Hole in the Wall," and many other successful plays and stories. Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran are starred in the production, assisted by Anne Cornwall who plays the lead opposite Eddie Lyons and Gladys Walton who appears as the bride of Lee Moran.

On the stage "La La Lucille" was a riot of laughter, in spite of the fact that many of the funniest incidents happened behind the scenes and were merely mentioned by the players. In the photodrama every amusing occurrence and situation is shown, resulting in much added merriment.

One of the most elaborate sequences of sets ever constructed for a screen production are those which show the various parts of the old Knickerbocker Hotel used in "La La Lucille." The huge lobby of the hotel was reproduced upon one of the stages at Universal City, with not a detail missing. The desk, the key racks, the elevators, the cigar stand, and the revolving doors were all faithfully duplicated. Other parts of the hotel, including the ladies' rooms, the waiting rooms, the parlors, the writing rooms, the corridors, the rooms and bridal suites form settings for the hilarious action of the picture.

Others in the strong cast are Rosa Gore, Fred Gamble, Henry Meyers, Dorothy Wolbert, Sam Appel, Charles McHugh, Burton Halbert, Arthur Thalasso and Frank Earle.

Metro Pictures at Two Baltimore Theatres

Double representation for two successive weeks at Baltimore's first-run motion picture houses, both in the downtown and in the residential sections, is the record set by Metro productions recently. "Shore Acres" appeared at the New theatre, the downtown film-temple and at the same time Viola Dana in "Dangerous to Men," ran to crowded houses in the Parkway.

Hulbert Footner on Coast

Author of Popular Northwestern Stories Will Study Film Craft

HULBERT FOOTNER, whose stories of the Canadian Northwest have attained more than national fame for him, is the first of Metro's long list of recently acquired writers to reach the company's West Coast studios in Hollywood. He reached Los Angeles last Saturday morning and immediately took up his residence in Hollywood, where he will remain during the term of his contract with the producing company.

The author and playwright announced that he intended to study the production end of pictures from the moment the story leaves the typewriter until it is unfolded in film form for the theatre-goer.

"I know absolutely nothing about pictures except such knowledge as is possessed by the average theatre-goer," said Mr. Footner, "but I never was more interested in any subject and I am not going to leave Hollywood until I have learned the ABC of films."

Mr. Footner is the author of "Two on the Trail," "The Sealed Valley," "Jack Chantey," "The Fugitive Sleuth," "The Fur Bringers," "Thieves' Wit" and "The Substitute Millionaire." He is known to theatre-goers largely because of his story of "Shirley Kaye," a comedy in which Elsie Ferguson starred in 1916-17.

Mr. Footner obtained material for his picturesque stories of the Canadian Northwest during several long journeys through Northwestern Alberta and the wilds of the Canadian Rockies. Incidentally, he explored and described the least known stream in North America—the Hay River. He brought back the first photographs of Alexander Falls, a great cataract north of the sixtieth parallel.

His Metro pictures, of which he will write at least four a year, probably will be stories of love and adventure in the city. His services exclusively have been obtained by Metro during the life of his contract.

He is one of the old timers of the business, and there are few men who have assisted at more initial projections of great motion-picture plays. From the earliest days of the industry he has been asked to insure the success of the first showing of these plays by drawing upon that fund of practical knowledge which he has accumulated in his long career in the motion-picture industry.

Paramount Week Opens Sept. 5

FOLLOWING a practice inaugurated two years ago, Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has announced that the week beginning September 5, 1920, will be observed as the Annual National Paramount Week. The details of the campaign to be undertaken during the week appointed are submitted in the statement which has just been issued from the headquarters of that organization. The statement follows:

"The week of September 5, 1920, has been designated by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation as the Third Annual National Paramount Week. In making the preliminary announcement of the event, Al Lichtman, general manager, department of distribution, in a letter which has gone to all exchange managers and all department heads connected with the Paramount sales organization, sets forth the principal purposes of Paramount Week as follows:

"I. To spread broadcast the message of Paramount; II. To get the greatest number of people to see Paramount pictures during that week; III. To help the exhibitor open the new season of his theatre in the most auspicious manner.

"National Paramount Week was inaugurated in September, 1918, the germ of the idea having originated in the New York National Exchange which conducted a local campaign along similar lines in the theatres of Greater New York. So successful was the first National Week that it was repeated last year with most gratifying results and became established as an annual event. Last year the sales for the week approached the million dollar mark, and it is determined by the entire organization this year to put the total over a million.

Exchange Forces Will Push Big Campaign During Week

Thomas H. Ince's favorite juvenile stars Douglas MacLean and Boris May, whose latest Paramount vehicle is "Let's Be Fashionable."

"The details of the campaign have nearly all been completed and involve a program of newspaper, trade paper and National advertising which will be practically double that of last year. There will not be a town of any importance in the United States that will not have the Paramount message and that of Paramount exhibitors spread before its people in a manner calculated to make certain a record-breaking attendance throughout the week at all theatres participating.

"Within two weeks all the Paramount exchanges will have received the posters which will herald the event week in advance, and by the same time all of the newspaper advertising cuts to be used in the advance newspaper campaign will have been distributed to the Branch offices. In addition, a special eight-page edition of the Paramount "Money Sheet," containing a brief description of every picture, past release as well as new ones and short subjects as well as features, that will be available, will be distributed to exhibitors.

"The establishment of the Expedition Department during the past year makes the full strength of the big and efficient organization with its representative in every Exchange, available as an added force in urging exhibitors to obtain the maximum return for their co-operation. Exploitation Manager Saunders has already perfected big plans for his field force which involve a number of new stunts which have never before been used, and his men are now making arrangements whereby practically every town in that respective territory will be introduced to some novelty in the way of effective showmanship.

"The final details of the local exchange campaign are now being worked out by Jerome Blatts, Director of Publicity and Advertising, and will be announced shortly. The supplementary trade paper campaign will start early this month and the Paramount salesmen have been assured that they will have the strongest kind of backing through the medium.

"The scale quotas for the various Exchanges have been prepared and Mr. Lichtman announces that substantial cash prizes will be awarded to the three exchanges that obtain the greatest results for the week."

Terriss on Second of Series

Is Described as Story with Striking Situations; Good Cast

NOW that he has finished the direction of the first Tom Terriss special production, "Trumpet Island," Mr. Terriss is beginning work, it is announced this week, on the second of this special series: "Dead Men Tell No Tales." The original story, by E. W. Hornung, author of "Raffles," was edited and prepared for the screen by Mr. and Mrs. George Randolph Chester.

"For 'Dead Men Tell No Tales' Mr. Terriss has assembled a cast of extraordinary merit and power," says Vitaphone. "It is headed by Catherine Calvert, who will have the leading feminine role, and Gustav Von Seyffertitz, Holmes E. Herbert and Percy Marmont, who will portray the principal male characters. Others who will be prominent in the cast are James C. Spotswood, Roy Applegate and William James.

"Mr. Terriss was particularly fortunate in securing the services of Catherine Calvert, who is the perfect type described by the author in his story. Since she left the spoken stage for the silent drama Miss Calvert has been more than ever in demand and it was only through a realization of the magnitude of the special production that she consented to change arrangements made and accept the part.

"Mr. Von Seyffertitz and Mr.

Marmont have both appeared prominently in many Vitaphone productions as leading men for either Alice Joyce or Corinne Griffith, and Mr. Herbert began his professional career as a performer on the legitimate stage where he became leading man for Billie Burke, Grace George, Blanche Bates, Ethel Barrymore and Lisa Ferguson, and has been equally successful before the camera.

"One of the early scenes of the picture will be the burning of a passenger ship at sea, brought about by plotters to cover the theft of a large shipment of Australian gold for England. The means taken to insure the death of all on board, with the exception of the plotters and Eva, daughter of the chief criminal, are as ingenious as they are fiendish. Vitaphone is prepared to spend any amount of money that may be necessary to make every scene as big and impressive and realistic as possible.

Other scenes at sea show a deadly fight on the deck of another vessel, in which one of the criminals and his supporters proceed again upon the theory that 'dead men tell no tales.' The hero escapes from a sinking lifeboat in the midst of a school of sharks.

"Succeeding scenes show the Lady Jermyn at sea. There are dances in the saloon, and muscades at which Hawaiian and Hawaiian farewell song, while below, in the hold, the plotters prepare to set the ship afire after transferring the boxes of gold to the captain's pig.

"The plotters here hide in the bottom of one lifeboat and cut the ropes holding another nearby through, causing the death of all persons seeking safety in either.

"When the fire is discovered, Captain Harris forces all the passengers, and all the sailors except two, into the two lifeboats, driving them away from the pig in which the gold has been placed. From this tense situation the action carries the principal characters through a series of extraordinary and thrilling adventures to a happy ending."

Wm. Fox's Releases for July

Tom Mix, Gladys Brockwell and Buck Jones Seen in Stellar Roles

FOX FILM CORPORATION has ten pictures scheduled for release in July. "3 Gold Coins," with Tom Mix will go to the exhibitors early in the month. This picture is swift in action and contains some exceptionally fine riding and roping feats, according to Fox Film Corporation. The romance joins the East and West. Mix plays the part of a westerner with a big piece of property and no money.

Gladys Brockwell stars in "A Sister to Salome," another July release. This is said to be one of the most powerful stories in which this emotional star has appeared, and it furnishes her with a dual role which spans the centuries from the New York of today to the Rome of the ancients. Miss Brockwell has a big task to perform in this picture.

Buck Jones appears in the month's list with a fighting play called "The Square Shooter." All through the play Buck protects a girl from the devilish plotting of an evil-minded suitor. All through it, Buck fights and shoots his way, and does some astonishing riding and thrilling stunts that win the girl, says the Fox report.

Another release is Madeline

Traverse in "The Spirit of Good." Passions good and evil play one against the other in "The Spirit of Good." The settings are Western, and the story is declared to be gripping to the end.

Four Fox Sunshine Comedies will be released in July. The first to be put out will be "Through the Keyhole," which is a tale of two detectives who prove themselves very defective in their line. W. Friedmann with Mr. A. H. Hare as his assistant.

Mr. Leo Dwyer has not yet announced his future plans, but it is assumed that he will devote much of his time to the distributing and marketing of the Cosmograph, a portable projector for which Mr. Dwyer has recently acquired national rights.

Special Press Book Issued

Robertson-Cole Aids Exhibitor Exploit New Hayakawa Picture

FOR exploitation of "Li Tung Lang," which has just been released by Robertson-Cole, this distributing company has prepared the most elaborate press book which ever accompanied a Sessia Hayakawa production. This release, which was produced at the Hayworth Studio, was directed by Charles Swickard.

The press book is an example of the complete and comprehensive service which Robertson-Cole is extending to exhibitors who book its pictures, giving them not only the necessary material for the advertisement of a picture, but all sorts of ideas upon which the exhibitor may base an aggressive exploitation campaign. The picture, "Li Tung Lang," is based on a magazine story by Howard P. Rockey, and tells a story of a Chinaman of noble birth, educated at an American university, who, falls in love with an American society girl, and later has thrilling adventures with her in China.

The press book includes an eight page newspaper publicity section, which was prepared by expert news writers with a view to suiting the needs of newspapers of all sorts and sizes. It contains advance notices, opening day notices, reviews, and features, besides numerous newspaper cuts. A leading page is devoted to "What You'll See in 'Li Tung Lang,'" describing the dramatic scenes as well as the picturesque background of China which is provided in an elaborate way.

A four page section of this campaign book is used to advertise past Hayakawa productions. It is led by a selling talk by A. S. Kirkpatrick, vice president and general manager of the Robertson-Cole Distributing Corporation. After which are listed such Hayakawa pictures as: "The Devil's Claim," "The Brand of Lopez," "The Beggar Prince," "The Tong Man," "The Illustrious Prince," "The Dragon Painter" and others.

"Married Life" Receives Many Bookings

Following in the trail of the exploitation blazed by the New York School and the late E. M. Asher, "Married Life," Mack Sennett's mutual spirit feature production to be distributed by Associated First National Pictures, Inc. is enjoying an unusually successful showing throughout the United States according to reports being received daily.

A flood of nationwide publicity has heralded "Married Life" in view of the fact that Harry M. Gauthier, formerly American Ambassador to Turkey and at present the American representative in Mexico, selected this feature to entertain 4,000 New York children attending Public School Number 14, on the occasion of the fiftieth anniversary of his graduation from the New York public schools.

E. Lloyd Sheldon Back with New Scenics

Mr. E. Lloyd Sheldon returned this week from India, Malaya, China and Japan, where he has been for the past eight months making one and two reel pictures for International Film Corporation. He brought back with him more than 4,000 feet of selected negative, and this will be edited and titled by Mr. Sheldon here. During his stay in the Far East Mr. Sheldon was able to record for the screen scenes after scenes that never before have been visited by a camera man, it is stated.

Report Heavy Bookings on "Passers By"

Following its week's run at the Capitol theatre, New York, where it met with unanimous approval of the metropolitan press, Stuart Blackton's "Passers By," released by Pathé, has been booked by the foremost theatres in every section of the country. Bookings on this picture from high class theatres have thus far surpassed those recorded on any other Blackton picture, and indicate that "Passers By" is Mr. Blackton's biggest winner in addition to being one of Pathé's supreme successes.

"Humoresque" Going Big

Many See Picture Again and Again,
Is Report; All Records Are Broken

"HUMORESQUE," a Cosmopolitan Productions' wonderful photoplay of mother love, entered the sixth week of its indefinite pre-release engagement at the Criterion theatre, New York, on Sunday. It will be released throughout the country by Paramount in September. This great picture, adapted from the Cosmopolitan Magazine story by Fannie Hurst has broken all records at the Criterion theatre despite the fact that most of its run has been during sultry weather. There is every indication that, before it leaves that house, it will have broken the record of "The Birth of a Nation," which has never been equalled in the number of performances in one theatre.

During its present engagement at the Criterion "Humoresque" has also broken the record of the house for total gross receipts; for a single week's receipts; for a single day's receipts; for a Saturday's receipts; for a Sunday's receipts and for the total number of paid admissions.

"I honestly believe," declared Hugo Reisenfeld, director of the Criterion, "that 'Humoresque' could run at this theatre for a year or more, or as long as the producers would allow it to remain. It is now receiving the benefit of the month-to-month contract, and that, in itself, would be sufficient to fill the theatre for a year.

"One of the most remarkable things in connection with 'Humoresque' is the number of persons who come to see it time after time. There cannot, of course, be any doubt of a picture's greatness when people will pay to see it half a dozen or more times."

Mr. Reisenfeld pulled from his pocket a letter he had just received from Harry Gott, manager of Galia's theatre, one of the leading motion picture houses on the East Side. Mr. Gott wrote:

"I must write these few lines to tell you how much I enjoyed 'Humoresque' which I have already seen six times, and which I can see again and again. I assure it is the best picture ever produced and one which everyone must see."

S. Jay Kaufman well-known dramatic critic, first-nighter and columnist of the New York Globe, admits to having seen it ten times. Several times Mr. Kaufman has sung the praises of "Humoresque" in his column in the Globe.

Nulty Safe, Sound and Hearty

Almost a daily task for Victor A. Nulty with National Film Corporation of America at their Hollywood studios is the answering of mail advising friends and former business associates that he is still among the living. In July Motion Picture News carried the story of Nulty's reported death at Chateau Thierry which report was occasioned by an incorrect statement from the war department. Following the engagement Nulty was in hospitals in France for several months, then returned to America where he recovered his health. Prior to the war Mr. Nulty was with the Kessell Bowman film interest.

Metro Lining Up Big Casts

Announces Assignments to Casts of Coming Productions

IN a series of statements just issued from the headquarters of the Metro Pictures Corporation, recent assignments to leading roles in the various productions now under way at the Metro studios are announced. The news of these assignments is conveyed in the following paragraphs from the Metro reports.

"Announcement has just been made by Bayard Veiller, chief of productions at Metro's west coast studios in Hollywood, that Edmund Lowe will be brought from New York City to California to play in the all-star production of 'Someone in the House,' by Larry Evans. He will leave for Hollywood immediately.

"Mr. Lowe is well known to theatregoers throughout the country, having appeared in a number of Oliver Morosco's most successful plays. While leading man in the stock company at the Morosco theatre in Los Angeles, he became one of the popular matinee idols of the west coast.

"Smart Holmes, all-around villain and home-wrecker de luxe of the silver-sheet, has been engaged by Metro to portray one of the important roles in 'Body and Soul,' a melodrama written by William Hurlbut and presented on the stage under the same name Hayden Talbot, playwright and author, arranged the film version in which Alice Lake is to be featured at the head of an all-star cast.

"Mr. Holmes needs no introduction to patrons of motion pictures, since his is readily recognized as the screen's genuine 'badman.' Before entering pictures, he enjoyed a very successful stage career, playing in Henry E. Dixey's production, 'Mary Jane's Pa,' among other important engagements.

"Thomas W. Ross, creator of 'Checkers' on the stage, who is now completing his first motion-picture with Metro as Jim Callendar, the London bouncer in the sensational melodrama, 'The Marriages of Mayfair,' by Cecil Raleigh, has been engaged to play Dick Meade, the newspaper man, in the forthcoming Metro production of 'Fine Feathers,' a screen version of Eugene Walter's drama. Dick Meade is the role created on the stage by Max Figman and in it Mr. Figman scored one of the biggest personal successes in an all-star cast.

"Florence Turner, one of the most widely known stars in motion-pictures, has been engaged to support Viola Dana in her next starring vehicle, 'Blackmail,' which is being pictured from the magazine story written by Lucia Chamberlain, at Metro's west coast studios in Hollywood, Calif.

"For more than thirteen years Miss Turner has acted before the camera, being among the first of the footlight luminaries to desert the legitimate."

"Eugene Pallette, who recently completed his work as a featured player in the all-star cast of 'Parlor, Bedroom and Bath,' has arrived in New York from the Pacific coast to play the role of Bob Reynolds in Metro's forthcoming all-star production of 'Fine Feathers,' by Eugene Walter.

"Robert Edson created the part of Bob Reynolds in the stage production of the Walter play several seasons ago, and it is a curious fact that Mr. Pallette is a double in appearance for that actor both in figure and features. This resemblance is so marked that Mr. Pallette has many times been reminded of it by friends and acquaintances."

"Ruth Stonehouse and John E. Elliott have been selected as members of the exceptional cast supporting May Allison in 'Are All Men Alike,' her next Metro starring vehicle following 'Held in Trust.' The new picture has just been put in production at Metro's west coast studios in Hollywood under the direction of Philip E. Rosen.

"Miss Stonehouse has been with Metro for the past eight months. She was featured with Eugene Pallette in 'Parlor, Bedroom and Bath,' and had one of the leading roles in 'The Hope.'

"Mr. Elliott will have the part of Uncle Chandler, who has a trying time keeping track of his niece 'Teddy,' the role Miss Allison will assume. Mr. Elliott played, with Miss Allison in 'Held in Trust,' just completed. He has been in motion pictures for two years, following an experience of twenty-five years on the speaking stage."

"The End—Hardest to Write"

WORKING out the ending of a story is the hardest part of scenario construction."

This statement was made by Cecil B. DeMille in a recent interview at the Lasky studio. Having been the guiding genius behind nearly two-score "endings" of every possible variety, he is well qualified to speak.

"Beginning a story is frequently difficult; developing a theme takes hard work and plenty of it. But ending a story is a task which racks the brains of the scenario writer and the director to within an inch of the breaking point."

That's Mr. DeMille's version of the difficulty attached to bringing to a logical conclusion the threads of a story.

"Endings, like beginnings, and middles, must be logical," says the producing genius. "Sound psychology is the basis of every successful story, whether that story is in novel form, in stage or screen drama. The characters must be real and they must do real things."

"There was a time, not so many years ago, when every screen story was thought to require a 'happy' ending. Unless the lovers fell into a loving clench at the end, that picture was doomed to failure, or so said the people who claimed to be authorities."

"Now such things happen in real life many times. But, on the contrary, so do other 'endings.' Unfortunately, romances do not always grow to a successful culmination. In real life, things have a way of working out in a different fashion. "Just because it seems that a certain conclusion would be 'sweet' in the school girl sense of the word, does not make that conclusion the logical one for a story. Yet for long years, the producers continued to place nummy-pammy endings on otherwise wrong stories."

"I have always believed and tried to practice the doctrine of the right ending for the individual story. If the situation will permit of a happy ending, well and good. Use it. If the conclusion which the same situation would come to in real life is tragic, then by all means give the screen story a tragic ending."

"In this respect, it may not be amiss to point out that tragic endings may frequently be softened so that the audience is saved from a purely disagreeable aftermath. But this softening influence must never be sufficiently strong to take away the keen edge of the tragedy—if tragedy is the logical result. Real-life tragedies are poignantly bitter; the screen can do no less than mirror life.

"And so it is that the ending causes the screen dramatist endless trouble. We develop a story through all of the successive stages up to the conclusion. And then we get caught in the bog of difficulties."

"Advocates of the old-school ending criticised me severely for bringing 'Male and Female' to the conclusion that I used. Many of these people maintained that the butler and the lady should have been allowed to carry their romance on after they returned to the conventional surroundings of English society."

"But such an ending was neither logical nor real. It would not have happened in real life. I showed—by inserting a sort of sub-theme—how a marriage of this sort was certain to result in unhappiness, as it undoubtedly would in real English life."

"Instead, I brought the butler to a realization of the fine and beautiful character of the little servant girl who adored him. He married her and both of them were happy—as they would have been in real life."

"But that ending was not easily arrived at. True, in that case I had Sir James M. Barrie's original story to follow. But the subtle building for that conclusion required thought and labor."

Tom Mix Starts Work on "The Texan"

Tom Mix, the William Fox cowboy star, having completed "The Untamed," by Max Brand enjoyed a short rest, and then started making exteriors of "The Texan" at Prescott, Arizona.

"The Texan" is described as a strong, virile story of the big outdoors, from the pen of James B. Hendrix. Horsemanship, gun-play, sensational rescue scenes are but a part of this picture, which is crowded with rapid action from the beginning to the last foot, says Fox.

The director, Lynn Reynolds, has surrounded his star with a cast, which includes Robert Walker, Charles K. French and Sid Jordan. Playing opposite the star is Gloria Hope.

Plane Carries Print to Reno from Frisco

Shipping a print of the picture from San Francisco to Reno, Nev., by mail June 14 lifted "Shore Acres," a Metro production, some two and a half miles above sea level and brought receipts for the three days' run at the Majestic theatre, Reno, where the picture was shown, to more than a high-water mark. According to the Metro statement, this is the first time an airplane has been used to convey a print from a San Francisco exchange.

"High and Dizzy" Will Be Released July 11th

Harold Lloyd in the first of his new series of special comedies, "High and Dizzy," heads the Pathe release schedule for the week beginning July 11. Announcement is made that even before release date almost every leading theatre in the country has contracted for the picture. In practically every exchange centre, and in all the key cities, the best houses have been in competition to be first in presenting the new Lloyd comedy, and in several instances more than one theatre in each of those cities will show "High and Dizzy" on the initial day of its release. In New York City it will be presented at the Capitol and Strand theatres.

Glowing Reports on Feature

GLOWING reports continued to arrive, it is stated, at the offices of the United Artists Corporation this week, from the various branch managers of the organization throughout the country regarding the showings which is being made by "The Mollycoddle," Douglas Fairbanks' latest "Big Four" production.

According to Hiram Abrams, president of United Artists Corporation, "Doug's" present release is proving to be one of the most popular pictures of the year despite the fact that it was given to the public when the entire nation was in the grip of a hot spell.

Philadelphia furnished one of the best examples of the possibilities for theatre operation during the hot weather when "The Mollycoddle" was played at the Metropolitan Opera House. The week this production occupied the boards found the mercury high up the scale but despite this the Fairbanks picture is reported to have broken all records for the house.

Boston was also enthusiastic over "The Mollycoddle," and two hot weeks in the "Hub City" packed the Majestic Theatre at every showing. One of the amazing happenings here proved to be the matinee attendances every day which resulted in capacity business, it is declared.

Continuing on through the middle west, "The Mollycoddle" is playing far ahead of any previous summer business and in many instances established new box office records, which have been of long standing and which were recorded under ideal picture weather conditions.

On the Pacific Coast "The Mollycoddle" is reported to be scoring also. In Los Angeles, at Grauman's Rialto Theatre, the Fairbanks offering is on for an indefinite run and now in its second week is daily turning away crowds of theatre-goers.

From San Francisco up through Portland, Seattle, Spokane and the entire Northwest "the Mollycoddle" is being received with the same character of enthusiasm as that which has preceded its release in other cities throughout the country.

"The Mollycoddle" was originally planned for release late in April but due to two injuries to Fairbanks during the making of some of the more thrilling scenes the production could not be released on schedule.

When it finally became known to Mr. Abrams that "The Mollycoddle" would be ready not before the middle of June he waited patiently for the arrival of the first print and after one inspection announced an immediate release of the picture.

"It didn't require any debating as to the advisability of releasing 'The Mollycoddle' during the summer or holding it for the fall," said Mr. Abrams. "One look was enough to satisfy that the production was the best ever turned out by Doug and in my opinion one of the best pictures of the year by anyone. Pictures of such a character can be released in any kind of weather and shown to any kind of an audience with success. The returns thus far received are enough and speak for themselves."

Not alone have the public and the exhibitors throughout the nation placed the stamp of approval on "The Mollycoddle" but likewise the press. Among all of the critics and even down to the most fastidious nothing but words of approval and expressions of entire satisfaction have been spoken and written. "The Mollycoddle" is Fairbanks' largest production and also his most expensive. It cost close to a half million dollars to make, states United Artists' Director Fleming is being complimented on his work in connection with "The Mollycoddle," as is Tom Geraghty who prepared the scenario from the story by Harold MacGrath. Others in the cast are Ruth Renick, who played her first leading role in the production, Wallace Beery, Paul Burns, Adèle Farrington, Lewis Hippe, Betty Bouton, George Stewart, Albert MacQuarrie, and Charles Stevens.

Dwan's Latest Is Titled "The Sins of Martha Queed" Now Being Edited for First National

IN a wire to Benjamin A. Prager, president of the Mayflower Photoplay Corporation, Allan Dwan states that his sixth independent production to be presented by Mayflower through First National will be known as "The Sin of Martha Queed." Dwan is now editing his new production, actual camera work having been completed last week.

"The Sin of Martha Queed" is an original story written by Producer Dwan. The idea upon which the story is based was formulated by the producer several years ago. Owing to the exceptionally harsh mounting required for the proper development of the story, he has held it in abeyance until afforded an opportunity to produce it on a scale commensurate with the importance of its subject matter.

"Mayflower" policy whereby directors are given carte blanche in all matters pertaining to their productions," said Benjamin A. Prager, president of the Mayflower Photoplay Corporation, referring to Dwan's decision to present "The Sin of Martha Queed" under the Mayflower banner, "gave the producer the opportunity he had been looking for. That he has taken full advantage of it in producing his story on a scale of unusual elaborateness and a maximum of dramatic power is the consensus of opinion among those who have seen the completed production. I feel that Mayflower is not oversteering the hands of destiny when it says that "The Sin of Martha Queed" is not only a story that it is, an idea, a vital thought that it is engaging the attention of the world's foremost thinkers."

The cast man hailed by Producer Dwan for his sixth independent production includes many of the screen's most prominent players. The principal feminine role is played by Mary Thurman, erstwhile heroine of William S. Hart productions. The leading male role has been entrusted to Niles Welch, while others in the supporting company are Frank Campeau, one of film's most skillful "heavies"; Joseph Dowling, "The Miracle Man"; George Hackathorne, Eugenie Besserer, Gertrude Claire and Mrs. Joseph Dowling who makes her screen debut in this production.

Improve Accessory Service

Famous Players Announces a New Department to Render Additional Aid

FINAL steps in the reorganization of accessories service to the exchanges by Famous Players-Lasky Corporation to perfect a standard system of distribution, were completed last week in the consummation of several promotions and the formation of a new department.

Melville A. Shauer, formerly assistant to F. V. Chamberlain, general service manager, assumes the duties of manager of the newly created Department of Advertising Accessories. Under the reorganization plan the home office of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation will keep a check on all orders for advertising accessories from each exchange. Absolute certainty of supply is guaranteed the exhibitor in the establishment of a minimum stock that each exchange must have on hand for Paramount productions, says Famous Players. As soon as the available supply has reached this minimum, a re-order upon the home office is entered automatically.

In harmony with the increased efficiency installed in every department of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, the new procedure will eliminate waste by establishing a maximum on advertising accessories on any production that any one exchange can requisition on a single order. This maximum, however, it is stated, will be generous and adequate to care for the largest conceivable needs of an exchange at any given period.

Resultant from the various steps involved in this reorganization, the home office will be in a position to control the sale of advertising accessories, the maintenance of an adequate supply at all times and will supervise the prompt shipping of all orders and check up on deliveries to the exchanges. F. V. Chamberlain, who has charge of the general service to the exchanges, is responsible for the new plan which he has been working upon conscientiously for some time, in which he has been ably assisted by Mr. Shauer.

American Is Producing "Whispering Smith"

The American Film Company announces that "Whispering Smith," based on the novel of the same name by Frank Hamilton Spearman, is now being adapted to the screen at the Santa Barbara studios, California. This story of western-frontier life has already roused great interest in book-form, and General-Manager R. R. Nehls of the American Film confidently asserts that this new picture will be as popular as the picturizations of "The Honey Bee" by Samuel Merwin and "The House of Toys" by Henry Russell Miller. Original Cast in Picture

With One Exception "39 East" Is to Have Same Line-Up as on Stage

ACCORDING to a statement from Realart, Constance Binney will have practically the same cast supporting her in the screen production of "39 East" as played in Rachel Crothers' successful comedy on the stage for more than a year continuously in New York City and the principal cities of the country.

The only important change, says Realart, is that Reginald Denny replaces Henry Hull as leading man in the Realart production, which is now approaching completion. The cast will wear substantially the same costumes as on the speaking stage, with a few additions necessitated by the screen version of the story.

Director John S. Robertson found that Mr. Hull was not available for screen work, as he had already begun rehearsals in a new play for the next season. He immediately chose Mr. Denny for the role of "Napoleon" Gibbs. Mr. Denny has only recently completed work in an important role in Alice Brady's forthcoming Realart picture, "A Dark Lantern."

Others who were in the stage play and will be seen in the film version in their respective parts are as follows:

Alison Skipworth as Mrs. de Mailley; Lucia Moore as Mrs. Smith; Blanche Friederici as Miss McMasters; Edith Gresham as Saidee Clarence; Mildred Arden as Myrtle Clarence; Louis Alberni as Count Gionelli; Albert Carroll as Dr. Hubbard. Frank Allworth, who was not in the play, has the role of Timothy O'Brien.

John S. Robertson, who will direct "39 East," also directed Alice Brady in "A Dark Lantern," which has recently been completed. He once before directed Miss Binney in "Erstwhile Susan," the first picture she made for Realart. His work in directing John Barrymore in "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde" has also recently won for him his present distinguished place in film-dom.

Strongest Cast in Recent Years Says Cosmopolitan; Opens July 18

COSMOPOLITAN Productions declares that no photoplay in recent years has been produced with such a remarkable cast as that contained in "The World and His Wife," which will have a pre-release showing at the Rivoli theatre during the week commencing July 18 and which will be released generally on July 25. No less than four members of the cast have at various times been starred, while half a dozen others are internationally famous.

"Heading this great cast," says Cosmopolitan Productions, "is Alma Rubens as the featured player, and whose name is already gleaming in electric lights over the Criterion theatre, where she is also the featured player in Cosmopolitan Productions' other great success, 'Humoresque.' In addition to Miss Rubens there is Montagu Love, who is perhaps the greatest character actor on the stage or screen; Pedro de Cordoba, who has won fame for himself in almost every branch of acting and whose work as leading actor man for Elsie Ferguson in several of her best photoplays was of the highest character; Gaston Glass, who as Leon, the young musician in Cosmopolitan Productions' 'Humoresque,' does much to make that picture the great success it is; Charles Gerard, who first won recognition for his wonderful work on the stage in 'Within the Law'; Margaret Dale, another stage favorite; and Byron Russell, the celebrated English actor.

"It has been proven, time and again, that big photoplays are made of stories with big themes, enacted by capable artists and adequately produced. 'The World and His Wife' is such a play as is 'Humoresque.' While in the latter play the theme is mother love, in 'The World and His Wife' it is gossip. In 'The World and His Wife,' which is adapted from the stage play by Charles Frederic Nirdlinger, the harm that can follow in the wake of wagging tongues is most vividly portrayed. Robert G. Vig-

"The Movie Lure" Seen in Magazine Issue

Trying to get into the movies has become one of the most popular pastimes throughout the country of late years, and the Paramount Magazine of July 11 in "The Movie Lure" shows it in operation as countless ambitious candidates strive to "break in." The picture shows several who have broken through the front barriers undergoing actual camera tests. Their ideas of the requirements of make-up and histrionic art receive a rude shock and the camera disclosures are often laughable.

Ralph Lewis has been signed by Louis B. Mayer to play an important role in Anita Stewart's new Mayer-First National attraction, "Sowing the Wind," being directed by John M. Stahl.

Carl Laemmle Off to Europe

ON the eve of his departure, July 8th, for Europe, abroad the steamship Olympic, Carl Laemmle, president of Universal Film Manufacturing Company, emphatically denied that he is crossing the ocean to put across any deals with British or other foreign interests. He humorously outlined the many things he does not intend to do while in Europe, including in his category all activities connected with the film business. His trip is to be purely a pleasure trip, a three-months rest and vacation.

Questioned as to his plans, he outlined them as follows:

"I am not going over to buy out any British or Continental film company. I recently acquired control of a big American film company. I refer to the Universal Film Manufacturing Company. That is big enough and good enough for me."

"I am not going to Europe to produce pictures. Universal seems to be able to produce pictures in Los Angeles that are as popular in London as they are in New York, and as well liked in Japan as they are in Toronto. After its London showing, British censors recently complained because they thought, 'Blind Husbands' was filmed in Austria, a former enemy country. The picture actually was made in California."

"Erich von Stroheim has twice proved that he can make pictures that accurately reproduce the scenes, life, customs and atmosphere of Continental Europe. In his third picture for Universal, 'Foolish Wives,' to be laid in Monte Carlo, he is going to even greater pains to make the picture an exact reproduction of the real thing. Why should I keep companies in Europe?"

"I am not going to establish a Continental studio. Anyway not just yet. We have more than 600

Carmel Myers, who will return to films and Universal management in "In Folly's Trail" acres of studio space at Universal City, Cal. There are twenty different companies working there at the more.

"I am not going to build a studio in Singapore, or Hong-Kong or even in France not just yet. On the few occasions when I want to carry action into foreign lands, as Universal did in its two international serials 'The Vanishing Dagger' and 'The Dragon's Net,' I will send the entire company on a tour."

"I am not going to round up a galaxy of foreign screen stars and transplant them to America. They might not flourish in the California sunshine. If any of them want to come to America and apply at Universal City, they will get an opportunity to demonstrate their abilities. Universal has several excellent players recruited from the foreign stage and screen. Home grown players, however, seem to be arriving in Los Angeles at the usual rate."

"I am not going to rope and hog all the leading British, French, Italian and other European writers not already in studio captivity. For many months, Universal has had an understanding with certain of the best known European men of letters for the purposes of encouraging them to turn their talents to the screen. Among them are Anatole France, Henri Baraille, Eugene Brieux and others."

"I do not intend to kidnap the world's champion potato racer from the Olympic games and star him in a photoplay of sentiment and sunsets. 'The people who go to see motion pictures in the United States and elsewhere, like to see real actors in real parts, not infant prodigies in a succession of sugary close ups.'"

"Finally, I am going to Europe for a vacation. I expect to be there about three months. I will do considerable travelling and considerable resting. I may inquire into Universal activities in Europe, while I am on the other side, but I can't truthfully say that I am going abroad to set the European film world on its ears, corner the photoplay market in the Sudan, or perform any other sailing day promises."

Mr. Laemmle is accompanied aboard the Olympic by his two children, Rosabelle and Julius, and by his brother-in-law, Abe Stern, treasurer of Universal, and Mrs. Stern. Louis Laemmle, brother of the Universal chief, also is a member of the party with his wife and two children. Others in the party are Julius Berenstein, a relative of the Laemmle brothers, H. H. Zehner and secretary to Mr. Carl Laemmle.

Pathe Has Two on Broadway

THE week of July 11th, will mark a Pathe celebration along Broadway. Two of Pathe's biggest summer releases are to be featured on the Great White Way. "One Hour Before Dawn," in which H. B. Warner makes his debut as a Pathe star, is to be the feature at the Capitol theatre. "Man and His Woman," a J. Stuart Blackton production, starring Herbert Rawlinson and May McAvoy, with Warren Chandler and Eulalie Jensen playing important roles, will have a pre-release showing at the Broadway theatre.

"One Hour Before Dawn" is a Jesse D. Hampton production adapted from the novel, "Behind Red Curtains" by Mansfield Scott. It was directed by Henry King. The Warner picture is the second Pathe release to play the Capitol theatre within a month, Managing Director Samuel L. Rothapfel having successfully exploited J. Stuart Blackton's, "Passers-By" in June. The production was scheduled for general release by Pathe until the first week in August. "Man and His Woman" is the

Warner and Rawlinson Pictures to be Seen Next Week

Blackton feature succeeding "Passers-By." It is scheduled for release on July 18th. The story was written by Shannon Fife and was originally known as "The Soul Spinner." It was photographed principally at White Sulphur Springs, West Virginia, and, particularly, is one of the most beautiful dramas ever seen upon the screen.

Herbert Rawlinson, cast in the role of a noted physician who loses his grip, and sinks to the lower levels, to be won back by the love of a woman, has an exceptional opportunity for fine acting, and makes the fullest use of it. May McAvoy throughout the production is a charming personality, and her performance entitles her to be rated as one of the most promising of the younger set of leading women destined to be stars of the future. Warren Chandler essays his first heavy role, and to his credit he gives a splendid performance. Eulalie Jensen as the woman who erred and was refined by fire, and Charles Kent are others in the cast who have prominent parts.

These two Broadway runs are cited by Pathe as bearing out its announced plans of releasing only those pictures suitable for use by the best theatres in the land. Three Broadway showings within a month was a record few distributing organizations have ever attained, and augurs well for the type of feature pictures Pathe is now releasing.

It is also an indication that the Pathe policy of not withholding its best pictures for Fall issue, is meeting the approval of the highest class of exhibitor.

He wasn't superstitious—didn't believe in signs—so, without the ouija board to guide him, how was he to know that right beside him, as he calmly puffed his Flor de Ropo, was a ton of powder just dying to go off and go up? But it proved a blessing to Larry. It gave him prominence, sent him through a few slight carriers like a stone wall, an iron door and other things, and landed him right on the stage as the central attraction of a beauty ballet.

Pathe Has Two on Broadway

Three Features Will Be Given to Public in August

AUGUST is to be a red letter month in the annals of Pathe's feature business. Three big feature productions are scheduled for release during that period, contrary to the usual practice of holding back exceptional pictures for Fall issue. The month will be noteworthy for the Golden Rooster organization, in that it will mark the debut of H. B. Warner among its increasing list of box office pulling stars. A new Edgar Lewis offering, and the latest Blanche Sweet attraction are others on the August schedule.

H. B. Warner is starred in "One Hour Before Dawn" which will inaugurate the month, being released on August 1st. Blanche Sweet will make her next Pathe appearance in "The Girl in the Web," produced by Jesse D. Hampton, probably the strongest role in which she has ever appeared. Edgar Lewis, after giving Pathe two great successes in "Other Men's Shoes" and "Sherry," comes to the front with his master work, "Lahoma," a story with the heart of the great West as its locale.

"Lahoma," an abbreviation of Oklahoma, is Edgar Lewis at his best, and this statement recalls "Other Men's Shoes," "Sherry" and such sterling triumphs as "The Great Divide," "The Barrier," "The Sign Invisible" and other plays, which left their bright marks on the box offices of thousands of exhibitors throughout the country.

One of the best all around casts Jesse D. Hampton ever assembled for any picture, supports H. B. Warner in "One Hour Before Dawn," which was directed by Henry King, who has been responsible for several Hampton successes. The story was adapted from the novel "Behind Red Curtains," written by Mansfield Scott. The adaptation was made by Fred Myton. Heading the supporting cast is Anna Q. Nilsson. Frank Leigh is the "heavy." Others important in the large cast are Thomas Guise, Augustus Phillips, Ralph McCullough, Howard Davies, Wilton Taylor, Lillian Rich, Adele Farrington and Dorothy Hagen.

"The Girl in the Web," a story of love, mystery and adventure—everything that goes to make up a suspenseful drama—will be Blanche Sweet's next picture. It is scheduled for release on August 15th. The story is another adaptation from a novel, "Miss Maitland, Private Secretary," by Geraldine Bonner. Robert Thornby directed the production, the scenario for which was written by Waldemar Young.

Nigel Barrie heads the highly competent cast that supports Miss Sweet. Other favorite players in the cast are Thomas Jefferson, the veteran of stage and screen, and son of the famous "Joe" Jefferson; Adele Farrington, Hayward Mack, Christine Mayo, and little Peaches Jackson.

Edgar Lewis's greatest successes are those in which he staged his plays in the "country God made," and, in "Lahoma," he has another of this type of play. "Lahoma" heads the Pathe releases for the week of August 29th. The plot is based on the story by John Breckenridge Ellis, by permission of Bobbs Merrill Co. In the cast are Lurline Lyons, Peaches Jackson, Wade Boteler, H. M. Lindley, John Carlyle, Russell Simpson, Will Jefferies, S. B. Phillips, Beatrice Burnham and Jack Perrin.

"Lahoma" was written around those sturdy days, when 14,000,000 acres in the Western part of Indian territory and east of "No Man's Land" was still government property and of the time when this country was thrown open to "boomers" then whom no harder people ever lived. All the thrill of the West of those days is contained in the Lewis production, which in many respects surpasses either "Sherry" and "Other Men's Shoes," which have been rated as triumphs for the noted producer.

Harry Levey Opens Office

Educational and Industrial Concern Gets Under Way in New York

PERMANENT offices for the Harry Levey Service Corporation were established on Saturday at 1662 Broadway, New York. This is the new company that had been organized by Harry Levey for the manufacture and distribution of educational and industrial pictures.

This is said to break records of several sorts, and sets a high water mark for progress and speed in the motion picture industry. The Harry Levey Service Corporation is the first motion picture production company to be organized on a co-operative, profit-sharing basis. Each employee is a partner in the business, owning stock, and having a share in the profits that accrue from production. Mr. Levey has established his company on this basis, believing that co-operative production will make for the greatest success in the motion picture industry, and that scenarios, acting, camera-work, and all the details of production will be marked by a great step forward on this plan. It is his belief that all modern picture producing companies of the future will be organized on the same plan.

Mr. Levey established his company by working continuously through two days and two nights, and although permanent offices have only just been established, actual work of production has been in progress for more than a week. Mr. Levey decided a week ago Wednesday night to organize his own production company. Temporary offices were established that night at the Hotel Astor, and the work of organization begun. By twenty minutes to two Thursday morning a company had been organized, with fifteen departments complete and ready for action, and next morning actual "shooting" was begun.

Feature to Be Ready Soon

Miss Farrar Nears End of "The Riddle Woman" for Associated

A NNOUCEMENT is made by the Associated Exhibitors that "The Riddle Woman" with Geraldine Farrar in the leading role, which Pathe will distribute, is rapidly nearing completion. The final shots will be taken at the studio at New Rochelle this week and the entire company will then go to Boston for certain essential locations. As the picture approaches the finishing point, the general verdict of all who have seen the picture in its disconnected form is that it will be unquestionably the finest picture in Geraldine Farrar's career. Time and money has been freely given to this production and it is said to be the last word in modern picture making.

Edward Jose, the director, is enthusiastic in his predictions for the success of the picture. He feels that a notable cast has been assembled in support of the famous star and that its technical equipment has been all that could be desired for an ultra fine production. Some of the interior sets are considered by him the most magnificent ever prepared for a motion picture.

A review of the figures of production shows that the construction parts of the sets alone exceeds by thousands of dollars the cost of many a motion picture. All of this elaborate background was arranged after consultation with the leading exhibitors of the country upon their assurance that the public of today were demanding productions of just this character. In fact, exhibitors have been in consultation from the very beginning of the picture.

The picture will be released early in the fall, according to present arrangements.

Mac Lean's Latest to Be His Best

"The Jailbird," the newest of the Douglas MacLean productions, has arrived with a "bang," according to advice received from the Thomas H. Ince Studios in Culver City, Cal. Ince production to be released through Paramount-Artcraft exchanges, is heralded by Thomas H. Ince and other critics as the best, most spirited Douglas MacLean vehicle since the famous "Twenty-Three and One-Half Hours' Leave."

Warner Brothers Will Enforce Contract

Smith Syndicate Tells Its Plans

Producers Will Make Series Starring ZaSu Pitts

COMPLETED plans of the new producing organization known as the R. C. P. Smith Syndicate were made known by President R. C. P. Smith at the Los Angeles offices of the company this week with the confirmation of the report that this organization had contracted for series starring of ZaSu Pitts who has appeared in Buena Vista Robertson-Cole productions, the term of the contract being three years. It is also made known that Gilbert P. Hamilton is to serve as director general of production under contract like period of time and the company has options on the services of Helen Jerome Eddy.

The R. C. P. Smith Syndicate has been organized for a number of years and carry on a general financing business through their Los Angeles office, their work in the past being confined to industrial promotion and the financing of gas and electric corporations, electric railways and conducting a general oil and land business. About two years ago the company was engaged to aid in the financing of a motion picture company and through this work became interested in the film industry.

"We are not going into the motion picture industry with the intention of revolutionizing it, but we do believe it has grown and improved to such an extent that it is now on a safe, sound and sane basis," President Smith said in available for the use of this department."

"In preparing plans for production we have thoroughly investigated every field of the industry and have sought and secured the necessary information during the past sixteen months that makes us believe we can move forward to success. The ZaSu Pitts productions we plan to market through Robertson-Cole Distributing organization but at this time we have no plans for the subjects we will make with Helen Jerome Eddy or the series of ten all-star productions we will produce during the year."

"The work being carried on now respecting production is in preparation for the filming of the first subject which is announced to be an original screen play titled "The Thundering Dawn" written by Clifford Howard. This subject will be made under the direction of Gilbert P. Hamilton. Cast is now being selected and particular attention is being given to surrounding Miss Pitts with players who will aid in accentuating her peculiar and individual characteristics."

Possession of the Horsley studio will be given the Smith Syndicate early in July following the necessary repairs that are now being made and production work is scheduled to be started about July 19th.

Short-Subjects in Demand Pearson Completes Survey; Finds Them to Be in Greater Demand

ELMER R. PEARSON, director of exchanges of Pathe Exchange, Inc., has just completed a survey of the entire country, regarding the status of short subjects, and finds they are in bigger demand than ever this summer. The call is for high class comedies, two-reel Western stories and serials.

"Even in some territories where the short subject heretofore has held but little sway, we have found a big demand for this type of entertainment," Mr. Pearson said in summing up his findings.

"The demand for short subjects in many sections surpassed the supply. There are all sorts of one and two-reel subjects on the market, but exhibitors are demanding and buying only the best.

"We find that our Young Buffalo series of Western pictures, each in two reels, and each relating an entirely different story, are making a tremendous appeal to exhibitors. The great need, however, is for comedies. Our take on Rolin one-reel comedies, in which 'Smile' Pollard and Sunshine Sammy are featured with Marie Mosquini, jumped considerably, in June over May, which is an indication not only of increased merit of production, but of the greater demand for single reels.

"The Harold Lloyd two-reel comedy-specials have now reached the high water mark. In less than a year these comedies have become established as the foremost on the market, and exhibitors are clamoring for more of the type. Lloyd's new series, the first of which will be released on July 11th, under the title of "High and Dizzy" should carry the young comedian to new pinnacles of fame.

"The 'Bringing Up Father' comedies, too, have done a tremendous business."

Sixty Features on Goldwyn Schedule : :

GOLDWYN PICTURES CORPORATION will release sixty feature productions during the coming season. The first group of fifteen pictures is now complete and prints will be at the twenty-two Goldwyn exchanges for showing to exhibitors starting July 15th.

The list of productions, finished and in prospect, includes the works of the greatest authors of the day, adaptations of plays that have been seen by hundreds of thousands of people and books that have been read by millions, new stories from the pens of Rex Beach and the Eminent Authors, features written expressly for the screen by Booth Tarkington and Maurice Maeterlinck, and the best of the output of other writers of equal repute, an option on whose work has been secured. The Goldwyn program for its fourth year presents the most impressive list of pictures ever assembled by this organization.

The outstanding points of the new season's announcement are as follows:

Sixty feature productions handled as unit bookings.

The first of Booth Tarkington's features written expressly for the screen and a continuation of the two-act "Edgar Comedies."

The first of Maurice Maeterlinck's original screen stories.

The acquisition of production rights to many of the most successful plays and books of the day.

Samuel Goldwyn, President of the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation

A continuation of the alliance between Goldwyn Pictures, Rex Beach and the six Eminent Authors—Rupert Hughes, Basil King, Gouverneur Morris, Mary Roberts Rinehart, Gertrude Atherton and LeRoy Scott.

The distribution of pictures starring Betty Compson.

The distribution of J. Parker Read's, "His Own Law."

A continuation of the Goldwyn-Bray Pictograph and the Goldwyn-Bray Comic and the possible addition of other regular releases from the Bray studios.

Two-reel Capital Comedies released every other week.

The keynote of the Goldwyn Sales policy is that "the merit of the individual picture will be the sole factor in every transaction." The aim of the production policy is to make every picture a production of outstanding quality. To this end Goldwyn has built up one of the greatest producing organizations in the world at the Culver City studios in California; negotiations have been consummated for the motion picture rights to masterpieces of literature and the stage; the force of directors located at Culver City and in Goldwyn's eastern studio in New York includes the foremost experts that the industry has developed; Goldwyn authors are numbered among the great literary figures of this country and Europe, and Goldwyn actors occupy a place among the most popular favorites of the screen.

Before the new season is far underway, Goldwyn's producing organization will have spread across the Atlantic. Goldwyn Pictures, Ltd. is already firmly established in England and plans are underway for the making of pictures in that country, also in France where a branch office was recently opened.

Never in the history of Goldwyn has a new year been launched with such a quantity of superior feature pictures finished and ready for distribution. And never has there been such a wealth of wonderful material to draw from for future productions. Since the first of last January scarcely a week has passed without bringing the acquisition of some new play or book of outstanding merit, and the literary resources of the company are being constantly increased.

The emphatic success of Rex Beach and the Eminent Authors convinced Goldwyn of the wisdom of securing the greatest creative minds of the day to write directly for the screen. In accord with this policy, Maurice Maeterlinck was placed under contract to supply one original story a year, and only a few weeks ago Goldwyn added Booth Tarkington to its roster of authors, who will devote their genius to the creation of a new and higher type of feature photoplay. It is doubtful if anything that has happened during the past year surpasses the Booth Tarkington affiliation in its promise for the future development of the art of the screen.

Wanted—Exhibitor Appraisement : : : :

THE value of exhibitors' opinions in keeping the producer in touch with what the public want in the way of picture entertainment is the subject of the following statement, issued by Vice-President Abraham Lehr, of the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation:

"Much of the credit for recent improvements in photoplays is due, I believe, to those broad-minded exhibitors who have frankly opened their hearts to producers and have given honest appraisement of films. A more generous co-operation of this nature will be the most potent factor in future development. It is not the desire of the Goldwyn company to make features that will merely please ourselves. We do not wish to thrust our individual tastes upon the public. What we wish to do is to give the public the kind of entertainment it desires and the knowledge of this can be obtained only through the theatre managers. They occupy the position of holding their fingers on the pulse of the public desire. Our product is judged by the box-office receipts, and it is only through a close relationship with exhibitors that we can know what is successful and what is not. No business can be established on failures. If we make a mistake we wish to know it—frankly, honestly. If we put out a photoplay that proves a great success it is as much to the mutual advantage of exhibitors and ourselves that we know this, too, that we may use it as an example for our future efforts.

Public taste is developing, public opinion constantly changing. To keep abreast of the times it is imperative that we have the confidence and the co-operation of those men who are in closest touch with the greatest American film audiences. They know what their people want and what they do not. That is their business. I believe it is but a reasonable conclusion that they can best secure that which the public desires by passing this information on to the makers of photoplays.

"In my desire to satisfy taste as to stories we have retained the world's greatest story tellers: Rex Beach, with his virile tales of the North; Mary Roberts Rinehart, with her delightful yarns of domestic life; LeRoy Scott, with his mystery stories of the big city; Gouverneur Morris, with his dramatic thunderbolts; Basil King, with his delightful reminiscences of childhood days; Gertrude Atherton, with her vivid analytical social stories, and so on.

"To give these stories the most realistic visualization possible we have retained the best technicians in every line of motion picture production. We are filming our stories true to life to the smallest detail. We employ art directors who have made a life study of artistic detail of all ages and all countries; we operate a mammoth factory with craft-men capable of turning out furniture of the dearest designs; we maintain a wardrobe department with our own designers and tailors that our actresses may wear clothes of distinction, such as will set the fashion for the morrow; we have sculptors, workers in wrought iron, architects, landscape gardeners—for every expression of life we have men whose knowledge is the last word in their particular line.

"The Goldwyn studio with its fifty acres covered with buildings and stages is a city of diversified industry. Practically every trade, every science, every art is represented here in the process of making motion pictures."

Goldwyn Branches Are Open in England

The establishment of Goldwyn, Limited, in London, with nine service branches in the United Kingdom, is another link in the Goldwyn plan of direct to exhibitor service all over the world. Goldwyn pictures are declared to have been held in high repute in Great Britain ever since their introduction there. The demand for the Goldwyn product reached a point early this year where the establishment of a British company to deal directly with the British exhibitor not only coincided with plans of expansion, but was found to be essential for the best interests of the exhibitor himself and the product he desired to handle.

A careful survey of the English field was carried out by Goldwyn officials in London for that purpose under the direction of Samuel Goldwyn, followed by the establishment in May of a British distributing corporation, with offices at 35-36 Little Newport street. The Goldwyn policy of foreign expansion has always followed closely the principle of using the best selected American methods supplemented by such foreign ideas as are found best suited to the purpose. To this end, Goldwyn officials took with them to England A. George Smith, formerly of the South African Film Company and an Englishman familiar by long experience with British methods of business. Mr. Smith was made managing director of Goldwyn, Limited, with Charles Lapworth, a well known London journalist who has been associated with several American producers as secretary.

"Service"—The First Objective : : : :

THE following statement has been issued by Felix F. Feist, vice-president and general manager of the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation:

"Service to the exhibitor will be the first plank in the platform of Goldwyn Distributing Corporation during the coming season. When I say service, I mean something that is real and genuine and actually helps an exhibitor to make money out of a picture. Everything in our organization is directed toward this end. It is not enough to sell a picture. Good business demands that the picture disposed of bring the largest possible profit to the theatre served. The forces assembled in the home office and in Goldwyn's twenty-two exchanges are inspired with this creed of service. They know that the sale of pictures is only a part of their work. The greater part, the part that builds for the future, is the active cooperation which exhibitors receive in making the showing a success.

"Our sales force has been built up with this aim always in mind. The test of a branch manager is not mere routine efficiency. He must be a man of ideas and initiative. He must be a creative showman who knows how to market his product to the public as well as to the theatre manager. He must be the kind of a man who can learn by experience and help others to profit by what he has learned. And he must be the type that will inspire his salesmen with the same high purposes of business service. I am confident in the belief that the splendid organization assembled by Goldwyn for the coming year measures up to this high ideal.

"The determination to give exhibitors the best that is obtainable in every respect is being carried out in still another way. With the inauguration of the new season, Goldwyn will distribute a far greater number of prints of each picture than ever were issued in the past, thus insuring perfect films for all exhibitors, even in third and fourth run houses.

"One of the prime advantages in issuing more prints than heretofore is that a larger number of exhibitors will have a chance to use the films while our national advertising campaign is occupied with the exploitation of those particular pictures. Furthermore, it will enable us to increase the number of houses showing first run at the same time.

"Going further down the line, the second run men will have the advantage of all the previous advertising and so will find a public more ready to appreciate each Goldwyn photoplay as it comes along. The new plan will result in an increase in the number of second run accounts, for the second run house will not have to wait so long for a print as in the past. The advantages spread still further, for the small exhibitor will be able to show a picture much earlier than formerly; and what is of vital importance, the prints will come to him in far better condition than was possible under the former arrangement.

"We are pardonably jealous of the condition of our films, and we want them to appear in as good condition in a fifth run house as they do in a first run theatre. To handle the increased business we are sure will come to us, we are contemplating the opening of a few new exchanges. The larger territories will probably be divided.

"During the past year, we have learned much in our attempts to perfect the service branch of our organization. At the beginning of the past season, we set out to make Goldwyn service the best that applied intelligence could produce. In order to meet the exacting demands of exhibitors, we had to convince them that our exchanges were at their service;

"To meet all these demands that we consciously set out to create, we had first to convince the exhibitor that we were able to meet them. At first some exhibitors were skeptical, despite the fact that Goldwyn service has always been one of the strongest features of our organization and one in which we prided ourselves on being pre-eminent in the field of distribution. Our salesmen finally convinced the skeptical exhibitors that our exchanges actually could advise them and help them in the receipts of their box office. And in due time the exhibitors found that we could live up to our promises.

"But while the campaign was carried on among the exhibitors to have them make more use of our exchange service, we began another campaign of education among our own employees to teach them the necessity of making the exhibitor's needs his own during his working hours. Our exchange managers understood and appreciated the necessity of making every man and woman under him realize that upon him or her depended the full responsibility of the exchange's success. Thus splitting up of the responsibility has given every member of the field force the feeling that his job is of paramount importance. As a consequence, the young man who supervises the patrons in an exchange, feels that it would be a disgrace for an exhibitor to receive the wrong paper for a picture. And the inspectresses, who patch films when they begin to show signs of wear, have been so imbued with the importance of the little bit of celluloid and cement that they apply, that each job of patching is done perfectly. This is how they contribute their 'bit' to the total of good service which the Goldwyn exchanges render.

"A large measure of credit for this Education for Service campaign is due to our district supervisors, who visit the exchanges and assist the local managers in solving their particular problems. Arthur Lucas, in the southern district, Jean J. Crandall, in the eastern states, E. C. Jensen, in the middle states and A. S. Aronson in the west, cover the entire country and bear with them the Goldwyn principle that good service can be made better, and better service can still be improved.

"Another link to cement the relationship between the individual members of the exchange and the home office is the house organ, 'A Family Affair,' which is issued to every member of the organization. Here may be found anecdotes from all the exchanges; and the least important member of an exchange is treated with the same courtesy and the same importance that is accorded a star salesman. Each employee is considered as a responsible, able human being and is given complete charge of a particular part of the work to be done.

"As a result of this policy, every Goldwyn employee realizes that his advancement rests on merit alone. During the traffic disturbances in the northeast last winter, we had a flock of commercial automobiles on the road distributing films. And out west, when a show was unavoidably delayed, a motorcycle racer was engaged to ride some three hundred miles to an exhibitor in an out of the way town so that his patrons would not be disappointed. And so it is not surprising to me when I receive personal letters from exhibitors in the East complimenting the work of such managers as D. J. Hopson of Boston, Geo. A. Hickey of Buffalo, P. A. Bloch of Cleveland, Felix Mendelssohn of Philadelphia, or Sam Eklman of New York.

"But such letters are not limited to one section of the country. Letters from southern exhibitors praise the efforts of N. S. Dickinson of Atlanta, Geo. Jack Stewart of Cincinnati, Walter F. Haynor of Washington, D. C., E. B. Remy of Dallas, Texas, Jack West of St. Louis, and J. W. Pope of New Orleans. The middle west is represented by pleasing reports on Carl E. Maberty of Chicago, J. E. Flynn of Detroit, W. E. Truog of Kansas City, Robert Cotton of Minneapolis and Nat Baruch of Pittsburgh. The satisfying thing about receiving such correspondence is that it comes entirely unsolicited, and is merely an appreciation of what the men in the field are doing locally to assist their exhibitors. From the West letters have come to me extolling the personal likableness and business efficiency of such men as Ben Fish of Denver, M. Wolf of Los Angeles, G. C. Parsons of San Francisco, J. A. Koepel of Seattle, Wash., E. J. MacIvor of Omaha and W. E. Banford of Salt Lake City."

What the Directors Have Done : : : :

EQUIPPED with the services of such creative minds as those of Reginald Barker, Frank Lloyd, Clarence Badger, Victor Schertzinger, Wallace Worsley, T. Hayes Hunter, Harry Beaumont and E. Mason Hopper, officials of the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation feel that there is little, either in the way of quality or quantity, which they could add to the directorial forces which will produce Goldwyn pictures for the season of 1920-1921.

Every one of the directors named has already produced noteworthy results for the Culver City studios. In many cases, an entente cordiale has been established between particular stars and particular directors, which has greatly helped in creating that atmosphere of studio good-will essential to the turning out of consistently worth-while productions. Harry Beaumont, for instance, has directed Tom Moore through the seasons of '18 and '19. Clarence Badger took hold of Will Rogers, when that star first arrived on the Goldwyn lot, and has worked with the cowpuncher-actor from the original "Almost A Husband" to the latest "Jes' Call Me Jim."

Reginald Barker is a Goldwyn director who begins his third year with the organization. Mr. Barker directed Geraldine Farrar in several super-feature productions during the last season, and was also responsible for the picture which brought results to exhibitors and producers reported never to have been surpassed by any other production—"The Girl From Outside," from the story by Rex Beach. Lately Mr. Barker finished "The Branding Iron," an all-star picture from the story by Katherine Newlin Burt. This is in Goldwyn's first group of fifteen for the new year.

Frank Lloyd did "The World and Its Woman" with Geraldine Farrar, for his first Goldwyn production. Next came "The Loves of Letty," with Pauline Frederick, and then Rex Beach's "The Silver Horde." Following that super-picture, Mr. Lloyd directed Pauline Frederick in three photoplays, among them being "Madame X," which it is promised, will excite more comment and interest upon its release than has any other Frederick picture. Mr. Lloyd's work with Goldwyn has earned him distinguished praise because of his rare gift for visualization and his attention to detail.

Victor Schertzinger has directed Mabel Normand in all of her recent productions and with the greatest success. Beginning with "When Doctors Disagree," early in 1919, Mr. Schertzinger has produced with Miss Normand in the star role, five notable box-office and artistic productions, and another picture of the same proportion but starring Madge Kennedy, "The Blooming Angel."

E. Mason Hopper began his work for Goldwyn with one of the notable productions of the time—"Edgar and Teacher's Pet," the first of the picturizations of the Booth Tarkington stories written directly for the screen. "Edgar and Teacher's Pet" set a standard which caused these two-reel comedies to be hailed the country over as among the few fresh and spontaneous humors the screen had offered in years. In "Edgar's Hamlet" and "Edgar's Jonah Day" Mr. Hopper succeeded in keeping to the standard set by the first picture. Recently he has been engaged in directing "Empire Builders," an all-star production taken from a story by Mary Roberts Rinehart.

Wallace Worsley's first effort for Goldwyn was "The Little Shepherd of Kingdom Come," from the celebrated novel by John Fox, Jr. In this picture, Jack Pickford established himself, after his absence from the screen, as a star with increased and matured talents. Subsequently Mr. Worsley produced the Goldwyn Eminent Authors' Pictures, "The Street Called Straight," by Basil King, and "The Penalty," by Gouverneur Morris.

T. Hayes Hunter produced another Eminent Authors' picture, Basil King's "Earthbound," which Goldwyn officials feel will cause a sensation upon release. Mr. Hunter was responsible for Rupert Hughes' "The Cup of Fury," a picturization which has been called the most workmanlike thing of its kind ever done.

The success registered by Jack Pickford in "The Little Shepherd of Kingdom Come," under the direction of Mr. Worsley, has been more than duplicated under the direction of Al Green in "A Double-Dyed Deceiver," from O. Henry's story of that name. Mr. Green's work with the O. Henry theme was so well-liked that he was engaged to continue with Mr. Pickford in "The Man Who Had Everything," now under way.

This record of successes leads Goldwyn to believe that, with increased production facilities and greater elasticity of experience, these directors will prove anew, during the coming year, what has already been demonstrated—the importance of the director in the production of a picture. Goldwyn feels that the creative importance of the director can be underrated only to the hurt of the picture, and that the list of personalities, set forth, who will be responsible for the picturization of the new Goldwyn themes gives every promise of notable results.

During the season past these Goldwyn directors continuing with Goldwyn productions have been responsible for the following successes:

Harry Beaumont: Tom Moore in "A Man and His Money," "One of the Finest," "City of Comrades," "Heartsease," "Lord and Lady Algy," "The Gay Lord Quex," "The Great Accident," "Toby's Bow." Also, Rex Beach's "Going Some," and Madge Kennedy in "Dollars and Sense."

Will Rogers Has Won Big Following

NOTHING more important to exhibitors in their recognition of star values has taken place during the past year than the phenomenal rise to popular favor of Will Rogers, under the emblem of the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation declares the Goldwyn office. Before his affiliation with the films, the now nation-famous "Jubilo" and "Jes Call Me Jim" was locally celebrated in New York as a gun-chewing lariat-thrower with a trenchant wit and happy gift for commentary on the day's happenings. Today he must be reckoned among the half-dozen picture stars whose features are best beloved by the American people. Yet he admits that he is "the ugliest man in the United States, bar none!"

"Almost A Husband," in which Peggy Wood played his leading-lady, began the series of artistic and financial results which have helped to make him a favorite of millions. Then followed "Jubilo," one of Goldwyn's biggest money-makers, which showed Rogers as a tramp who settled down to work, although he didn't like it. "Water, Water Everywhere" came next, and this was a variation for him, since he was cast in a cow-boy role.

"The Strange Boarder" followed "Water, Water Everywhere," and the picture of the small-town man in the big city was one of the best effects achieved by Rogers. He was destined to surpass this however in his next and latest production, "Jes' Call Me Jim," in which his characterization of the mountaineer type has been described as a screen classic.

Eminent Authors' Contributions :

A REVOLUTIONARY step is not necessarily a great step. When Samuel Goldwyn and Rex Beach combined forces in May, 1919, and with six well-known novelists formed what was called the "Eminent Authors Pictures, Inc.," for the purpose of giving the author an opportunity to supervise the picturization of his stories, it was regarded by motion picture people, editors and the public alike as a revolutionary step. Now, after a full year of accomplishment, it is generally conceded that it was a great step.

The experiment, which has been watched with keen interest from all sides, has met with success. Eminent Authors Pictures have been warmly received by press and public, and what is almost more important, the authors themselves—Gertrude Atherton, Rupert Hughes, Mary Roberts Rinehart, Gouverneur Morris, Basil King and Leroy Scott—are regarding their achievement of the past year with a feeling of satisfaction; and, with the same policy in mind, to produce pictures not in quantity but in quality, they are preparing to embark upon the new year with an undiminished enthusiasm.

Among the Eminent Authors' contributions to the new season's program is Mrs. Rinehart's "It's a Great Life." This tells of the ambitions of a couple of prep school boys to establish an empire of their own on a South Sea Island, inhabited largely in their imaginations by oysters and pearls. Of course there are super-numeraries, such as the king of the cannibal isle, his wives, his slaves, and his army of hula dancers; but the important thing in the eyes of the would-be adventurers is the wealth of pearls. The audience is taken along on this imaginary expedition.

One "Blizzard," introduced as the king of San Francisco's underworld, is the leading character in Gouverneur Morris' "The Penalty," one of the fourth-year productions. Needless to say, a child by an inexperienced surgeon, he grows up vowing revenge upon the man who injured him. The surgeon recognizes that his diabolical schemes are born of insanity, and eventually cures him by a brain operation. But Blizzard forfeits his life to the underworld system he has built up.

The Basil King picture, "Earthbound," on the coming program, is said to be as compelling as his first contribution, titled "The Street Called Straight." It may be spoken of as an "after-death play," in which the author makes free use of modern psychological and psychological ideas—an illustration of the theory that no man dies without having some little good to his credit. Growth is its chief theme, but growth through love.

Goldwyn-Bray Expansion :

ANNOUCEMENT that the Goldwyn-Bray studios will extend the scope of their activities during the coming year is the natural outcome of the public's approval of the excellent work done by the organization in the past, says the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation. J. R. Bray, the head of the production department, has this to say of his plans for the Pictograph.

"The Pictograph will continue along the lines we have pursued in the past year. We shall spare no pains to make our short subjects as interesting as possible, and the Inkwell cartoons, under Max Fleischer's direction, will continue to amuse everybody who sees them. We have received many letters of praise from exhibitors; and some of the general and scientific magazines have printed articles on our activities.

"Our scientific subjects, which are published as animated technical drawings under the supervision of E. J. Leventhal and F. Lyle Goldman, have been so well received that we have decided to expand this department of our work. To this end, we have established a microscopic department, equipped with the best of laboratory instruments. Here, phenomena beyond the range of vision of the human eye will be studied, drawn and photographed for release. Such subjects as the activities within a tiny piece of leaf, the story of how an egg develops and similar interesting phenomena will be presented. These will be part of our series of popular science romances, which will also delve into astronomical and geological subjects. In the field of the stars, we shall produce such pictures as "A Trip to the Moon," in which all the facts used are based on scientific knowledge. The manner of presentation will be in the form of a story, in which the dramatic form will help to focus the interest of the public.

"Still another field for the animated technical drawing has been found in picturizing mechanical instruments which everybody knows about, but whose construction and operation few understand. Among such instruments, the X-Ray, the seismograph, the spectroscope and weather forecasting instruments will be shown dramatically on the screen."

Turning from this department of the Goldwyn-Bray activities to some of their latest ideas, Mr. Bray outlined the scope of the Powell travelogues and the Finley nature studies.

"Our Alexander Powell is now on a tour of the Far East, where he is visiting lands and places that have never before been visited with a motion picture camera. He will have about 30,000 feet of good negative as the result of his six months' tour. Some of the film is now on the water, having been shipped from Hong Kong, one of the ports at which Mr. Powell stopped to replenish his supplies. He has visited several of the smaller islands of the Philippines; he has penetrated the interior of Indo-China, and from every stopping place, he has brought with him a living record of the natives, their activities, and their surroundings.

"In another field of adventure, we will present William L. Finley's nature studies of wild animals and birds. Mr. Finley is a nationally known naturalist, and has toured every section of the United States with a motion picture camera. It is Mr. Finley's hope to make a motion picture encyclopaedia of America's wild life. At present, Mr. Finley is now in the field, but expects to return in the fall with some unusual photographs of cougars, wild cats and moose. He will wind up his travels in the Northwest."

J. R. Bray, president of the Bray Pictures Corp.

Stars Increasing Their Followers : : :

WITH Mabel Normand, Madge Kennedy, Will Rogers, Tom Moore, Jack Pickford and Pauline Frederick to be starred in forthcoming productions, the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation enters its new season equipped with a strong list of well known screen personalities. Reports from the twenty-two exchanges of the organization, which were recently submitted to the directors, are a unit in declaring that each and every one of the stars has a definite following on which exhibitors should realize a big return during the next twelve months.

It is held that Mabel Normand, Madge Kennedy and Tom Moore have definitely cemented their hold on their admirers during the past year. Will Rogers is regarded as having advanced himself more quickly during that period to a position of immense public favor than any other player introduced on the screen for many years. Jack Pickford, who returned to the film under the Goldwyn emblem after an absence of some time, has also proved himself a valuable asset to the organization.

Nothing more valuable has been done to advance the interests of the organization since its inception, it is felt, than the starring of Will Rogers, who is expected, during the coming months to establish himself as one of the rare half-dozen personalities of the screen.

Goldwyn feels that it has in Will Rogers the only interpreter on the screen of elements which are peculiarly American—small-town lawyers, backwoodsman, cowboys who are men and not tip-roaring heroes. He combines with his ready humor a homely philosophy and sentiment which strike to the roots of Yankee life and which distinguish him from any other star.

Tom Moore remains very definitely in the star class, as a player of rare popularity and growing powers. His appeal, different from Rogers, of course, is also unique—a combination of Irish-American charm and genuinely emotional gifts. He has shown no disposition to settle down, satisfied, in his stellar groove, but has continued to further his talents, with the result that his appeal has definitely increased, as he impresses himself more and more on picture audiences.

Mabel Normand remains the inimitable hoyden of the screen, the "best bet" among the feminine stars whose range lies between light comedy, with its concomitant of pathos, and burlesque. Her recent productions have all grown further and further from the radical left of exaggeration to the conservative right of the comic. She has left behind her custard pies and has done so successfully. Picture after picture which Goldwyn has given her has shown her capabilities of expressing the humorous and the tender, so that she has graduated, with increased applause, from the old Keystone tempo to the tempo of "Pinto" and "What Happened to Rosa."

Madge Kennedy, for her part, continues her triumphant progress as one of the acknowledged queens of light comedy, and is a sure asset to Goldwyn in succeeding productions. For the new season Goldwyn plans to expend an increased energy on the pictures of this star.

With his first picture, "The Little Shepherd of Kingdom Come," Jack Pickford showed that he had lost nothing of his ability since his absence from the silver sheet, and since that picture he has revealed increased potentialities. He is the youngest star in the Goldwyn outfit and his work in his latest release, "A Double-Dyed Deceiver," has brought forth from Goldwyn the opinion that he has matured his art and that during the year he will prove himself to the full as an authentic star. His pictures are being selected with the greatest care, for it is felt that his youth and talent will make him a favorite for years to come, if he is now given the right stories.

System Assures Efficiency

Culver City Studios Systematized to Coordinate Work of Big Plant

NOTHING more illustrative has been published of the present-day stabilization of the motion-picture industry than recently prepared exposition of the production methods of the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation. While the trade as a whole—producers and exhibitors,—have long abandoned the conception that the cinema profession is a prime example of extravagance and romantic wastefulness, the public still clings to the notion that a motion-picture magazine cares as little for money in the running of his department as a Russian Duke cares for Bolshevik doctrines.

The Goldwyn exposition, however, shows that the industry in question is one of the most stable and systemized units of our national commerce, instead of being a riot of surplus riches.

The Goldwyn studios at Culver City, California, form one of the finest examples of a gigantic organization in frictionless, revenue-producing running gear. So many elements enter into the making of pictures, which represent, after all, all the known industries, life habits, histories and fiction of every recognized country, that much time and the trying out of numerous theories prefaced the present plan of organization, which was originated by Abraham Lehr, vice-president in charge of production at the West Coast studios.

The experiments in organization developed a plan by which the many departments of the studio automatically communicated with the man in control through four channels. A head was placed over each of the sub-divisions, which were in turn grouped under the supervision of the four executive heads, of which Mr. Lehr is chief.

These executives and their duties are: H. E. Edgington, administrative aid to the vice-president and supervising accounting, property, construction, electrical, purchasing, transportation and wardrobe departments and the commissary, or restaurant; M. D. Gardner, production aid to the vice-president, supervising production, casting, laboratory, publicity, and still picture departments; J. G. Hawks, managing editor, supervising editorial, article, and cutting departments; and A. C. Gibbons, chief art director. Each of the various departments supervised by these executive heads has its own particular manager.

Tucker Praises First Compson Production

Following the announcement that the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation will distribute the products of the recently formed "Beta Compson Pictures" organization, comes a significant tribute to the first Compson production, "Prisoners of Love," to be released by Goldwyn.

George Loane Tucker, who directed "The Miracle Man" and who is in no way connected with the present Compson company, recently viewed "Prisoners of Love" at a private showing. Following the screening of the photoplay his enthusiasm was such that he wrote a letter of appreciation to Alfred A. Grasso, manager of the Compson productions, in which he declared the star has given in her new picture "One of the greatest performances as yet seen on the screen."

"Edgar" an Established Screen-Character

In a statement just issued by the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, "Edgar," the boy-hero of Booth Tarkington's popular stories which are now being picturized by Goldwyn, is held up as one of those personalities in literature that have established a universal appeal for all admirers of likable characters in fiction. Here's what Goldwyn has to say about the now-famed screen character:

"And now it is Edgar—his last name is Pomeroy—who steps forth to take his place among the band. Steps forth is right, for Edgar makes his entrance in motion pictures produced by Goldwyn Pictures Corporation. And with his entrance, is given the lie direct to all those critics who have said that the screen could never give us real people.

Edgar is your own eleven year old son or if you are childless, he is the boy who lives next door. Neither the best boy in the town—nor the worst is Booth Tarkington's way of introducing him. Edgar is the boy you were twenty or thirty or forty years ago—or he is the boy who used to pull your curls and make faces at you and call you and the other girls "cry-babies."

"Being a normal, healthy boy, Edgar is always getting into trouble and he is always surprised, even perplexed, at the way his conduct, which seems perfectly natural to him, lets him in for scoldings and punishment. Grown-ups with their strange standards, are something he has given up trying to understand. He simply accepts their peculiarities and tries to dodge their condemnation, however unsuccessfully.

Edgar, of course, being the hero of these two-reel comedies, is the center around which the plays revolve, but he is not the only real person in the pictures—not by a long shot, as he would express it. Of course he has a gang—to say nothing of Alice, his little sweetheart. Every child who romps through the picture has a distinct individuality. The grown-ups—the father, mother, teacher, minister, young lady sister, and Iris the colored cook—are just as true to life as is the young boy who lives and moves and has his being among them.

"Twelve of these two-reel come-

Goldwyn Is Giving Special Attention to the Matter of Continuities

RECOGNIZING the importance of the photoplay continuity, Goldwyn is prepared to start the new season with an editorial department made up of a distinguished group of literary craftsmen. Headed by J. G. Hawks, managing editor, it includes such well known writers as Thompson Buchanan, Clayton Hamilton, Louis Sherwin, Elmer Rice, Charles Kenyon, E. A. Bingham, Gerald C. Duffy, Bessie F. Haas, J. E. Nash and Arthur F. Statter.

Of these Mr. Hawks heads the list as regards experience in photoplay editorial work. He is one of the most skilled continuity writers in the game—a veteran of his craft—and under his direction Goldwyn has established and is maintaining an unusually high standard in photoplay stories.

Thompson Buchanan, associate editor of the department, is a well-known writer for the stage; his "Civilian Clothes" is now playing on Broadway. Among his other plays may be mentioned "The Intruder," "A Woman's Way," "The Cub" and "Lulu's Husbands."

Elmer Rice was one of the first playwrights to introduce motion picture technique into the theatre. It will be remembered that "On Trial," one of his earliest plays, and which, incidentally, first brought him recognition, opens with the courtroom scene and then returns to the previous action. This is equivalent to the "flashback" that is so frequently made use of on the screen.

Clayton Hamilton, who has but recently joined the Goldwyn scenario department under a long-term contract to write original stories and continuities, is one of the country's leading authorities on the drama. He is also a contributor to the Encyclopedia Americana, the New International Year Book and to many magazines.

Another member of Goldwyn's scenario department, who is a noted writer for the stage, is Charles Kenyon, author of "Kindling." E. A. Bingham, continuity writer, was formerly a newspaper man. He has also been a frequent contributor of short stories to the magazines and has written two novels, "The Heart of Thunder Mountain" and "Art Thou the Man?"

The continuity for Octavus Roy Cohen's original story, "Dollars and Sense," was written by Gerald C. Duffy, who also did the scripts for "Officer 666" and "What Happened to Rosa," starring Mabel Normand.

Two Ben Ames Williams stories, "The Man Who Had Everything" and "Old Hutch," were prepared for the screen by Arthur F. Statter, and "Madame X" from the famous stage play, by J. E. Nash. Miss Haas is doing the scripts for Booth Tarkington's "Edgar" comedies.

dies are to be presented. Those already named are "Edgar and Teacher's Pet," "Edgar's Hamlet," "Edgar's Jonah Day," "Edgar Takes the Cake" and "Edgar's Sunday Courtship."

"Johnny Jones is the Edgar. He looks the part exactly, and in addition he has proved himself an excellent young actor. Lucille Rickson plays the part of Alice Littlefield in an engaging manner, and Buddy Messenger has the role of her brother and Edgar's chum. Others in the cast are Marie Dunn, Virginia Madison, Margaret McComber, Lucretia Harris, Ellison Manners, John Cosar and Fred Moore. The comedies have been produced under the direction of E. Mason Hopper and Mason Litson.

Goldwyn to Release 26 Capitol Comedies

THE Goldwyn Distributing Corporation announces that during the ensuing year, the National Film Corporation of America, which produces Capitol Comedy two-reelers, will again make twenty-six comedies for release through the twenty-two exchanges of the Goldwyn organization. The producing and releasing plans will be similar to those of the past two years.

Mark Goldaine, who has directed most of the Capitol Comedies, will alternate this year with Harry Edwards in directing the Flanagan and Edward comedies and forces now in process of production. Mr. Edwards has directed the first five comedies. Mr. Goldaine will direct the sixth, which will be known as "Artistic Enemies."

Another addition to the Capitol Comedy plans is the association of Harry Wulze with the organization as a writer of original two-reel comedies.

The Capitol Comedies will be released every second week through the Goldwyn Distributing Corporation.

Governor of Bay State Sees Scenes Filmed

Governor Calvin Coolidge of Massachusetts, vice presidential nominee of the Republican party, who recently established himself as a champion of the freedom of the screen by his vetoing of the state censorship bill in the Bay State, was an interested spectator of the first scenes taken by "Bobby" Ross, directing Tom Carrigan in the "Nick Carter" series.

The Governor accompanied the film party to one of the big Boston docks and watched, for the first time, he said, the "shooting" of a picture scene. He proved "camera-shy," however, when it was proposed that he face the camera's eye for a few moments. He promised Mr. Broadwell, president of the Broadwell Productions, which is producing the "Nick Carter" series, to visit the studios at Medford, Mass., as soon as he could secure sufficient time off from the exacting duties of State.

Howard Thurston Goes In for Production

Howard Thurston, the magician, who has organized the Thurston Pictures Inc. under the laws of New York State, has decided to begin operations at the Hal Benedict Studios at Village Point, L. I. The first picture he will make, and which he will personally supervise, will be based on psychic phenomena, the results of his own experience, it is stated.

Mr. Thurston has engaged a director-general for all his pictures. Mr. George Kelson, whose work in pictures for the Canadian government, for W. A. Brady, World Film, Mayflower and others is well known. The assistant director will be Leon d'Ussau, formerly of the International Film Co.

Shipman's Big Feature Going Big Abroad

"Back to God's Country" Ernest Shipman's picture of the far North, is having an enormous success in every country in which it is being shown, says the statement from the David P. Howells office, which follows:

"In Yokohama an admission price of two dollars per seat was charged and the picture played to crowded houses. So great was the demand for the production in both South Africa and Australia that extra prints had to be supplied in order that the numerous bookings could be properly filled."

Chandlee and Laub in Free-Lance Field

Harry Chandlee and William B. Laub are themselves authority for the statement that they have not signed and do not expect to sign any contract giving their exclusive services to any producing organization. Chandlee and Laub state that they expect to continue to definitely accept pictures for editing and titling for their established clientele and that they do not contemplate withdrawing from the free-lance field.

Equity Names Production "Whispering Devils" Stars Rosemary Theby and Conway Tearle

THE second of a series of special productions by Equity Pictures Corporation, of which the first was "Silk Husbands and Calico Wives" with House Peters as the star, is to appear under the title of "Whispering Devils," a six reel feature starring Conway Tearle and Rosemary Theby. In the cast are Sam Southern, Esther Ralston, Warren Millers, Lenore Lynard, Dr. Walker Byrdell and Hal Wilson. John M. Vosell is the director. The story is an adaptation of the novel of Henry Arthur Jones, "Michael and His Last Angel."

The mighty battle of a man against a modern Lucifer of the Land is said to be one of the unique chapters in the photodramatic art. The sensational rise of Conway

Tearle, to the forefront of stardom can be justly ascribed to his splendid performance in "Whispering Devils," a production that makes strenuous demands on his interpretative powers, as also to his former effort in "The Forbidden Woman," where he played the male principal opposite Clara Kimball Young.

To those who have grown tired of cut and dried plots with logical transparent conclusions and liberal doses of sobs and simpers, "Whispering Devils" will, it is said, be as welcome as rain in a desert. It is a drama of flesh and blood, not of puppets and paper-dolls. The imposing setting, in keeping with the emotional portrayal is marked by a sweeping dignity and grandeur that rivets the eye and compels unreserved attention.

First Serial Print Arrives "Tarzan" Company Well Up on Its Production Schedule, Says Report

A PRINT of the prologue and first episode of the "Son of Tarzan," the big animal and jungle serial which is being produced by the National Film Corporation for David P. Howells, arrived in New York last week. Director Harry J. Reyer writes that the company is well up on its production schedule, and the episodes will come along regularly from now on. Great difficulty is being found in selecting just the right kind of a girl for the part of Meriem, the heroine of the story, because of the hazardous character of the part, it is stated.

"The Son of Tarzan" is considered by Edgar Rice Burroughs, the author of the Tarzan stories, to be the best of the series for picture purposes as it not only contains the thrilling jungle action that has characterized the other stories but contains a beautiful and at the same time wildly exciting love story. The son of Tarzan early in his jungle career rescues a beautiful young girl from a predatory band of Arabs, and the two grow up together in the jungle, battling daily for their lives against both animal and man.

"The difficulty of finding the right and proper girl for a part as hazardous as this can be readily appreciated," says a statement from the offices of the David P. Howells office. "She must have all things be beautiful, and beautiful in her own right, because she will not have the advantage of stylish and fashionable clothes to aid her natural charms. As Tarzan's companion in the jungle she is garbed only in a short leopard skin and such a costume can hardly be considered as an aid to beauty."

"In order to find the best girl most beautifully endowed by nature to fill the requirements of this difficult role Director Harry Reyer has started an elimination contest. Up to the present time several hundred have applied and in each case Director Reyer has made a test picture. He has now about 6000 feet of tests and is still looking for the girl who will fill in every particular his ideal conception of the part. He is being assisted in this work by Edgar Rice Burroughs and Roy Sommerly who made the adaptation of the book."

Big Future Prophesied for Short Subjects

Jack and Harry Cohn, producers of the two reel series of Hallroom Boys Comedies, in which "Percy and Ferdie" are featured, are very enthusiastic regarding the future of theirs and other short subjects.

"With the announcement of the 1921 programs by the big distributors it can clearly be seen," state the Cohns, "that many of these companies are planning to discontinue their short subject releases. This is a decided change for the better in so far as the short subject producers are concerned."

"An exhibitor must have comedies. He has been in the habit of booking his comedies when he booked his bigger features. He did this because it was convenient to book them at the same place. He did not select, but took what was offered him."

"With the throwing off the list of these short subjects by these distributing organizations the independent exchanges are going to benefit tremendously. They are going to enjoy twice as much patronage from the bigger theatres as they did previously. Hallroom Boys comedies and other high-class wholesome mirthquakes are going to sell to these better theatres on their merits. Houses which never were offered them before are now going to seek them out, as they will offer comedies and short subjects of like calibre."

Arrow Sells Territory on Two Features

Last week the state rights in two of the most important territories were contracted for on "Woman's Man" and "The Golden Trail" two of Arrow's feature productions, according to an Arrow statement. Walter A. Baier, president of the exchange by the same name in Milwaukee contracted for the state rights to the two pictures for the Wisconsin territory.

F. O. Burke of the Midland Film Co., of Minneapolis was another visitor and buyer at the Arrow offices last week. He contracted for the two pictures named for three states, namely: Minnesota, and North and South Dakota.

Montgomery Touring Hallmark Exchanges

George N. Montgomery, general sales manager Hallmark Pictures Corporation, is on an extended trip through the Middle West, visiting Hallmark Exchanges in the special interest of the handling of the distribution of the series of fifty-two recreated since-Triangle productions to be distributed by Hallmark during the year.

Producers Feature Service Gets Comedies

The Producers Feature Service, Inc., with offices at 729 Seventh Ave., has acquired the rights to the Al St. John Comedies for New York and northern New Jersey. It is announced, following negotiations with Warner Brothers who are the producers.

Equity Prepares Good Musical Scores

A proof of Equity's pains in the direction of good musical scores was evinced two months ago, when Andre Dippel, the Chicago impresario and symphony conductor expressed his appreciation of the fine musical accompaniment prepared for "The Soul of Raphael," and made the announcement that that picture would make an excellent opera. It will be recalled that negotiations were immediately closed between Equity and Mr. Dippel for the preparation of a libretto for the contemplated opera. There is no doubt that the expert orchestration prepared for that production influenced the impresario's decision to adapt "For the Soul of Raphael" to opera.

Territories Sold on "Briggs Comedies"

Chadwick Pictures Corporation reports the sale of the Briggs Comedies as follows:—New York State and Northern New Jersey to Merit Film Corporation of New York; Eastern Pennsylvania and Southern New Jersey to Consolidated Film Exchange of Philadelphia; Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia to Exhibitors Film Co. of Pittsburgh; Michigan, Ohio and Kentucky to Standard Film Service of Cleveland; Illinois and Indiana to Celebrated Players Film Corporation of Chicago; Maryland, Delaware, District of Columbia & Virginia to Merit Film Corporation of Baltimore.

Sales Announced for "His Pajama Girl"

Mr. C. A. Meade, secretary and sales-manager of C. B. Price Co., Inc., returned on Monday from a trip to Ohio where he exhibited the latest Price release, "Billie Rhodes in His Pajama Girl." Mr. Meade sold the Ohio rights to this production to Messrs. E. Mandelbaum, president, and Walter E. Lust, Manager of the First National Exhibitors Circuit of Cleveland, Ohio.

Eugene Perry in Charge of Frisco Filming

Eugene L. Perry, manager of the Oakland T and D theatre for the Turner and Dahmken interests, acted as general superintendent of all picture-taking at the Democratic convention in San Francisco. He had a small army of cameramen under his supervision and held the exclusive rights to all motion picture work, scenes from which are now being given country-wide circulation, it is stated.

Grace Davison at Work as Independent Star

Work on Miss Grace Davison's first picture as an individual star was begun last week under the direction of Charles T. Horan. It is being produced by the J. G. Pictures Corp.

Production Plans Announced

CONTRACTS for the distribution through independent exchanges of twenty-six super-special productions a year have been closed by Fine Arts Pictures, Inc., it was announced this week. The new producing company will start production work on its first picture immediately, and it will be ready for distribution by September 30th. The pictures will be released at the rate of one every two weeks.

Arrangements have been made for the screen-rights on a number of popular, timely stories, which are bound to prove successful, says Fine Arts, and which should prove a revelation in the field of independent production and distribution.

Fine Arts has issued the following announcement concerning its picture plans:

"Arrangements have been made for the purchase of one of the largest studios in the East, and five companies will work simultaneously on the same number of productions. This will guarantee a consistent product to be distributed by Fine Arts and is bound to relieve to a great extent the difficulty now faced by the independent buyers in purchasing pictures of the highest calibre.

"The pictures will be directed by men whose past records prove their ability and by men who have some of the biggest successes of the past five years to their credit. The combination of screen stars of unsurpassed excellence, directors whose ability is unquestioned and stories written by leading writers of the day is bound to prove a sensation in the independent field."

"It has been evident from the start that bigger and better pictures must be put at the disposal of the independent distributor if he is to remain in the field," said Murray W. Garsson, president of Fine Arts, in speaking of the new enterprise, "and that is exactly what we are going to do.

"We are not going into the producing business, but we are offering the producer a new and suc-ful outlet, both to the satisfaction of the producer and to ourselves.

"There is a big demand for real box office attractions on the independent market. That has been proved beyond possible doubt by the enthusiasm with which the comedy drama 'Up In Mary's Attic' has been received and by the demand for it from all parts of the country.

"A good picture now and then is not enough. The independent buyer must have good pictures continuously to realize the utmost from his endeavors and to build up the good will of his exhibitors clientele. To provide him with this product is the object of our endeavors.

"The fact that we have the right of rejection on any picture that does not come up to the standard that we think it should is a safety guarantee for the state right buyer. If we are going to stay in the business we must provide the kind of pictures that are in demand, therefore we could not afford to risk even one production of the series that was not of the highest standard of excellence.

"Our new contract calls for the first production of the series to be ready not later than September 30 and one every two weeks for one year thereafter. The pictures are to be purchased outright and are to be disposed of at a legitimate profit, which should result in a greater success for the state right buyer and to the ultimate economy of the exhibitor.

"Between now and September 30 we will distribute a number of first class productions, announcements of which will be made in the near future. Each and every production will be backed by a complete "direct to the exhibitor," advertising campaign and this campaign will not be stopped as soon as all the territory is disposed of. It will be continued in order to assure the success of the territorial distributor, which in turn assures the success of the picture."

Schlank Plans Active Year Independent Producer Will Add Two Units to Forces During Year

AT least two more producing units will be included in the production activities of Morris R. Schlank during the coming year. This statement was made by Mr. Schlank who arrived in New York last week. Mr. Schlank, who produces the Hank Mann comedies, which are distributed by Arrow, planned to spend at least one week in New York making plans for the coming year. He made his headquarters at the Arrow offices in the Candler building.

Although reticent to disclosing in detail his plans for the coming year he volunteered information to the effect that his plans were to keep three companies busy all the time. This he stated did not mean more pictures, but better ones. "In fact,"

Mr. Schlank said, "I will decrease the number of pictures. My schedule now calls for eight more of the series of twenty-six two-reel Hank Mann comedies and when they have been finished a new schedule will be made. It will call for one Hank Mann a month and one comedy a month from each of the other companies. This will enable me to offer to the public some of the most successful comedy attractions made."

As a producer he is in touch with the independent field almost exclusively. He keeps a close watch on conditions and the demands of the exhibitors as well as the public. He expressed the opinion that the independent field is about to enter the biggest year in its history.

A. W. Alley Stroheim's Art-Director

Alfred W. Alley, one of the best technicians in the film industry, has been appointed by Erich Von Stroheim as the feature art director for that director-star's productions. In order to accept the offer from Universal City, Mr. Alley resigned as supervising art director for Metro Pictures Corporation, a responsible position he had held for six months.

Mr. Alley's status in his profession is indicated by the fact that foremost art designers for the screen, composing the membership of the Motion Picture Art Directors' Association, elected him president of that exclusive organization.

Tom Bret Is Writing Reelcraft Titles

Tom Bret, well-known picture title-writer, is at present laboring for the Reelcraft Pictures Corporation preparing the titles for the two-reel comedy productions of "Buggins," in which Leon Errol is the featured star, and which will be released as a part of the Royal Comedy Series now being prepared for the exclusive Short Subject program of Reelcraft.

Tom Bret has won considerable notice as a title-writer, and he is said by Reelcraft Pictures Corporation to have a record of more pictures to his credit than any other writer in the independent field.

Picture's Song-Number Is Put on Records

The new song sensation, "Up In Mary's Attic," based on the photoplay of the same name, now being distributed by Fine Arts Pictures, Inc., through independent exchanges, will be distributed throughout the country on phonograph records, says that organization.

Speaking of the novel tie-up, M. W. Garsson, president of Fine Arts said:

"In addition to this direct advertising for the picture it will give the exhibitors an excellent opportunity to tie-up with the various phonograph stores in his city."

Endorses State Right Comedy Release

"I believe that 'Up In Mary's Attic' is the biggest box office attraction released on the independent market this year."

This is, says Fine Arts Pictures, Inc., the indorsement given the new comedy drama by T. A. Burke, of the Midland Film Company, of Minneapolis, Minnesota, who this week purchased territorial rights on the production for Minnesota, North Dakota, South Dakota and Wisconsin.

Lewyn Gets Good Shots for "Screen Snapshots"

Jack Cohn, who, with Louis Lewyn produces "Screen Snapshots," the "all-star" single reel bi-monthly feature, reports that he is securing some very exceptional material for this novelty, which, aside from its "star" value, will be of unusual interest to the public.

Louis Lewyn, he reports, recently filmed the making of an underwater picture. By special effort he was enabled to catch the cameraman at this peculiar submarine task.

"Carmen" In Third Week

Remains the Chief Attraction at Moss's Big Broadway Theatre

"A BURLESQUE on Carmen," the last of the Chaplins, released by Victor Kremer, was the chief attraction at B. S. Moss's Broadway theatre, Broadway and 41st Street, New York, for the last two weeks and remains there for an indefinite run. While the balance of the program at the Broadway has been changed, "Carmen" more than keeps its own, says a report from the Kremer offices.

"Just as 'Carmen' is now crowding the B. S. Moss theatres 'Skinner's Dress Suit' will do the same to exhibitors everywhere," Ira H. Simmons, the general manager of New York Independent Masterfilms, tells his many friends, and he feels the record made at the Broadway theatre fully justifies him in making the statement. These two star productions mark the wind up of Victor Kremer's big list of re-created attractions.

And now Mr. Kremer has perfected arrangements to produce his own attractions which will be started in earnest next month. The first will be a series of twenty-six two-reel comedies and then a program of special Westerns, and six big dramas each six reels in length will also be made.

A statement from the Victor Kremer offices announces that while Mr. Kremer is not desirous of interfering with established independent exchanges in territories which have created for themselves a desirable following among exhibitors, yet it must be borne in mind that the distribution of the productions must be made under all circumstances. "If forced to open exchanges in each territory," says the statement, "it will be done that the exhibitors may receive that which they so greatly need."

all of Victor Kremer productions, report great progress and are getting ready with an increased force of salesmen to launch a powerful campaign, it is stated.

Real Accident Made a Part of Picture

The Art-O-Graf Film Company reports one of its cameramen, while "shooting" the swift descent of three big cars down a mountain-side, got a view of a real "spill," when one of the cars became unmanageable and swerved into a wash-out at one side of the road. Except for some minor bruises, none of the passengers are said to have been hurt. The car suffered considerably, it is stated, as a result of the impact. The scene of the accident will be incorporated as a part of Art-O-Graf's latest production, "Out of the Depths."

Inter-Ocean Buys Picture

Has Foreign Rights to "Whispering Devils"

In keeping with its recently announced policy of obtaining bigger and better productions for distribution in foreign film markets, Inter-Ocean Film Corporation announces this week the purchase of "Whispering Devils," the third of the Equity super-specials for exclusive foreign distribution.

Gus Schlesinger, manager of the Department of Foreign Film Sales of Inter-Ocean Film Corporation and Joseph Schmitzer, president and general manager of Equity Pictures Corporation, who negotiated the contract has been signed.

The first intimation that Inter-Ocean had taken over the exclusive foreign rights to "Whispering Devils" came in the following announcement from Gus Schlesinger of the Inter-Ocean organization:

"Inter-Ocean Film Corporation has acquired for exclusive foreign distribution the rights to "Whispering Devils" starring Conway Tearle and Rosemary Theby. This is the latest cinema acquisition to the imposing array of American productions which this organization is bending every effort to acquire for distribution in foreign territories.

"Whispering Devils" is the interest-arousing title given to the screen adaptation of Henry Arthur Jones' play, "Michael and His Lost Angel." The story which had a successful vogue on the stage and in novelized form is too well known to need repetition here.

"We have every reason to believe that "Whispering Devils" will prove a success in foreign countries. In point of story, cast and direction it is most satisfactory. But what is even of far more importance to us is the fact that the theme in the story is universally known and discussed. This means that the exploitation suggestions prepared on an elaborate scale in America can be duplicated with effective results in foreign countries. And the value of this phase of the production is not to be underestimated.

"We are going to push this production as much as possible in foreign markets with an advertising and publicity campaign of far-reaching significance. We are also at present preparing an extensive sales campaign which will embrace every motion picture territory in the world."

Commenting upon the sale of "Whispering Devils" to Inter-Ocean, Mr. Schmitzer of the Equity forces, said: "We are happy that the Inter-Ocean distributing organization has taken over the foreign releasing rights to our latest special production, and we have every reason to believe that they will dispose of the foreign territorial rights in a manner which will more than do justice to our latest offering."

Reelcraft to Enlarge Producing Facilities

That production activities of Reelcraft Inc. are to be materially enlarged was made known by general manager of production Nat Spitzer this week. This work will be started immediately upon the arrival of Milton L. Cohn president of Reelcraft who is expected on the coast within the next ten days. At the present time two companies are working at the Reelcraft studios. The Alice Howell comedies company has been transferred to Hollywood from Chicago and production is going forward under the direction of Dick Smith. The other company at work is that headed by Billy Franey.

"Other plans are now being formed," Mr. Spitzer stated to a News representative, "and when these are completed we will materially enlarge the scope of Reelcraft Inc."

The first production according to Mr. Hemmer will be ready for release in the very near future.

One of the thrills made this week for the coming Larry Seemon comedy was climbing from a motorcycle traveling at seventy-five miles an hour on to a rope ladder suspended from an airplane. Five cameras were used on the scene.

William Duncan is spending his vacation between serials in getting his parents pleasantly located in the new residence he purchased for them in Hollywood and before returning to the studio the director actor will make a tour of Southern California ostensibly for pleasure but with the intention of selecting locations for future productions.

UNIVERSAL

UNIVERSAL CITY for the past few days has been thrown open to the public because of the great number of prominent visitors in Los Angeles. On one day there were more than 8,000 visiting Shriners entertained at the big U plant and for several other days the delegations consisted of San Francisco Democratic convention delegates and their friends, in many instances including bands.

Val Paul who has been with Universal for the past five or six years, first serving as an actor, playing juvenile and leading man roles and for the past eighteen months serving as assistant director, was this week promoted to the position of megaphone wielder and his first subject will be that featuring Harry Carey and titled "Sundown Slim." Director Paul will have a big cast of western players who have been seen in a number of Carey productions and the subject will introduce a new leading woman for Carey, who is to be known on the screen as Mignonne. The story was written by H. H. Knibbs, who is author of Carey's recent success, "Overland Red."

The technical staff is building four blocks of San Francisco Chinatown which are to be used by Director Tod Browning in the Priscilla Dean subject being filmed under the title of "Outside the Law."

Two Universal productions have been completed so far as the making of scenes. These are "In Folly's Trail," directed by R. S. Sturgeon and vehicle for Carmel Meyers, and "Hitchin' Post," directed by Jack Ford with Frank Mayo as lead. Jacques Jaccard continues at work on short Canadian north woods subjects in the vicinity of Bear Valley and this week shipped to the studio all negative for "When the Devil Laughs" which features Virginia Faire and Leonard Clapham.

Preparation work is going forward on scripts for three new subjects. Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran have the film version of Edgar Franklyn's story "Once a Plumber" almost ready for filming and Director Reeves Eason is working with the manuscript department on the Edith Roberts circus story, "Out of the Sky." Script for the first few episodes for the serial "The Queen of Diamonds" to feature Eileen Sedgwick is nearing completion. These subjects together with the coming Eric Von Stroheim feature "Foolish Wives" will be put in production within the next ten days.

Eddie Polo has made a confession that the story for his next serial to be titled "Circus Life" will consist of a number of circumstances and experiences which befell him while he was working under the big top, Polo having spent a number of years with a circus. Polo will direct the serial himself with the assistance of Lester Manton.

Hoot Gibson with Leo Maloney as director is filming a two reel western titled "A Gamblin' Fool" and Horace Davies is making a domestic comedy with Bartine Burkett and Howard Austin titled "Who Is Crazy Now?"

David E. Epstein, who served as assistant to Miss Loring, has been placed in charge of the department.

News Notes from the West Coast

By J. C. JESSEN

Lyons and Moran will introduce a new feature in their coming production, "Once a Plumber," by each of the comedians having two sweethearts instead of one as was the case in previous subjects. The four leading women selected are Lillian Hackett, Edna Mac Wilson, Florence Lawson and Ethel Ritchie. The Lyons-Moran second release, "La La Lucille," is now in the final editing stages and when in the nine thousand foot length was given the approval of a very critical audience made up of players, scenario writers, directors and executives of Universal City.

While in Los Angeles during the past week en route to San Francisco to attend the Democratic National convention as representative for the McClure Syndicate, Fannie Hurst, the magazine writer and novelist, made a contract with the Universal Film Manufacturing Company to write a special story suitable for the talents of Priscilla Dean and this story will no doubt be used as a vehicle for Miss Dean upon the completion of her present subject, "Outside the Law."

INCE

PLANS at the Thomas H. Ince studios made known this week provide for the addition of two more producing units to begin work within the next two or three weeks. It is understood these units will begin the filming of the first Ince release for Associated Producers Distribution organization.

The final scenes are being made for the Ince special "Beau Revel" and this film will be ready for the editing department's final work within a week. Cast composed of Margaret Livingston, Wade Boteler, Edith Yorke, Charles Mailles and Molly McConnell has been selected to support Douglas MacLean in the Charles Belmont Davis story "Johnny Comes Marching Home."

Fire on one of the Ince stages caused almost total destruction of one of the handsome sets built for "Beau Revel" but spread of the flames was prevented by the Ince fire department under the direction of Capt. George Minnick. The fire was discovered by Director John G. Wray about 10:30 Saturday evening.

The last Fuid Bennett Ince production titled "I Wonder If" is being edited and although not due for release for several weeks it will be completed within the next week. Miss Bennett together with her director husband Fred Niblo is in New York completing negotiations for future releases and the general understanding in Los Angeles is that future productions will be made at Universal City.

After viewing the final print of "The Jail Bird" featuring Douglas MacLean, Thomas H. Ince this week issued the statement that it is the best picture the young star has made since the release of "Twenty Three and a Half Hours' Leave." This subject was made under the working title of "Shakespearean Clancy."

Special national exploitation campaign is being prepared for the Thomas H. Ince special "Home Span Folks" which will introduce Floyd Hughes as an Ince star. Release date of this subject is not known.

METRO

THE Metro plant presents unusual activity this week as all producing units are at work on productions, the past week having seen two new stories started on the stages. One of these is the all star play "Someone in the House" from the stage play of the same name which is being made under the direction of John Ince. Metro officials believe they have an exceptionally strong cast for this picture. Edmund Lowe who has played in numerous Metro stage productions was brought from New York to play the leading man in this, following his most recent engagement in Norma Talmadge's production "The Woman Gives." Leatrice Joy who has played in previous Metro productions and is featured in the coming George Loon Tucker production "Ladies Must Live" will be the leading woman. Helen Weir will take the part of Molly Brent and other principals announced are Edward Connelly and William Irving who appeared in Nazimova's "Heart of a Child" and "Billions." This story has to do with a safe blower known as the "Dancer" as he goes into other people's safes by attending social functions. To provide correct detail Metro officials secured the services of a former professional soup man from the East who spent a week at the studio teaching the players tricks of the trade.

The complete cast for "Body and Soul" which is to star Alice Lake is announced to be composed of Stuart Holmes, Myrtle Owen, J. Farrell McDonald, Carroll Gerald and others and Charles Swickard formerly a member of the Metro directorial forces has been engaged to direct the making of this picture. "Body and Soul" gives Miss Lake a Jekyll-Hyde part in the psychological drama, many of the scenes of which are laid in Paris. The play is from the stage production by William Hurburt prepared for the screen by Hayden Talbot and Marc Robbins.

An art collection said to be valued at $100,000 has been secured by Metro for use in a number of scenes in "Hearts Are Trumps." The collection consists of both paintings and pieces of sculpture, the most highly valued one being worth $7,000. Director Rex Ingram plans to complete this feature within the next few days, the last scene to be made being that of an alpine avalanche which will be taken in the foot hills north of Hollywood. The complete cast is composed of Franchette Billington, Abbie Terry, Joseph Kington, Frank Brownlee, Thomas Jefferson, Binsley Shaw, Edward Connelly and Norman Kennedy.

Edward Sloman has been selected to direct the first Doraldino Metro picture but prior to the time of filming that will direct the making of a third Jack London story titled "The Star Rover." Thelma Percy has been engaged to enact one of the leading roles in this and other principals selected for the cast are Dwight Crunden, Jack Carlyle and Doc Cannon.

Viola Dana under the direction of Dallas Fitzgerald is working on "Blackmail" and Mae Allison is playing in "Are All Men Alike?"

In preparing for the first Doraldino production Metro has engaged Walter Kolomonok and his Hawaiian orchestra to furnish music during the filming of all scenes as well as to take part in a number where the script calls for Hawaiian musicians. This play titled "The Passion Fruit" will be in production early in July.

The engagement of two additional writers to be permanent members of the Metro scenario staff is announced this week, the writers being Waldemar Young and Hayden Talbot. Young has been identified with the west coast industry for the past three years, writing for Universal, Goldwyn, Luce and Lewis B. Mayer and is author of Mary Pickford's latest release "Suds." He has been assigned by Bayard Veiller to prepare continuity for the Edgar Selwyn play "The Double Cross" which will in all probability be an all star production. The other new permanent member of the staff is Hayden Talbot who recently completed the adaptation for "Body and Soul." Talbot has written a number of original plays for the screen, the best known being "Matrimony," and is author of several stage plays, the most recent being "Her Bachelor Husband" which will be produced in New York this fall.

Benny Singer has been appointed casting director at the Metro studio following affiliation with Triangle, Keystone, Katherine MacDonald and other studios.

The title for the first Buster Keaton Metro comedy will be "One Week" and this film has been completed in every respect and forwarded East. Director Eddie Cline and Jean Havez are now preparing story for the second release and this subject it is expected will be started within the next few days. Sybil Seely is to continue as leading woman for Keaton.

Announcement is made by Mayflower of the title selected for the sixth and last subject directed for Mayflower by Allan Dwan which is to be known as "The Sin of Martha Qued." In this Mary Therman plays the title role with Niles Welch as leading man. Dwan is doing the final editing in this subject which will be finished within a week.

George Loan Tucker is doing the final editing on "Ladies Must Live" and the Sidney A. Franklyn production featuring Sylvia Breamer in "Athalie" has been shipped to the New York office of Mayflower.

The first statement to be made by George Loan Tucker respecting the differences with Mayflower officers was made this week and was to the effect that the Tucker-Mayflower combination is one of happiness and harmony.

The second release of the Dial Film Company for W. W. Hodkinson was completed this week by director Roy Clements of the Brunton studio and is titled "The Tiger's Coat." This film play is adapted from the Elizabeth Dejeans novel of the same name. This author is also responsible for "The House of Fame" and "Life Builders," which will probably be filmed at a later date. The cast for "Tiger's Coat" includes Myrtle Stedman, Lawson Butts, Tina Madotte, Jaquel Lanoe and Helen Sullivan.

Hewling Mumpers, vice president of the B. B. Hampton company with headquarters at the Brunton studio, left for New York this week to complete negotiations that have been carried on by mail for the National exploitation and distribution of future Hampton productions.

William Allen White, author and editor, spent several days with B. B.

Hampton at the Brunton studios this week in conference respecting the production of the White novel, "A Certain Rich Man."

Victor Bateman, former stage star who played in Shakespearean roles with Salvini and Mansfield and for two years was starred on Broadway in Brady productions, has been engaged by Robert Brunton to play an important role in his first all star production, "The Devil To Pay."

"The Double Adventure" serial company being directed by W. S. Van Dyke for Robert Brunton, is now at work on the ninth episode. The leads for this are Charles Hutchinson and Josie Sedgwick.

The Selznick organization report the completion of the Olive Thomas subject "Nobody," directed by Larry Trimble and the Selznick star has gone to New York to begin work on future productions.

GOLDWYN

FUTURE plans of the Goldwyn California producing organizations were made known this week when information was given out concerning the activity of members of the scenario department respecting the preparation of scripts for future productions. Charles Kenyon is working on the Graham Moffett play "Bunty Pulls the Strings" which is to be directed by Reginald Barker; Elmer Rice, author of "The Trial," is writing continuity for Madge Kennedy's next play "The Scoop;" E. A. Bingham is preparing the Peter Clarke McFarland story "The Guyle of Women" which will be the next vehicle for Will Rogers; Arthur F. Statter is writing script from the Rupert Hughes novel "The Canavan" to be directed by Harry Beaumont; J. E. Nash is preparing script of "The Concert" by Herman Bahr which is to be an all star production directed by Frank Lloyd and Barbara Kent is at work on scenario for "An African Interlude" which will probably be an all star production. "Stop Thief" the Tom Moore picture was finished last week by Harry Beaumont and with the exception of the Normand company making "Head Over Heels" under the direction of Victor Schertzinger all Goldwyn units are at work on exterior location. Frank Lloyd and the "Great Lover" company are in San Francisco; Director Al Green, Jack Pickford and "Just Out of College" company are in Southern California mountains; Director Reginald Barker and company filming "The Black Hawk Pawl" are at Santa Cruz Islands waiting for a vicious sea storm, that correct scenes may be filmed for one of the sequences of this play, and the Will Rogers company is working on "Old Hutch" at Wilmington, California.

CHRISTIE

THIS week saw the completion of the first of the Robertson-Cole series of Arsene Lupine detective stories which featured Wedgewood Nowell and was directed by Scott Sidney. The title of the first release is "813." Continuity has been prepared for the second of this series but title has not been announced.

Director general Al E. Christie has begun the actual filming of "So Long Letty." The entire cast was assembled for first this week Dorothy De Vere who has been featured in Christie comedies for the past two years has been loaned to Charles Ray Productions and will play a leading part in "Forty-Five Minutes From Broadway."

Pat Dowling, in charge of the publicity and advertising department as well as exploitation of Christie comedies and other productions from this studio, is on a trip East and before he returns will visit Chicago, Cleveland, Buffalo and New York in connection with special exploitation work of coming Christie productions.

Preparing for New Venture

Tourneur to Start on Associated Producers' Schedule by July 15

MAURICE TOURNEUR is preparing to start production of his initial photoplay for the Associated Producers, actual camera work to begin before July fifteenth. He is now completing the last picture which his present contract calls for. It is an adaptation by Jack Gilbert of Sidney Toler's play, "The Tiger Lady," and has Hope Hampton, in the title role. As soon as this story is finished Mr. Tourneur will commence active work on his new feature, which is said to be a story taken from a popular old American book, the name of which is being kept secret.

Mr. Tourneur has overhauled his studio at Universal City, added new artists and enlarged his force of craftsmen. Associated with him in close co-directorship will be Jack Gilbert, who has been writing Tourneur scenarios for some months. This move was made because Gilbert's clever continuities and ability to direct. He has been signed for a period of years. Mr. Tourneur will give Gilbert a company shortly and have him produce under supervision. Mr. Gilbert has written the scripts for the last two stories and has also co-directed. In "Deep Waters" he played an important part.

Barbara Bedford, who was cast for the lead in "Deep Waters" performed so well that she has been also put under contract and will play the leading roles in the forthcoming pictures.

Henry Cronjager, expert cameraman, who was with Marshall Neilan, has been signed for a three-year stretch. The art director will be Floyd Mueller, who has been with the Tourneur organization for some time in that capacity. Clarke Irvine is to handle the exploitation. James B. Elliott and Charles Dorian are the assistant directors.

Clift, of Fox Forces, to Travel Abroad

Denison Clift, who has been story and scenario writer, head of the scenario department, besides for a time being a director for the William Fox West Coast studios, sailed for Cherbourg, on the 20th of this month to make a general tour of Europe, gathering material for stories and making observation of motion picture conditions while abroad.

He will go straight to Paris, daily a while along the Riviera, and especially at Monte Carlo, since this is the first vacation he has had in four years. Later he will spend considerable time touring in Italy, visiting Rome, Venice and Florence and other places of artistic and literary interest, and thence journeying to enjoy the beauties of Switzerland before going to Belgium and France.

Mr. Clift will then make a prolonged and indefinite stay in London, getting right down to close touch with the motion picture business, studying and observing conditions there. In all probability, Mr. Clift will write some stories in London and has already one or more in mind that he will probably develop for William Fox production.

Comedian's Car King of Motordom

Roscoe (Fatty) Arbuckle, the famous rotund comedian, who by arrangement with Joseph M. Schenck is now starting in feature productions for Paramount, produced at the Lasky studio, has always said that one of his principal hobbies was good automobiles.

He is now gliding about Los Angeles and over the boulevards of Southern California in what is declared by many in a position to know, to be the most beautiful and expensive motor car which ever graced the highway. It is said to be the crowning triumph of the automobile industry, the ultimate in motor-car construction.

Percy Marmont Cast in Featured Role

Percy Marmont is to be featured in a new Vitagraph production, just started under the direction of Tom Terriss. Opposite him is being cast Catherine Calvert. The title of the new picture is "Dead Men Tell No Tales." This rise of Mr. Marmont to the status of a featured player follows a steady ascendancy in reputation and popularity won by the actor in his leading parts opposite Alice Brady, Geraldine Farrar, Marguerite Clark, Corinne Griffith and Alice Joyce. He has also appeared opposite Billie Burke in "Away Goes Prudence" and Norma Talmadge in "The Branded Woman" completed last week.

Penrhyn Stanlaws, former artist, who is to direct for Paramount

Artist Turns to Screen

Penrhyn Stanlaws Will Work with Fitzmaurice for Famous Players

THE announcement of Penrhyn Stanlaws' retirement from the illustrating field to woo the fickle goddess of the films, while coming as a surprise to the public had long been anticipated by his friends, who had known of his growing interest in motion picture production for some time. Many of Mr. Stanlaws' intimate friends are connected with the film industry, and have called upon him from time to time to aid them in perplexing problems of interior decoration and lighting for studio sets, as well as advice points of dramatic technique arising in the construction of scenarios and adaptations of certain stage successes for the screen. It was in this way that Mr. Stanlaws was first led astray.

Oudia Berger, the well-known scenarist, who in private life is Mrs. George Fitzmaurice, had been one of the many photoplaywrights who had called in Mr. Stanlaws for aid in the planning of her distinctive scenic effects; and had also read the manuscript of his new play, a dramatic version of "Maurice Levesque." She and Mr. Fitzmaurice accordingly made up their minds that there was just one place for a man of Mr. Stanlaws' abilities, and that place was in the Famous Players-Lasky studios. They told him with all the engaging frankness of a friendship of long standing that he was wanted—just letting a whole lot of cracker-jack motion picture material go to waste; that the films needed a man like him; and if a number of prominent artists and decorators could only be persuaded to look favorably upon the screen as another medium for their art, the whole tone of the pictures would be elevated a hundred per cent.

The combination of Penrhyn Stanlaws and George Fitzmaurice is indeed a happy one. Mr. Fitzmaurice, whose productions of "The Avalanche," "A Society Exile," "On With the Dance," and "The Right to Love" have attracted an unusual amount of attention by virtue of their extraordinary beauty and dramatic intensity, has risen in the past year to enviable prominence in the front rank of present-day directors.

Star Said to Be Uncertain as to Plans

"Dollars and the Woman," a current release, was the first Vitagraph production in which Robert Gordon appeared in the leading masculine role, with Alice Joyce. His work therein was of such merit that Vitagraph arranged with Commodore J. Stuart Blackton, with whom Mr. Gordon is under contract, to appear in another special production, just completed.

At the termination of his contract with Commodore Blackton, Mr. Gordon had expected to head his own company, for which negotiations were put under way some months ago. Mr. Gordon is now reported to face a flattering situation. It is to determine whether to go ahead with his own company, or tarry a while and accept one of the several offers from different producers for his services.

Gets Job as Salesman to Play Part Well

Realism is the fetish of character actors, reached a climax recently when Leo White worked for two weeks as a salesman in a popular Los Angeles modiste's shop in order to gain atmosphere for the part he has been engaged to play in "You Never Can Tell," the mutual Belie Daniels starring vehicle for Redart.

Mr. White has been named technical assistant to director Franklin in addition to his acting duties. He will have artistic supervision over details of the fashion show scene in "You Never Can Tell." This fashion show is promised to be one of the most unusual things of the sort ever incorporated in a motion picture.

First National Studio Statistics

THE First National Pictures, Inc., has issued a statement setting forth the studio-statistics of the various producing companies with which it is associated. The First National statement follows in part:

"Maintaining the largest area of 'shooting' space, and consistently holding the highest records for all elements connected with production with the exception of the monthly payroll and number of settings used per month, the Allen Dwan and R. A. Walsh productions, which are being made in the Robert Brunton studios, require shooting space of 45,400 square feet in area. The various buildings and stages used by Mr. Dwan approximate 300,000 square feet.

"In the matter of space occupied by buildings on the studio location, the Dwan and Walsh production territory is almost equal by the space occupied by the buildings belonging to the Louis B. Meyer studios in which Anita Stewart and Mildred Harris Chaplin are making their productions.

"Also in the matter of studio employees, production staffs and actors and extras, the Louis B. Meyer forces outnumber those of the Brunton studios. Mr. Meyer employs an average of 105 persons for his production staff whereas Mr. Dwan employs but 85. Mr. Meyer has 750 actors and extras at his service, whereas Mr. Dwan maintains but 375. And the Louis B. Meyer payroll per month approximates $90,000 whereas the Dwan payroll reads but $50,000.

"Statistics show that Mr. Dwan shoots 12,000 feet of negative per month more than the 40,000 feet used by the Mayer studio. It is a matter of interest to note that Mr. Mayer requires the service of 20 electricians, whereas the Brunton studios use but 15; while the Dwan interests use 30 carpenters and Mr. Mayer employs but 25. This same thread of interest is shown by the fact that there are nine people employed in Mayer scenario department, but there are but four employed by the Dwan and Walsh interests, in spite of the fact that Mr. Dwan uses four more painters, five more carpenters, one more camera man and 12,000 additional feet of negative per month than the L. B. Mayer interests.

"It is interesting to note that Charles Ray has 34,000 feet of shooting space as against the 45,400 feet of the Dwan interests whereas the building forming his feet as against the 30,000 square feet studios occupy but 97,000 square used in the Brunton studios. The payroll of the Charles Ray productions reaches $48,000 per month; 15 settings are used each month; 31,000 feet of negative are shot; and two camera men, 7 electricians, 12 carpenters, six painters, three laboratory workers and two scenario writers on his production staff, along with the 21 actors and extras kept almost constantly on hand.

"The extent of the effort being made by Mr. and Mrs. Carter De Haven coincident with the production of "Twin Beds" is shown by the scope of the production possibilities and staff employed by the De Havens. The studio used by Mr. and Mrs. De Haven provides for 30,000 square feet of shooting space. The buildings and stage occupy 145 square feet. Their production staff consists of 48 members, and 225 actors and extras are kept constantly on hand during the production of "Twin Beds." It is estimated that the payroll coincident with the production of "Twin Beds" will approximate $30,000 per month. And also 12 carpenters and 9 painters and 9 electricians will build an average of 16 settings per month until the picture is completed. The three cameramen employed by the De Havens will shoot 35,000 feet of negative each month. There are 5 persons employed in the laboratory at the De Haven studio, and their scenario department is composed of three persons.

"There are 28,000 square feet of studio shooting space in buildings which occupy 64,000 square feet. Marshall Neilan, uses 30,000 feet of negative each month and employs a production staff of 52 persons, with an additional 200 actors and extras who are paid the sum of $40,000 each month. Mr. Neilan uses approximately 14 settings each month and these are perfected by 5 electricians, 10 carpenters, and 8 painters. There are only 2 persons in the scenario department and 23 people in the laboratory in the Neilan studios.

"According to the survey of the payroll of the Charles Chaplin studios, it reaches $42,000 each month. He is said to employ a staff of 42 persons directly dealing with the production of his pictures and a group of 125 actors and extras who are at his call when needed. The Chaplin staff in the main consists of 2 camera men, 6 electricians, 14 carpenters, 6 painters, 3 laboratory employees, and two scenario writers.

"The Katherine MacDonald studios provide for but 500 less feet of shooting space than the 12,000 square feet at the command of King Vidor, who has just completed an adaptation of Ellis Parker Butler's "The Jack Knife Man" to be distributed by Associated First National Pictures, Inc. The building forming the Katherine MacDonald studios, occupy but 44,000 square feet; whereas the building at the King Vidor studio occupies 200,000 square feet. The MacDonald productions have a staff of 56 persons connected directly with the production, whereas King Vidor employs but 40 and Miss MacDonald has 160 actors and extras on her payroll, while King Vidor has but 100 actors and extras. The MacDonald payroll is exactly $4,000 greater each month than that of King Vidor."

Vignola Discovers New Screen Methods

A new development in the method of conveying ideas and thoughts upon the screen, as important, it is said, as was the cut-back or flash-back when it was discovered by D. W. Griffith a few years ago, has been discovered by Robert G. Vignola and will be revealed to the public for the first time in "The World and His Wife," Vignola's initial production for Cosmopolitan Productions which will be released through Paramount-Artcraft in the near future.

While Director Vignola prefers to keep his revolutionary method secret until his first Cosmopolitan production is shown upon the public screen, he does say that it will make a radical change in the technique of the continuity as it is at present known in the studios.

Two important phases of the new idea, according to Director Vignola, are, first, that it will tend to minimize, if not wholly eliminate, the sub-title without in the least affecting its psychological value to the picture as a whole, and, second, that it will smoothen the continuity.

Wants a Benevolent Fund

Richard Stanton Advocates Movement to Help Needy in Filmworld

RICHARD STANTON, the director of many special features, advocates the production of an elaborate motion-picture spectacle to be made under the auspices of The National Association and The Motion Picture Directors Association, for the purpose of founding a hospital or a benevolent fund for the benefit of all the workers in the motion picture industry. Outlining his idea, Mr. Stanton says:

"Every branch of the theatrical business with the exception of the motion-picture field has an organization to dispense aid to its needy members. Therefore, why cannot we of the film world have such an organization of our own? I would suggest that a production be made comprising all that is best in our industry, an official motion-picture classic, to be known as such and sponsored by The Motion Picture Directors Association and The National Motion Picture Association, the entire proceeds of which to be donated to some worthy motion-picture cause.

"The picture should be representative of the highest standards of the motion-picture art. It should be emblematic of our highest ideals and our strivings for the ultimate screen epic. In order to achieve such a result it would require the co-operation of each of the component parts of our field of endeavor. Therefore, I would suggest that the sets and studio be donated by the producers. The actors to give their services free of charge as well as the director who should be designated by The M.P.D.A. The story should be provided by a member of The Authors League of America.

"The aid of the exhibitors should be called upon for the bookings which would guarantee the financial success of the first standard motion-picture superfeature. In this way we would be presenting to the world a worthy monument to our art and everything for which it stands."

The Complete Floor Layout of the "College theatre"

The College Theatre—A Model of Modern Construction

A Single-Floor House with Stright-Away Projection

ON Monday, May 24th, Messrs. Jule and Jay J. Allen opened the most recent addition to their chain of over fifty theatres in the Dominion of Canada. This new house, located at the corner of College Street and Dovercourt Road, Toronto, Canada, represents the last word in theatrical construction. The College theatre has a seating capacity of 1,640 persons and it is constructed in its entirety of pressed brick and structural steel. It is absolutely fireproof.

The theatre occupies a site of 100' x 140' in size. The exterior structure is finished in Don Valley pressed brick and is ornamented with genuine cut stone.

Providing for a maximum of safety, the house is equipped with nine exits all of which are readily accessible. In the event of fire the theatre can be emptied in 2½ minutes.

The architectural lines of the College theatre follow the Adams period and are brought out prominently through the use of ornamental plaster, which is used profusely throughout the house. The decorative scheme of the theatre is of the Allen standard colors, old rose and ivory, a very effective combination of tones.

The diffuser system of illumination is employed. By this method of interior lighting, the theatre can at any time be flooded with either a soft glowing light or with a powerful white illumination. The house fixtures are among the most beautiful in any of the local theatres. A feature of the diffuser system of lighting is the fact that the lights can be regulated to suit the picture being screened. A wide range of light can be enjoyed without conflict with the projection.

The lobby is twenty feet wide and thirty feet in depth while the vestibule is of a like width. Off the lobby is a foyer, ten feet wide. Directly opposite to the entrance of the lobby is a large and handsomely appointed ladies' retiring room, daintily equipped and handsomely furnished.

Off the north end of the foyer is an equally large gentlemen's lounging room, while the manager's private office is conveniently located close to the main entrance.

Topping the entrances is an ornamental three quarter sunburst marquee, which will afford protection to waiting lines at the box office during inclement weather. Directly above this marquee is hung a mammoth electrical display sign, standard to all Allen theatres.

The equipment of the College theatre embraces high class standard theatre chairs with special spring cushions, which afford a maximum amount of comfort. Velvet drapes and hangings form part of the decorative scheme, while a profusion of artificial as well as natural flowers and plants lend to the beauty of the interior.

The operating booth, "the heart of the motion picture theatre," will be fitted with the latest model Powers projection machines and Herber transmitters. Provision has also been made for the operator's comfort, and the booth as a whole is a model of its kind. It is absolutely fire proof.

Seldom does atmosphere show up as well as in these photographs of the new Allen theatre in Toronto. This is a view of one of the rest rooms

The Tumble-In Garage

THE Fairbanks Company, which completely sold on the value of Industrial Films, have determined that in the future, all actors who have occasion to drive a car shall be real chauffeurs. This for the very good reason that in the taking of an Industrial Film lately, a certain young lady, while proving herself an excellent actor, failed to realize that a doorway is just so wide, and that a fire plug can make a nasty mess out of a fiver.

This company numbers among their many lines complete and up-to-date Ford repair equipment which is designed to not only permit better work but to accomplish it quicker and at less expense.

As an efficient means of exploiting this equipment, they decided on a Industrial Film and with the help of the Argus Enterprises, Inc., of Cleveland, have produced a film which easily ranks among the best of its kind ever produced. The film clearly shows the difference between the work done with Fairbanks Equipment and that accomplished with less modern tools.

The story starts with a collision between two Ford cars.

The one is driven to the Tumble-In Garage and the other to an up-to-date Fairbanks Ford Service Station. The comparison, tho very true to life, is at times quite ludicrous and is drawn from the entrance of the damaged cars clear thru the various repairs necessary to their delivery.

The entrance to the Tumble-In Garage, which by the way is an actual shop in New York City, proved disastrous. Instead of driving thru the doorway, the fair driver tried to take away a section of the door frame and on the exit from the Fairbanks Station she gracefully draped the car around a convenient fire plug.

The picture is intensely interesting thruout, even to the layman, giving as it does a complete visualization of the many operations necessary to repair a badly damaged car and showing the ease and efficiency and delay (and at times additional damage) occasioned when only a smattering knowledge and a full complement of brute force are the order of the day. Much credit is due to the Argus Photographer Don Canada, for the successful photography at some very difficult subjects.

Argus and Fairbanks have worked out a very thorough distribution of the film which will be followed by another taken in Chicago.

Gets Good Ventilation

When the complete Monsoon Equipment is installed in the new Wilson Theatre, now being constructed in Baltimore, patrons will be assured of a daily supply of fresh air totalling to the almost unbelievable total of 23,000,000 cubic feet. By a scientific arrangement of the different fan units the blanket of air will be so proportioned that an even quantity will be supplied to every location in the theatre. Moreover, the large volume of air coming in will prevent any draughts from entering through the entrances thus causing inconvenience to those sitting in the back of the house.

In cold weather a system has been devised to allow for the heating of 40,000 cu. ft. from zero to 70 degrees, providing this temperature range is ever encountered.

The manufacturers of this system claim a high economy through the elimination of all ducts, trenches and much steam piping, since the fans that do the work are located on the roof of the theatre over balcony and stage.

Electro-Magnetic Circuits

MAGNETISM may appear without electricity but electricity cannot be present without producing magnetism. When an electric current flows in a wire it sets up a magnetic field about this wire, and it is due to this feature that electricity may be made to do work by being transformed into other forms of energy.

The direction of the lines of force about a conductor are dependent upon the direction of flow of the current. There are several rules which may be used to determine the direction of these lines when the direction of the current flow is known. If the current in a conductor flows away from the observer as shown by first of the accompanying sketches, this direction being indicated by the plus sign, then the direction of the lines of force will be in a clockwise direction. Also when the current flows toward the observer, as indicated by a dot, the lines of magnetic force will be in a counter-clockwise direction.

Another rule for determining the relation between the magnetic field and the current flow is that known as the "right hand rule." If the conductor is grasped with the right hand so that the thumb points in the direction in which the current is flowing, then the fingers point in the direction of the magnetic field produced.

Since a current flowing in a conductor has a tendency to swing a compass needle at right angles with the conductor as shown by Fig. 51, it is possible to determine the direction of current flow by this means. If the north end of the needle swings to the left when held below the conductor, and to the right when held above the conductor, as illustrated by Fig. 51, then the current flow is away from the observer. However, should the needle point in the opposite directions then the current flow is toward the observer.

The lines of magnetic force are circles emanating from the center of the conductor and these increase in size with an increase of current flow. The lines of magnetism about parallel conductors in which the current is flowing in the same direction are shown by Fig. 52. If now these conductors are brought close together the lines between these conductors going in opposite directions neutralize and the resulting lines encircle all such conductors. Thus if a coil is made up of a large number of turns of wire the field of all these turns will combine and form a field encircling the group. All lines on the inside of such a coil then point in the same direction and a magnetic field is produced emanating from one end of the coil and entering the other, this field having properties similar to a bar magnet.

Such a coil as just described when wound in the shape of a helix is called a solenoid, and when supplied with an iron core is known as an electro-magnet. This magnet while having the properties of a bar magnet will be magnetized only as long as the current is flowing and is therefore a temporary magnet.

The polarity of a solenoid may be determined by the right hand screw rule which states that when the current flow is in the direction in which the screw turns then the North pole is in the direction of motion.

The field of a solenoid is shown by Fig. 53 and should an iron core be placed in this coil a magnet is formed such that the magnetic poles of the coil tend to draw the rod into the coil. This principle is made use of in the circuit breaker in which at a given current flow the plunger is drawn into a solenoid and in so doing releases a catch allowing the circuit breaker to open and thus stopping the flow of current.

Electro-magnets and solenoids are made up in a great number of different forms depending upon the particular use to which they are to be placed, some of which are electric bells, telephones, relays, generators, motors, and lifting magnets.

As already stated the space occupied by the magnetic lines outside the magnet is known as the magnetic field. The number of lines per square centimeter in a surface at right angles to the lines is known as the field intensity of field strength.

A field intensity, the symbol for which is H , of 1 line per square centimeter is called a gauss. For example 25 gauss means a field having 25 lines per sq. cm. The total flux, the symbol for which is ϕ , in a given area is obtained by multiplying the field intensity H by the area A . This relation may be expressed by the equation $\phi = A \times H$.

The number of magnetic lines per sq. cm. in any substance is known as the Flux Density in that substance and is expressed by the letter B .

The permeability of any substance is the measure of the ease with which magnetic lines pass thru this substance, and may be expressed as the ratio between the number of lines of force per unit area passing thru a magnetized substance and the magnetizing force producing them. The Greek letter μ is used to signify permeability and may be stated as follows: $\mu = B/H$.

The strength of magnetic poles may be expressed as follows: Two magnetic poles of 1 sq. cm. cross section which when placed 1 cm. apart repel each other with a force of one dyne are said to be of unit strength.

The strength exerted between two poles is found to be equal to the product of the strength of the two poles divided by the square of the distance between them, and may be expressed by the equation in dynes, m and m' the strength in unit poles and d the distance in centimeters.

The most important use of the electro-magnet is that in connection with generator and motors where it is used to create the field necessary for the transformation of electrical energy.

The cut Fig. 54 shows a two-pole machine which is made up of a yoke connecting the North and South poles between which the armature revolves. The armature itself is made up principally of iron so that the magnet circuit is nearly composed of iron throughout except for the small air gap between the poles and the revolving armature.

Rules applying to magnets and magnetism.

The intensity of a magnetic field is measured in gauss, or the number of lines per sq. cm. Symbol H .

Magnetic flux is made up of all the lines of force of a complete circuit. Symbol ϕ . Total flux $\phi = A \times H$.

Like poles repel. Unlike poles attract.

The number of lines emerging from one unit pole equal 4π .

POWER'S 6B WITH TYPE E LAMPHOUSE

TYPE E LAMP

TYPE E LAMP AND LAMPHOUSE

The extra large area "cubical capacity" of Type "E" Lamphouse prevents overheating with arcs of high amperage, and permits ready access and adjustment. Ventilation is scientifically correct and two openings in front of lamphouse facilitate cleaning.

A heavy gray iron dowser inside lamphouse protects the condenser from flame and sudden heat when striking the arc. The condensers may be easily cleaned as condenser mounts are supported on strong gray iron frame hinged to the lamphouse—opening outwardly, thereby bringing mounts entirely clear of the lamphouse. Extra heavy gray iron holders insure a perfect alignment of the condensers, and to hold them firmly in place a "V" shaped edge fits securely into a "V" shaped groove on the condenser mount. The condenser nearest to the Arc adjusts from the outside of the lamphouse.

The lamp is very heavy throughout and thoroughly insulated. It has been severely tested by the National Board of Fire Underwriters up to 2000 volts A. C. Upper carbon holder accommodates carbons from $\frac{5}{8}$ " to $1\frac{1}{8}$ " inclusive; lower carbon holder sizes $\frac{5}{16}$ " to $\frac{3}{4}$ " inclusive and "V" shaped clamps assure a rigid hold on the carbons without breaking them.

Upper and lower carbon holders are equipped with clamp designed to replace lugs on the wires. The clamps having a series of interlocking corrugations, top and bottom, make a perfect connection when the wire is clamped between them. Clamp and carbon holders are made of one piece of metal to prevent arcing.

The lateral, backward and forward adjustments are made on lower carbon, so that when adjusting the lamp the crater remains unchanged.

A worm wheel and gear for raising and lowering the lamp gives additional rigidity.

Rack rods are heavy, square steel bars held with a spring cover to give greater wearing service and amply take care of expansion. This also prevents the rack bars binding when subjected to the intense heat of the Arc.

The strength of a pole may be stated in the number of unit poles it contains, symbol m , or the total flux where $\Phi = 4\pi m$

The force exerted by a magnetic field upon a pole placed within it is $F = mH$

Problems on Magnets

35. If one of two magnets which are 4 cms. apart has a pole strength of 5 units, what pole strength must the other have in order that there may be exerted between them a force of 89 dynes?
36. Two magnets are 5 cms. apart. m equals 280 unit poles. m' equals 500 unit poles. Find the force between them.
37. The area of a pole face of a motor is 600 sq. cms. The average field intensity is 5000 gauss. Find the total number of magnetic lines coming out of the pole face.
38. What is the field intensity where 400 sq. cms. area has a flux of 2,000,000 magnetic lines.
39. Find the flux density of a piece of steel set up by a magnetizing force of 18 gauss, if the permeability is 1200.

Compensarc Trouble

MR. C. A. CHRISTOPHER, Rochester, Pa., writes:

Have been going to write to you for the past two weeks, but it seemed as though I couldn't get started, so here goes with a few questions and a general cleaning up of all I have to say.

What I wish to tell you first is about the new compensarc which I installed here a few weeks ago.

I put a Fort Wayne compensarc in the booth in place of an old Hallberg transformer and wish to get a little "info" in regard to the running of the same.

You see we are troubled with low voltage here and when we were using the old transformer I could only get 25 amperes at the arc and not a single ampere more.

Now that we have a compensarc installed we are not just getting the results that we should.

In fact, that is my opinion of the matter, and maybe you will say that I am right and maybe you will say that I am wrong.

We cannot run the compensarc on 30 amperes, as the light will be so bad that you can't get enough screen illumination and on 40 amperes I can get a pretty fair light at times, and then again I won't, but on 60 amperes I get the finest light that a man would want on his screen.

I think, and, in fact, I know, that if a good light is wanted all the time the amperage must be at 60 all the time here, but I want to ask you a few things as to leaving it that way.

The company that sold us the compensarc said that with a $\frac{3}{8}$ cored carbon (that is the white a. c. carbons that they refer to) the amperage will be all right at 40, but I am using the white a. c. carbons and can only get satisfactory results when the amperage is at 60 and my light is steady, clear, bright and no noise at all, and so that is the reason I ask you if it will hurt the compensarc if I burn it at 60 amperes all the time.

The compensarc gets rather warm, but then not any hotter than any other transformer or economizer, and then I am using the one compensarc with one lamp house, so that will cause it to get hot, as it is in continuous use all the ten hours we are running.

I can hear you saying that it is a foolish idea to use one lamp house and all the like, but wait and I will tell you why this must be.

You see both machines are screwed down to one large board and the machines are close together and the lamp house is moved back and forth on rods from one machine to the other, and the stereopticon attachment is in between the two machines, and if we put two lamp houses on the table, then we will not be able to show our slides.

Now I want you to tell me just what you can about the compensarc and if it will hurt it if I run it all day on 60 amperes and if it will cause any damage then what should I do.

I have written twice before and asked for some labels and also a button, which I never received when I joined and have never heard from you yet.

What is the matter? Has the N. A. M. L. given up its good work, or have the rules become too hard to keep?

Let's see how fast you can answer a letter and also don't forget to mention my name in the News once in a while, so as to let the boys know that No. 1118 is still fighting and will never give up.

I am located in the Colonial Theatre in Rochester now, having left the Regent Theatre in Ambridge early in March.

Will write you again and tell you just what kind of a place I am working in now and also the condition of things around here.

Am also having a lot of trouble with my shafting and motor drive and wish you could tell me how to change it so as to get the best results.

Am always having trouble with my belts slipping and also breaking, and would like to get away from it all if I can.

Am sending you a few drawings of the whole business and see if you can dope it out for a better way and let me have it when you answer the letter.

REPLY:

You should have one of the compensarcs with steps giving 30, 40 and 60 amperes at the arc when normal voltage is applied to the primary side of the device. The Fort Wayne compensarc is designed to run continuously on any one of these steps; thus you should be able to get 60 amperes from it for as long as you desire.

As a matter of fact, you are probably not getting 60 amperes, even when your switch is on point No. 3. This is due to your low primary voltage.

If the compensarc seems to be heating up get a reliable thermometer and lay it on the part that seems to be the hottest. Supposing your room temperature in the summer to be 80 degrees, then the thermometer on the compensarc should not rise above 150 degrees. If it does, quit using it and call in an electrician with ammeter and voltmeter to look for the trouble.

The fact that you are using it continuously for ten hours should have no effect. Transformers are designed for continuous rating and can be used twenty-four hours a day if desired.

That double-machine-one-lamp house arrangement doesn't appeal to us, but no doubt it doesn't to you, either. Some day, perhaps, you will be able to convince your manager of the advantage of two separate operating units.

No, the N. A. M. L. is far from "giving up the ghost." If you could see the quantity of labels that go out weekly you would agree with us. The Honor Roll has been published intermittently because of the need for space. Our records show that two supplies of labels were sent you. If you haven't received either, some one else is getting them. Ask for another lot.

How are we going to tell you how to fix your shafting troubles if we don't know what kind of a projector you have? Neither did you send the drawings you mentioned. Send these along and we'll make suggestions.

Motor Behaves Badly

D. D. W., Michigan, writes:

I am in quest of information. I'm not going to say that there is a knock on the right side of my projector and ask you to tell me what the trouble is, but will try to describe facts to the best of my ability. Now—

I am running double reels and on one machine, after I start it, and after the reel has run about five minutes my motor seems to slow down, my machine seems to lose its speed and I have to bring up the lever and then push it down again. When I do this it picks up again and runs good for three or four minutes, when it repeats its performance.

I have adjusted the tension, have my take up set right, know that my motor is lined up right and have even taken off the disk carriage and cleaned it. My intermittent is set right and gets good lubrication. In short I have tried nearly everything that I could think of, and it still remains on the bum. I have two machines and the other one runs perfectly. They are Powers 6B and have been in service about a year and a half.

I forgot to mention the fact that I put in a new fiber disk about two weeks ago and my motor is well oiled. The only thing I can think of is that the motor (which is A. C.) is burned out. Would it act like this? Hoping to receive a reply soon.

Reply:

As usual in trouble of this sort there are several possible sources of trouble. You may have placed too much tension on thumb screw R-32 as it is called in the Powers catalog. Or it may be that the speed disc is out of shape and slips on the steel disc. To remedy this take an old knife and clean off the high spots from the leather disc. When taking this matter up with the Nicholas Power Company, Mr. Wrede of the repair department stated that recently he had been called in on similar trouble and found out that it could be corrected by replacing the self-oiling bearings with new ones at a cost of 40c.

A burned out motor would not act in the manner you have described, at least not for long. It is probable that you will find the real trouble in one of the places mentioned above.

If Shaking Coil Burns Out

I. B. J., Texas, asks a theoretical question regarding his mercury arc rectifier.

I WANT to know if the shaking magnet on my mercury arc rectifier should burn out could I run without it? If so how? Next, if I use a $\frac{7}{8}$ " condenser and a $\frac{6}{8}$ " condenser which should I use next to the arc? Next, what is the difference between a rheostat connected in multiple and one connected in series? I am a constant reader of the News and I think it the best trade journal published. I am also a member of the N. A. M. L. and I think it a great thing. Reply:

If you will study the diagram of the mercury arc rectifier you will find that the shaking magnet is energized through a short circuit. For this reason it has no effect on the operation of the rectifier if the magnet does burn out. When the carbons are brought together and the switch thrown the plunger makes contact which allows the current to flow through the circuit of the shaking magnet. When the magnet burns out the contact is made but there is no flow of current.

All that is necessary to do in such an event is to go ahead as usual with the exception that the tube must be tilted by hand. Simply bring your carbons together, throw the switch, tilt the tubes and draw the arc. For convenience sake, however, we would suggest that you send your magnet coil to the manufacturers and have it replaced by one suitable for the capacity of the tubes you are using.

In a condenser combination such as you mention the lens of smaller focal length should be used next to the arc. This is for the purpose of allowing the arc to be brought nearer to the glass and yet have the rays after leaving the first lens practically parallel before entering the second or larger lens.

It is impossible to have one rheostat connected in anything but series. Two rheostats may be connected in multiple but not one. The simple sketches below illustrate the difference between rheostats connected in multiple and in series.

Van Duyne with 20 Years Experience Was One of First Men in Projector Game

Los Angeles Man Boasts of Many Years Association With Industry

AN organization has recently been formed which will apply the last and most particular coat of respectability to the film industry. Under the sharp eye of many of the leading college professors of this country, using the word "visual" as a dignified designation of their scientific activities, they intend that motion pictures shall receive the highest professional approval. This is their avowed intention and it is the word "visual" that brings motion pictures into these high circles. Every branch of learning is represented in the organization and—backed by eminent financiers, for learned societies strange to say do not function well without financial assistance—everything possible will be done to take the curse of commercialism off motion pictures. It will be a great thing for the films which have gone through the period in which no money could be made to the stage where there are so many millionaires in the business there is a growing ambition to be "recognized" in social and educational circles. It is certain that some of the professors will make a determined attempt to write the history of motion pictures. This is a good idea, for many of the pioneers are still hale and hearty and now is the time to get the facts from those who helped make them.

This week we have had the opportunity of meeting Mr. H. E. Van Duyne of Los Angeles who represents the Nicholas Power Co. in Los Angeles and vicinity, through his firm, the Pacific Amusement Co., Los Angeles, Cal.

Van Duyne has been handling machines in California, principally around Los Angeles, since 1900 and we recommend him to all college professors and others who are looking for facts—past, present and future—regarding the world's film metropolis. Speaking in a light and figurative sense Van remembers when the first load of furniture drove up and Los Angeles commenced that phase of her glorious career which has made her known wherever motion pictures are shown. Just after the baker and grocer called, Van was offering a nice line of motion picture machines and was prepared to serve the family in the best possible way at the lowest possible prices consistent with quality. We will allow the professors to tell all about what kind of furniture this first producing firm had, what they looked like, how the ladies were dressed and other details dear to the heart of the historian but we advise them to get in touch with Van Duyne. According to a multitude of sources, H. E. Van Duyne sold the first motion picture projector used by the producing companies in Los Angeles. There have always been a few projectors brought in by traveling companies but Van Duyne knows all about the permanent installations. Edisons were used principally in the early days and it was before the introduction of safety devices; everyone was kept fairly busy preventing fires. When a fire did occur it was a good one and everything in and about the building was wiped off the map. Mr. Van Duyne has sold about all makes of projectors but for some years has been selling Power's exclusively, and recently issued an affidavit in which he stated that 95% of the machines used by the studios and laboratories are Power's.

The News Cameraman of Today and His Increasing Opportunities

Some of the Problems That Confront the Ambitious Amateur

BY HERBERT E. HANCOCK, DIRECTOR, FOX NEWS

IT is a little over six years ago since the first news reel appeared upon the public screen. Its advent was as quiet and modest as the birth of some great genius who is not recognized as such until his power becomes apparent. The power of the news reel is becoming more evident every day, and is firmly establishing itself as a medium of expression more to be reckoned with than the greatest newspaper.

Unlike the newspaper editor, the man in charge of a news reel reflects through his works the likes, dislikes and feelings of all the people and not only a fraction as represented through a newspaper. His is a national task, not a local one, and his work is spread all over the country and into foreign lands, and not confined to one big city and its suburbs. Therefore the power of a news reel is world-wide and is becoming so to be considered by presidents, rulers and men of affairs of all nations.

I personally was a reporter and writer on some of the biggest newspapers in America for fifteen years, but I consider a news reel cameraman of far greater importance in his relation to the public in comparison to a newspaper reporter. No matter how careful or conscientious a reporter may be, his mental limitations always leave the possibility that his statements may not be entirely correct. Frequently we hear big men complain that interviews with them have been garbled, or the intent of their words misunderstood because of the reporter's phraseology.

Herbert E. Hancock

FOR many years before his venture into the field of the News Reel, Herbert Hancock was a newspaper man of wide experience. His success as head of the Fox News Reel caused us to ask him to set forth in print the story of the news cameraman. To our mind this is by far the best article ever printed on this subject.

A news reel cameraman cannot tell a lie in pictures. The camera does not lie unless it is made to lie by tricks or double exposure which, in a news reel, would instantly become apparent to the audience. No news reel is or ever has been accused of "faking a picture," interview or news event. When stop-motion is used showing people moving unnaturally, the motion picture public knows that this has been done for the purpose of amusement and that nobody is trying to "put over anything on them."

So keen has the competition become between the six weeklies now in the field, that a news cameraman must be trained in several ways. He must be part director, part editor, part writer, since he has to describe his scenes, very much of an artist, and a top notch photographer, in order to be able to command high wages. So important has an all-around news cameraman become that he is today commanding three times the salary that he used to get four or five years ago.

When I re-entered the news reel field with Fox News after an absence of two years during which time I was trying to do my "bit" in the war, I found that the entrance into the field of several new news reels had made first-class news cameramen quite hard to get. I did manage, after some difficulty, in getting together a first-class staff, but there remained the possibility of losing a man every now and then for one reason or another, and it therefore became necessary for me to safeguard the interest of Fox News by a method which has proved most successful. I occasionally found in the Fox Film Studios, laboratories and other departments a young man interested in amateur photography who believed that he could become a cameraman if only given a chance—but where was this chance to come from? In more than half a dozen cases I gave a man a chance, and in every case they have made good. In one year we have trained eight of these men from various walks of life until they are today in a fair way to become the equals of any cameraman in the field. It was a hard road for them to travel at first, it being necessary for them to be little more than messengers or assistants to the other cameramen, picking up information and knowledge day after day, and centering along their line of endeavor as much as possible. I managed to get hold of an old camera which, however, had a good lens and was in good working order, and whenever these men had a little time to themselves I would loan them this with some "short ends of negative" and let them get out and "shoot" some subject which would be of interest if photographed properly, but would be no great loss if the film was spoiled. In most cases they advanced in an incredibly short space of time until today I have a staff ready for any emergency, and capable of photographing any situation, big or little.

The explanation of this rapid advancement on the part of these men is somewhat explained when it is understood that camera work is fascinating to the extreme. The news reel cameraman, after he has learned photography, is put on his own mettle. When he is sent outright on an assignment, there is no director there to tell him what to do. He must use his judgment as to the news value of every scene he takes. He must be able to visualize his pictures upon the screen. He must use as little film as possible, and do his job quickly and well. Within the space of a few minutes, he may have to take several different scenes especially during an event where some national characters are present. Within a short space of time he may have to set his camera up in several different positions, change his focus and his exposure. Like the newspaper reporter he has to keep in mind all the time "I must not be beaten," and this means that he must not be beaten either in the excellence of the photography, his judgment, and his enterprise. Frequently, in order to out-do the other fellows, a cameraman will risk his life. I am continually receiving pictures where cameramen have taken all kinds of chances to get unusual pictures. Only recently one of my men made a most dangerous aeroplane flight over the Yosemite Valley, while another, in the Everglades of Florida, stood waist deep in a swamp alive with poisonous reptiles to get an alligator hunt. Others have climbed flag poles, hobnobbed with iron workers on the top of sky-scrapers, and have performed many other hazardous feats for the sake of glory and reputation.

That is the reason why I treat the 150 cameramen under me, who are scattered all over the world, as a body of brave, enterprising and intelligent men should be treated. A man who is not employed on a salary for news reel gets paid only when his film is accepted. These are what we call "the footage men." They are the "best friends" of the news reel editor for it is up to them to get the queer, unusual and unique news events that are constantly occurring in all parts of the world. To them also come the great hardships and risks attached to their work in the sparsely settled districts and uncivilized countries. To be a news reel cameraman you have to be "a man all through."

I want to make a special point of the "footage men." Their opportunity today in the news reel field is greater than ever before. Of first importance to them is the fact that they are getting more money for their product, the rate of payment having increased 100 per cent within the last two years.

It must be taken into consideration, however, that the demands made on the footage men today are not what they used to be. In the old days a cameraman could send almost any old kind of a subject in to a news reel, and it would be accepted, but today he must carefully consider the pictures he is going to take because there is a keen rivalry all over the world for a better class of film. The news reels today demand the highest quality of photography as well as unusual "shots," and sometimes the enterprise shown by a man will give him more space in a news reel than the actual news value of the subject. So that the future of a footage man is purely in his own hands. Every news reel editor is ready and willing to help him if he will help himself. A careless man, no matter what line of work he may be in, can never hope to get up very far.

Posing a real live "diamond back" for its close-up. Part of the everyday life of the News man

Within the last month Fox News mailed eight checks, or an average of two a week, of more than $100 each, to footage men. Others are continually getting checks averaging from $75 to $85 a week so that men "in the field," if alert, and students of the news reel game, can very easily make a comfortable living. It also happens not infrequently that a footage man will produce such excellent results that he will be taken in on the regular staff. Several of the staff men on Fox News started on a "footage basis."

One of the cameramen for the Fox News reel makes a specialty of unusual airplane views. The center illustration shows a "still" taken from a plane passing down through the Yosemite valley

The army of news reel cameramen is constantly growing and becoming of more importance as the news reels themselves continue to grow in power. No longer does the slogan "the power of the press" occupy an isolated position. Today "the power of the news reel" is greater than it ever was, and is rapidly gaining the respect that is its due. I venture to predict that within the near future a news reel will develop many radical changes, and chief among these will be the development of an individual editorial policy, reflecting the ideas and judgment in picture form of the individual news reel proprietor. When this day comes the news reel will display a power of public expression that nobody will dare to combat or deny.

Messrs. Stevens & Brown, bankers of Philadelphia, Pa., whose place of business is opposite their large and handsome Dunbar theatre, corner Broad and Lombard streets, a photograph of which is here shown, have purchased and taken over the New Lincoln theatre, at Twentieth and Jefferson streets, Newport News, Va., a picture of which is also shown.

The Lincoln theatre was erected about a year ago by Messrs. Ornum & Cohen Bros., of Newport News, and opened last August. Recently a fire destroyed a building adjoining the Lincoln, and as a result of the fire the interior of the Lincoln was injured by water and smoke, and the theatre has been closed since undergoing repairs, and has just been redecorated and is now opened by the above named gentlemen. It is said that the Lincoln is one of the prettiest theatres in Newport News.

The Dunbar theatre was opened December 29th and was built for legitimate shows, but the owners have purchased a booth, machines and screen and will open with moving pictures the first of June.

These same gentlemen are building beautiful 2,000 seat theatre on Church street in Norfolk, Va. The walls are up and work is progressing rapidly on the new structure. They are figuring on opening about September first.

Cameraman Gets "Impossible" Double Exposure

DON CANADY, Chief Cinematographer of the Argus Enterprises, Inc., of Cleveland, claims that he has succeeded in obtaining a double exposure which he says has been considered impossible.

He has his subject seated in a chair smoking. In a moment or two, the double appears on the scene, also smoking. After blowing smoke in each others' faces with the smoke ascending upwards, the double walks in back of and completely past the subject.

The usual mask lines are missing. During the run of 100 feet absolutely no movement, so Canady claims, can be detected that would indicate a double exposure. As the scene fades out, the double passes directly in front of the subject and out of the picture.

Canady has not yet divulged the secret but has promised to use this method the first time activities permit.

The News Inaugurates a Service

By Charles D. Isaacson

WHEN the publishers of the News invited me to become contributing music editor, they indicated the freedom of expression which would be allowed me; but what was more to my liking, they advised me to "go the limit" in telling the story of music and its powers. They said that in every way they would back me up, in the development of a music service to the theatre exhibitors.

As a matter of fact, here's the way the News people phrased it: "If we have to engage you to go out and talk with exhibitors, to help them to start the musical idea in their own houses—in fact actually put you in the theatre to stage the musical program, we'll do it. You can use your own judgment on these matters. You can't do enough in actual service for our readers, to suit us."

Well, gentlemen of the theatres, I'm going to take the News people at their word, and I'm offering myself and my experience and my ideas to you, for you to call upon ad lib—carte blanche, as you please, or any other way you want to call it.

From aid in the selection of your musical director, to the choice of the weekly musical features, put the question up to me. That's my job on this publication. The articles I am writing in these pages are one part of my work—the actual thrashing out of your musical problems, as they affect you specifically, directly and individually, is the other part.

Consider me part of your musical staff, call me your Advisory Musical Director, or any other title you like, and then call on me!

WHEN the publishers were closing their negotiations with me, they asked "Would you object to the theatres using your name in their own advertising and programs? You know that you are pretty well known in every community in the country as a musical authority; and it would be mighty fine if the theatres which actually follow out your advice, could take advantage of your name, as an additional box office attraction."

Very willingly I assented, for there are so many fine personal hopes I have for the perfect mating of music and pictures, that I'm ready to do almost anything that's going to accomplish real results.

Ask Charles D. Isaacson About Music

These articles contain money-making ideas for motion picture theatre managers who are alive to their big opportunities. Mr. Isaacson is the best equipped man in the country to advise you on how to get the most out of music in your theatre. He is at your disposal—address him in care of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

"Now, when we're fairly launched on the department," the publishers ordered, "you go right ahead and tell the readers all about the plans, so they will know our attitude and so they will understand just what we're trying to reach. Tell it to them without personal feelings in the matter—just as if you were talking about somebody else who was trying to do the things you want to do."

So that's what this week's installment is to be—a careful, impersonal outline of our big hopes and offerings to you.

THE News Music Service, of which I am now to speak, has been developed and is now made ready for utilization.

The News Music Service will not be a cut-and-dried formal affair; it will be made to fit the different types of theatres and communities; made to fit the local conditions and the house capacity. The Service will not cost the exhibitor one cent (it will be part of his News values) although the Service will aim to indicate the methods by which the exhibitor can make his expenditures do the most good. The Service is not personally interested in any instrument, instruments, publisher, publishers, individual or organization, but it will be the intent of the Service to steer the exhibitor away from the worthless, and in the direction of the worth-while.

The Service will be published weekly in the News Music Section. In this manner the general advice will be carried; but the variations to fit the different theatres, will be handled by correspondence, or, where necessary and possible, in conference at the manager's office.

The Service articles will indicate a course of action to be followed by the ideal theatre—the theatre able to do anything and everything—the theatre big enough to get crowds, big enough to use ensembles on the stage, the theatre located where the finest artists can be obtained, where the best concert courses, operatic tours, orchestral routes, touch; the theatre surrounded by music schools, teachers, choruses, local music clubs—the theatre where newspapers and periodicals are favorably disposed to pay attention to music matters.

If you cannot do all that the Service articles each week suggest in the News, you can eliminate the difficult, the inappropriate, the impossible ideas, as applied to your needs, and use what you can.

But there is the other phase of the Service to be kept always in mind. It is at your disposal as an individual, made-to-measure proposition. That other phase is not intended to interfere with the duties of any existing or future music official—but merely as an adjunct to him. That other phase of the Service will not be thrust upon the theatre—it will only be given where it is requested, and then given as liberally as it is needed.

AS has been pointed out to us by letter already, this department is aiding the musical directors of theatres to "sell" their chiefs or to line them up more solidly on the musical proposition. Many musicians now attached to theatres are finding it a not always easy matter to convince the managers that music pays. They find themselves handicapped and limited in their powers—refused the opportunity to "spread." These artists, so proficient in their art, are not always so eloquent or as convincing as they would like to be when it comes to a discussion. Knowing all or most of the facts we present here, they are not at all times as expressive in summing the facts to their guidance. A musical director, who requested that his name be not mentioned, wrote last week "I've been trying to tell the manager about the music craze that's sweeping the country—but I couldn't make it convincing. Your article on that subject published in the News of June 26th just told it the way I wanted. I put the magazine on the manager's desk, open to the page and marked, and said not a word. A little later in the day, he came over to me and asked me if I wouldn't do something more to harness the music craze; and that we ought to get busy. The article had done its work!"

At any rate, the News Music Service is to be used wherever and in whatever way possible, to do the most good.

It is planned that the theatre may use the advice of the News Music Service without mentioning this publication in any way; on the other hand, if the manager feels that it will add prestige to his entertainments, he may publish in as wide a manner as he desires, that the music is along the lines recommended by the MOTION PICTURE NEWS. He may announce, that through an arrangement with the MOTION PICTURE NEWS, he has added the present writer to his staff, in the capacity of Music Adviser, or by inference, say that the present writer is in advisory charge of musical programs.

I am in touch with many thousands of musical enthusiasts in all parts of the country.* There is scarcely a city or town where I have not at the present moment some correspondents. I should be delighted to send you the names of the people in your community who have been in contact with my work, or who have written to me and urged me to come to their city, in the capacity of lecturer, musical interpreter or developer of concerts. These particular people, if informed by you, would be interested to watch the musical idea you set in motion with me or through me, and would be the sort of active enthusiasts who would help to spread word-of-mouth and often newspaper and periodical advertising, of your musical activities.

If you desire to carry through a policy of music, with a public announcement of the writer's advisory guidance, the publishers have informed me that they will be pleased to give you the data, in fact a complete story which you can use for your publicity and advertising. This probably would, because of its novelty, attract music lovers to your doors.

* Note—Mr. Isaacson is probably the most famous musical protagonist of the day. Every musical enthusiast, and almost every musician know of his work in New York City in making two million persons attend classical concerts for the first time in their lives. It is perhaps no exaggeration to say that the theatre which informed the musical authorities locally of Mr. Isaacson's connection with theatre music, would stir up a lot of discussion to say the least.

However, what Mr. Isaacson was referring to in this particular statement, is the work he has been doing in doing throughout the national publications for music. He is a contributor and has been represented regularly in a list of magazines which includes Pictorial Review (2,000,000 circulation); Collier's (1,500,000 circulation); Theatre Magazine, Forbes' Magazine, House and Garden, Physical Culture Magazine, School News, American Boy, Musical Courier, Capper's Farmer, Farmer's Wife, Hearst's Magazine, etc. Through these publications he has become for millions, the outstanding musical authority, and his name is synonymous with music in many homes. His correspondence with persons from all over the country has been voluminous, and he has required many assistants to handle the details of supplying men, women, boys and girls with the information they sought. His inquiries cover everything from questions about "should my boy start to study piano?" "now that my concert teaching is completed, how should I start my career?" "I have just finished a successful opera tour, and I want to know the best way to enter America."

No matter what course of action you decide to follow, you will want to acquaint yourself with all that can be done under the plans of the Service. You will want to have clearly in mind your scheme of activity, so that you will understand clearly just what you are able to promise for, say the rest of the year.

A full outline of the News Music Service will be carried next week. Plan to use it to its maximum of possibility.*

(Tell Mr. Isaacson what you think of this department—and what you think it ought to contain. Tell him what you have done, are doing, or contemplate doing in a musical way. He can help you, and will be glad to do so.

Questions, Answers and Discussions

Music Editor, The News:

Will you inform me if the enclosed letter is a society that has a right to charge theatre owners a license for playing music in their theatre, or is it another robbery?

Princess Theatre
Gillett, Arkansas

* Note—Recently the music editor was made an extraordinary offer to tie up with one theatre; but he refused it on the ground that he can accomplish more with a service of one kind, reaching multitudes of people, than to concentrate in any one place. The News feels that those of its subscribers who literally put Mr. Isaacson to work for them will be getting a high-salaried expert on their staff.

Music Editor, The News:

I am wondering if I can receive professional copies of music. I am manager of a small theatre, where we have a three piece orchestra. Please do not publish my name.

K. E. P.

Most of the publishing houses will be glad if you send your name to them, to put you on the lists for their catalogue and special numbers they send out. But most of the theatres and musicians are in the habit of buying the important music they need. I would say that you could get a lot of stuff, however, by sending in your name to the publishing firms—leastways, you will be in the way of receiving all the latest word of the big new hits.

To Shorten Throw

Fred Rowe and Walter McGuire, Grand Theatre, Cambridge City, Ind., say: We would like to ask a question. We are planning on a new projection room. We are now throwing in a nearly straight line to the screen but we wish to shorten this distance and elevate the room about ten feet. What range is specified in degrees for the elevation. We understand 10° is the limit from center of screen to either side, or rather, what angle is the limit for downward throw?

Reply:

For side displacement the limiting angle is usually considered as about 12°. Beyond this figure the keystone effect becomes too great to allow correction.

For downward throw the limit is set by the tilting angle of the projector. This is around 23°, although by certain modifications in some machines this angle may be increased 50%.

Seeing that you did not give us the present throw we cannot tell you how much effect a slight shortening of throw and an elevation of ten feet will have on the projection. If your throw is now around 100 feet the difference will have little effect. By tilting the screen about 5° the keystone distortion will be hardly noticeable.

Shepard Now with Lucas

It will be good news to his many friends to learn that "Don" Shepard, former projectionist of New York City and later with the New York office of the U. T. E., is making good as equipment salesman for the supply house of Harry K. Lucas at Atlanta. He is now traveling through Louisiana and from all reports has impressed the exhibitors in that territory with the Hakuli line of goods.

Mr. Shepard started in the motion picture industry back in 1908 when he accepted a position as operator of an old Edison machine at Sacandaga Park. Later he was with the Darling theatre and the Family theatre of Gloversville, N. Y. Still another move took him to Albany and to a position with the Clinton Square theatre. Here he became interested in Union affairs and was a charter member of Local 324.

In 1917 Mr. Shepard came to New York and to the U. T. E. when the latter was under the management of Joe Hornstein. Leaving there he became a salesman for the Gardiner Screens, covering all of New York State. Next the Inter-Ocean Film Corp. claimed him and placed him in charge of projection. He remained with Inter-Ocean until he was offered and accepted a position as assistant manager of the N. Y. branch of the U. T. E.

The Complete Pan Book

Everything the Showman Needs on Every Picture Released

"The Great Mirror"

(Educational Scenic—One Reel)

ROBERT BRUCE still "carries on," reproducing nature's grandeur in his inimitable way. His latest contribution, "The Great Mirror," may be called a tone-poem without music, since it expresses exquisite harmony through its scenic quality. The spectator catches the atmosphere and sits back in contentment as the vistas of God's cathedral are presented. One gazes upon quiet waters that reflect with distinct shadowy effects the overhanging hills and mountains. Solitude takes hold of the observer and he is truly transported.

There is an enchanting evening scene which for its colorfulness and grandeur has never been excelled by Mr. Bruce. And the excellent tinting embellishes it like an animated painting. The cloud effects, passing in fleecy formation, together with the reflections in the water, cast a spell over one which cannot be denied. It is a highly commendable offering and which set off by appropriate music furnishes the spectator a genuine treat.—LAURENCE REID.

"A Splendid Hazard"

(Allan Dwan—First National)

HAROLD MACGRATH's novel apparently has not lent itself well to the requirements of the best photoplay production but Allan Dwan has smoothed away all rough edges except one continuity. In this connection the picture jumps from one thought to another in such rapid succession that the average mind is at a distinct loss to grasp the real plot. The production is practically perfect from the standpoint of photography; the acting is good and in spots excellent, but it is essentially a class picture, a picture that will appeal only to those who have a background of Napoleonic history.

There is nothing orthodox about the theme of Mr. MacGrath's story. Rather it appeals to the baser emotions. Henry B. Walthall in the stellar role portrays the character of a human paradox with forcefulness and true realism. Cast as a Bavarian who discovers he has the blood of Napoleon in his veins, a man crazed with the one thought of becoming Emperor, he has exceptional opportunity to display the distinct qualities which have given him a high seat in "stardom."

The story begins in France, jumps to America and after several episodes of forced excitement and mystery, shifts back across the water to the Island of Corsica. A hidden treasure, a map and a search constitute the grounds for heralding the production as 'an action-crammed story of virile adventure.' The romance is there too but the story is a tragedy. Some tragedies are fine from the box office point of view and some are not. If locations; probably the best acting Walthall has given us and MacGrath's name will balance the tragedy, then your audiences may be entirely happy after they have seen the treasure found but no explanation made of what was done with it.

Like all book pictures it gives splendid opportunity for exploitation stunts and will appeal to certain audiences. It would never go in a general community.

"You Wouldn't Believe It"

(Mack Sennett Comedy—Two Reels)

THIS Mack Sennett two-reeler has come too quickly after "Married Life" to make it appreciated for what it is—a pure, unadulterated slapstick. Of course, it is being analytical to bring it into comparison with the aforementioned epic of tomfoolery. But searching for the Sennett touch one fails to find it. Any director with one-half his reputation or ability could have produced it. True it is elaborately staged and amusing after a fashion, but the chief weakness is its lack of real comic incident. There is nothing original about "You Wouldn't Believe It," the comedy being a series of stunts based upon a burlesque wedding.

The biggest spot in the picture is an antiquated bit done since time immemorial, but which is still capable of generating laughter. This shows nitro-glycerine blowing up and converting an automobile and its occupants into junk and tatters respectively. At other times the "chase" is well emphasized. The fun-makers are grotesquely attired and are involved in a sort of plot which doesn't ring with any particular note of humor. However, they indulge in facial grimaces and acrobatics and score as well as possible. The offering shouldn't have been shown immediately after "Married Life." It's like eating a pickle on the top of ice-cream.—LAURENCE REID.

"Foam Fantasies"

(Chester Scenic—Released by Educational—One Reel)

"FOAM FANTASIES," the initial Chester "Scenic" is a fanciful bit of film, selected shots of water, sky, etc., well put together with exceptional titles, and may well lay claim to being as artistic a scenic as is seldom seen on any program.

There is nothing to describe in the offering except that the views are well photographed, beautifully tinted and carry a suggestion of the "great outdoors" that goes well on any program this time of the year. J. N. DICKERSON.

"You Tell 'Em Lions, I Roar"

(Century Comedy—Universal—Two Reels)

THE lions are having their musing of late in knockout comedy, and as far as presenting a series of thrills and furnishing some amusing moments one can say that they eclipse the stunts offered by certain slapstickers. "You Tell 'Em Lions, I Roar" doesn't get off to a very good start, but there is no denying the fact that it carries a big punch in its finale. The locale at first is a general store in the country with humor being generated by some grotesque comedians giving chase to one another. A case of linburger cheese is the piece de resistance, and its odor is enough to send the funmakers through all sorts of tricks. Finally the villagers turn up at the local opsy house where an animal trainer and his lions are the attraction.

The trainer is the genuine article to all appearances because he puts the ferocious beasts through their stunts, and cause them to snarl at the least provocation. There seems to be some suspense in the little audience, there is no denying that considerable is felt by the spectators out in front.—LAURENCE REID.

"Through the Keyhole"

(Sunshine Comedy Fox—Two Reels)

THIS burlesque upon the orthodox detective story has been excelled by various Sunshines in the past. There is a fairly good pace set in putting the "business" over, but the fact that it offers little variety makes it strike below the average. The comedians in the comedy are Dave Morris and Glen Cavender, who appear as the detectives of the absurdity. The action discloses them in their office with a stenographer.

The plot further depicts the adventures of the detective with a persistent book-agent, who manages to have as many lives as a cat regardless of the times he is hurled out of the office. Finally, Ed Kennedy in the role of a jealous husband employs them to obtain evidence regarding his wife's infidelity. They follow her to her rooms and succeed in photographing her in the arms of a man who proves to be their very client when they exhibit the proof to him. Cavender is later seen in a hospital where Kennedy, as the surgeon, is about to carve him to pieces. Some of this incident is quite original, although it fails to generate the requisite amount of laughs. The girls have been given a vacation in this release—a vacation richly deserved and they will be all the more appreciated when they return.—LAURENCE REID.

EDITOR'S NOTE Exhibitors will find here a complete list of all feature pictures for last twenty weeks arranged alphabetically as an index to The Complete Plan Book for this period, naming the picture, the producer, the star, the release date, and designating the issue of Motion Picture News which contained the original review.

The following also contains our reviewer's opinion encompassed in a brief single line and gives the comments of exhibitors who have shown the picture and forwarded their opinions. And we also publish a final line fairly summarizing a consensus of all opinions received on each picture. As many of the exhibitors do not comment on every picture (merely checking it Big, Average or Poor), we arrive at the consensus not only by the actual comments made and published, but are also guided by the reports from exhibitors who have made no actual comments, but have merely checked the box office value of the picture.

All the pictures mentioned are five reel features, unless marked otherwise. Serials are reviewed also. At the conclusion of this department will be found the "Flash-Backs," being comments on films released prior to March 6, 1920.

"YES OR NO"

(Norma Talmadge—First National)

Two Ordinary Stories in One with Star Playing Dual Role

NORMA TALMADGE has succumbed to the epidemic of dual roles and the result is "Yes or No," practically two distinct pictures in one in which the versatile and talented star appears as young wives who are objects of attention by philanderers.

As the wife of the business man she listens to the tempter and when finally he casts her off commits suicide. As the working man's better half she repulses the villain's advances and lives happy ever after, husband inventing a washing machine which brings wealth.

The moral is, of course, that "the wages of sin is death" and "be good if you would be happy." Both stories are commonplace in plot and incident and only the work of a very good cast, good direction and a careful production make the offering at all interesting, unless the spectator expects that in the latter sequences the two stories will be merged by some unexpected twist and waits with curiosity for this to happen, which however doesn't. The only connection the two stories have is that a maid for the well to do wife is a sister of the other wife.

Miss Talmadge wears a wig and some fine clothes in the one character, and her own tresses and calico in the other role, with equal grace. Sister Natalie plays the maid we have mentioned, but doesn't make much of an impression either as to looks or ability. The direction is by R. William Neil, who has carried both stories along by cutting from one to the other in sequences. The picture is an adaptation of a play which had a limited run on Broadway a few seasons past.

At best the offering is a vehicle to display Miss Talmadge's talents and if it succeeds it will be because of her personal popularity and undenied ability.—Length, 6 reels.—J. S. Dickerson.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

The question handled in this picture, "Yes or No?" which presents Norma Talmadge in a dramatic dual role, and which comes to the theatre next is of prime importance to every girl who stands on the threshold of maturity. At sometimes in her life every woman must answer "yes" or "no." The picture is adapted from Arthur Goodrich's play of the same name which raised a lot of comment when it appeared upon the stage. It is a splendid story—one that offers the talented star with abundant chances to show her emotional skill. The star is forced to answer "yes" or "no." The momentous question comes to her fraught with tragedy—fraught with happiness too. And it is a big responsibility—this decision.

The story may be called a study in contrasts. The spectator sees the social elite frittering away their time while a moment later, whisked by the magic of the camera a few blocks east, one encounters a working girl, laboring amid squalid poverty to keep her home in a manner worthy of the love of her devoted but preoccupied husbands. Miss Talmadge in the social life of East Side poverty, and charm—with that sure touch and directness of method which has always characterized her interpretations on the screen. Among the assisting players are Rockcliffe Fellows, Frederick Burton and Lowell Sherman, all finished actors. William Neil has the picture with excellent taste, besides seeing to it that no dramatic touches are lost.

PROGRAM READER

An adaptation of the successful stage play, "Yes or No?" which aroused so much discussion on the New York stage when it was presented a few seasons ago, will be shown at the theatre next with the talented Norma Talmadge finding expression in a dual role. It is a character study which tests her emotional skill to the utmost but she comes through with flying colors and again shows why she is called one of the real fine artists of the stage. The play depicts the social elite frittering away their lives in the vain pursuit of pleasure, and touches also upon the sordid life of East Side poverty. A deep, tense, pulsating drama, and one that compels the spectator to pay the strictest attention. Miss Talmadge is surrounded by a most competent cast. William Neil is the director.

SUGGESTIONS

Much can be made from the title of this play. And it can arouse curiosity if played up properly. Those who are unfamiliar with the fact that it was once a play will be kept in great suspense if you feature nothing else but the title with a huge question mark on the billboards or in newspaper space. You can bring out later with follow up notices that it is an adaptation of Arthur Goodrich's play of the same name. By all means concentrate upon the star and tell that she has a dual role which tests her histrionic skill to the utmost. But follow up with the fact that no role is too heavy for this talented artist. Feature it as a tense, absorbing drama of today—the contrast between the vain pursuit of pleasure and the work-a-day world. Play up the supporting cast. The assisting players are all well known.

CATCH LINES

There comes a time in every woman's life when she is forced to answer "yes" or "no." Norma Talmadge answers it here and her decision brings forth a wealth of tense dramatic moments. See "Yes or No?"

See the screen's most capable actress, Norma Talmadge, in one of her greatest performances. See "Yes or No?" an adaptation of the play.

"THE BEST OF LUCK"

(Metro—Screen Classics)

Impressive Production, But Wild Melodrama in Plot

THE first half of this is rich in atmosphere with house parties, dances, good clothes, beautiful scenic locations in abundance, all of which has made necessary the spending of a barrel of money in production, but which contains about as much drama as Ver's almanac. Following comes a fox hunt which is the real thing clean down to the fox. Next a dissolve tells the story of a raid of ancient pirates and explains about the treasure which was lost at sea. This sequence also has cost a great deal and is more than well produced. The last half of the offering is as wild and improbable melodrama as that which usually goes into serials.

Whether the picture as a whole will please audiences is something of a question. There are audiences which will call the melodrama great, but they are not the people who will be interested in the first half of the picture.

Metro's efforts to make this one of the biggest hits of the season is plainly evident. If they have succeeded it is from the care taken with every detail, from direction to lighting. If they have failed it is because the story of this famous English stage success is old stuff in pictures, and in plot the sort of material that producers entering to cheap houses quite often select.

After the cast, which is headed by Jack Holt, gets through "wearing clothes" individualities are largely lost in the melodrama. It is very carefully selected as to types, however, and entirely competent in every respect. Mechanically the picture is perfect. The storm scenes can not be excelled. The wreck of the automobile is excellent, although it is a long shot and loses in value for this reason.

The feature possesses unlimited exploitation opportunities especially from a musical angle. Length, 6 reels. J. S. Dickerson.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

One of the biggest spectacular photoplays of the year, "The Best of Luck," adapted from the famous Drury Lane London melodrama, is booked for the theatre for a ———— days' engagement beginning ————.

All the thrills that ever been put into pictures are contained in this super production from the Metro studios. A big motor car rushing at full speed plunges from a high bridge, a motor cycle on which the heroine is speeding to aid her lover in recovering the lost treasure is wrecked with Kathryn Adams plunging down a steep embankment as a result, and other thrilling scenes of a spectacular nature are enacted that have never been excelled in any picture.

There is a little of everything in this special production, even to a wonderfully exciting fox hunt, with the hounds going in full cry and horses and riders following along the trail. An all star cast headed by Jack Holt smashes the various roles. However, the picture is essentially a spectacular production and as such rivals such other great plays from the same source, such as "The Whip," another Drury Lane success which patrons of theatres will remember.

PROGRAM READER

Booked for a ———— days' engagement at this theatre beginning ———— is one of the outstanding photoplays of the season in the Metro Screen Classics production, "The Best of Luck," adapted from the famous Drury Lane stage success of the same name. Patrons will remember "The Whip," another Drury Lane melodrama which has been produced in pictures and realize what splendid photoplay material these English melodramas are. "The Best of Luck" is offered as a fitting successor to "The Whip" in full belief that it equals that production if not excelling it.

Thrills that have seldom found their way to the screen follow each other in rapid succession in this spectacular production. Not the least of these is a death fight on the bottom of the ocean many fathoms under the waves between hero and villain, a struggle for the hand of a girl and possession of a sunken treasure lost many centuries previously when a pirate ship was sunk off the coast of Scotland. While the locale of the picture is laid in the British Isles, the heroine is an American girl, direct descendant of a famous Scottish clan and who has crossed the sea to get acquainted with her illustrious relatives and make them love her for herself alone and not for the American millions she possesses. The cast is all star, headed by Jack Holt, as the last of a line of famous Scottish chiefs.

SUGGESTIONS

Exploit from the spectacle and thrill angle promising something out of the ordinary and referring to the fact that the production is from the Drury Lane melodrama. Take pains with your musical program using Scottish melodies as a basis. For a prologue number see other pages in this issue or description of a number staged by S. L. Rothapel at the Capitol theatre. Tie ups with music stores in connection with talking machine records, etc., should be easy. Advertising possibilities are presented in the "Mac" of our day, in which the Scottish dress and peculiarities enter are to be recommended. The bag pipe should not be forgotten either on the street or in your presentation.

CATCH LINES

Thrills that have not been duplicated since "The Whip," another adaptation from the same source, the Drury Lane melodrama stage productions, are to be found in this highly interesting story of the search for a sunken treasure which the scions of Scotland, Spain and America vie with each other for supremacy.

"3 GOLD COINS"

(Fox)

Tom Mix Scores Again in Another Characteristic Role

THERE is no question about "3 Gold Coins" being one of the most acceptable offerings that Tom Mix ever had. Certainly it presents him at his darddevilish best, there being a plethora of incidents, fast-moving action, a good flavor of comedy, with the plot moving against a background as picturesque as the situations are colorful and exciting. H. H. Van Loan, the author, has again gauged the personality of the star correctly and has concocted a story which gives Mix plenty to do—and then some. "3 Gold Coins" is Western to the core and presents the star as a never-do-well who is always down in his luck, but who is resourceful enough to take care of himself. We prefer to see Mix in this type of subject rather than finding expression in straight legitimate drama. In fact he is more adaptable to serio-comic interpretations.

The action doesn't lose a minute in getting started and from the time that the hero shoots three gold coins from a fence at a goodly distance and ties them around his neck for good luck, there is measured out sample after sample of highfalutin incident. Mr. Van Loan has thought up some new stunts, but never do they dominate the action. Stunts which eliminate story interest make a picture resemble a vehicle. But "3 Gold Coins" is well fortified with romance, conflict and a deal of suspense. The hero owns what he believes to be a valueless piece of property, which is occasion to introduce the villains, who are disguised as get-rich-quick promoters. They sprinkle the land with oil and mulct the goodly natives out of their money in launching their project. And an effective climax full of two-gun work presents the star crasing the cloud of suspicion which has shadowed him and emerging as a wealthy and honorable hero.

The romance is not a negligible factor, as is often the case when a star is "stunting" through a picture, and it serves to act as a balancing note for the heavier portions of the story. The continuity of Alvin J. Neitz is arranged with compact sequences, and Cliff Smith has taken the situations and fashioned a praiseworthy Western. This director is well grounded in the art of picturizing a work of this character. Again he flashes some of his skill as a landscape artist, for his long shots are picturesque. The star is supported by his horse in several scenes—a horse quite as intelligent as Bill Hart's pinto. Good work is also furnished by Margaret Loomis and the other members of the cast. "3 Gold Coins" is interesting and will certainly appeal.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Tom Mix, the cowboy extraordinary, the screen greatest daredevil, will come to the theatre on _____ in what is considered by many his most exciting and adventurous picture, namely, "3 Gold Coins," an original concoction by H. H. Van Loan, the author of many stories for this Fox star who furnished the screen with the artistic "The Virgin of Stamboul." The author has gauged the star's personality correctly with the result that "3 Gold Coins" looms up as a praiseworthy offering. Mr. Mix plays the part of a devil-may-care fellow who is somewhat of a draftee. He reaches the end of his rope, when fate takes him in hand by presenting him with three gold pieces, the reward of man-servantship, and soon he is on the way to prosperity. Get-rich-quick promoters attempt to fleece him and his fellow citizens out of their wealth by promoting a fake oil stock, but good fortune is with the hero for oil really is located on his land. The action bristles with excitement and stunts skill in the saddle and with the lariat is brought forth again. All his old time written-being compact with incident and suspense. And there is a pleasant romance which gives it an adequate balance. The director has staged the picture amid picturesque scenes—scenes which are as appropriate as his action to the demands of the star. A well balanced cast is found in support.

PROGRAM READER

Tom Mix is coming. The daredevil of the screen—the cowboy extraordinary—is coming in H. H. Van Loan's exciting and adventurous story, "3 Gold Coins." This is said to be one of the finest stories in which the famous Fox star has ever appeared. The star is supplied with stunts which are absolutely new. He plays a devil-may-care sort of hero who has his ups and downs, but who profits by his rich sense of humor and good nature and eventually fortune smiles upon him. The star is seen in the saddle, lassooning an automobile, and other ambidextrous stunts. "3 Gold Coins" comes to the _____ next.

Good Idea Isn't Made the Most of Here

HERE is a story which carries a splendidly humorous idea which strikes us as not being well handled, even though it does offer some interesting moments. The sponsors have seen fit to give it a melodramatic twist which is all right enough, but it would have proven more entertaining had it been developed more broadly or more seriously. There is material here for a legitimate melodrama and also for a farce-comedy. The fact that it chooses a middle course tells it of certain color and vitality. Miss Burke, who is a comedienne, has sensed its values properly, but her supporting company is guilty of overplaying, with the result that the action and incident misses fire.

The story is based upon a kidnapping affair, the result of a runaway girl who will not stay locked in her room. Her fiance and parents endeavor to dissuade her from risking her life in an aeroplane. And she jumps out the window leaving a note telling them to deposit some money at a certain place and she will be returned to them. She finds refuge in the home of a former servant who calls up and gives away the secret. Then the fiance takes advantage of having her kidnapped in reality. His negotiations with the crooks are all right enough as far as the girl is concerned, even though he lands in the hospital with a badly damaged head. And Prudence takes to crime like a fish takes to water.

Dramatic license will excuse the bokum which makes the crooks respect her. She lives with them to all appearances and executes second story work attired in the regulation well fitting suit of men's clothes. And it is during this life of crime that the story sags and loses its vitality. The action here is considerably naive and theatrical. And the humor is relegated to the background except when the coppers are involved in catching the crooks and the adventurous heroine. Her parents and fiance trouble at the thought that their plan doesn't work out according to Hoyle, and just when they are on the point of sending the bloodhounds or a few-leuths after her, she bobs up in her own home with the cops in hot pursuit. The gist of the story is Prudence has her own way since she convinces them that she is capable of taking care of herself. We would have liked to have seen this picture as a farce-comedy or as a straight melodrama. The material is there, but it doesn't belong in a middle course. The technical side of the feature is entirely praiseworthy.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE STORY

Billie Burke, one of the most charming and talented stars of screen and stage, will appear at the _____ theatre next _____ in "Away Goes Prudence," a picture which is ideal in acting forth her captivating personality. Miss Burke has the part of Prudence Thorne, a society girl, who is infatuated with her sweetheart, Hewlett Harland. She takes a kidnapping in order to get money for her father for a new plane, but Hewlett turns the tables on her and arranges a kidnapping of his own. The crooks whose aid he has enlisted make a real kidnapping of it, and compel Prudence to walk a chalk-line delicately to prevent. Eventually, the crooks are captured and Prudence manages to escape to her parents' home. There, when she is about to be arrested, her father discovers her identity and Hewlett makes a shamefaced confession of the plot. It is most amusing picture and one which provides Miss Burke ample opportunity to present her peculiar style of captivating comedy. Percy Marmont, one of the popular leading men these days, appears opposite the star and gives a good account of himself. John S. Robertson, who won fame as the director of "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde," is in charge of the production which means that it is artistic in every way. Kathryn Stuart wrote the scenario from a story by Josephine Lovett.

PROGRAM READER

It is seldom that a motion picture offers a more exciting role for a star than does "Away Goes Prudence." Billie Burke's newest theme, which is to be the feature attraction at the _____ theatre next _____, the star has the role of a girl, mad about flying, whose fiance strives to break her of her pastime by arranging a kidnapping for her. How she is carried through a series of highly exciting adventures will be presented when the picture comes to the _____. Miss Burke plays her part with her characteristic charm and enthusiasm and prominent in her support is Percy Marmont, John S. Robertson is the director in charge—the same man who directed the memorable "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde."

SUGGESTIONS

In featuring this picture be sure to mention that it marks Billie Burke's return to the screen after months of absence. Bring out that she has the part which is highly original to say the least. Feature it as a come-romance which borders on the melodramatic at times. Use stills of the scenes and Miss Burke. Run stories of aviation in your local paper and feature a story of how women are taking as an aviator. Feature the director, telling that he was in charge of "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde," one of the most artistic pictures ever presented. This should attract patronage because the public is quick to grasp good work. Tell something about her leading man, Percy Marmont. Tell that Josephine Lovett wrote the story, and Kathryn Stuart, the continuity, both artists in their line.

"A MASTER STROKE"

(Vitagraph)

Average Program Offering with Bad Plot Angle

IN spite of the fact that this offering is painfully convenient and made to order in story, runs exclusively to titles which explain in detail the plot in lieu of doing this with incident, it will in all probability please the star's personal admirers since it has all the tried and true "movie" stuff, including handsome hero wearing good clothes, and winsome heroine working as a stenog, to say nothing of a plot which is very "intricute."

It is part of this plot which forms our principal objection to the picture. Grand larceny in the first degree is given implied justification for no greater reason than that the hero used the stolen bonds to help a friend to whom he was under obligation. What very easily might have been murder, the deliberate wrecking of an automobile with two passengers, is used without attempt at justification as a sequence in furtherance of the development of the plot. The first mentioned especially looks to us to be dangerous if we are to accept as a fact the influence of the motion picture.

"A Master Stroke" as a production is excellent. The sets and photography are out of the ordinary, many beautiful locations have been secured. The direction and continuity are above reproach and the cast which supports the star is flawless. Length, 5 reels. J. S. Dickinson.

PRESS NOTICE-STORY

"A Master Stroke," a Vitagraph production starring Earle Williams, will be the feature attraction at the _____ theatre for _____ days beginning _____. In book form under the title of "The Three Keys," it had a wide sale and the producers have brought Frederic Van Rensselaer Dey's story to the screen with all its color and dramatic incident. The author is thoroughly conversant with the subject of finance and he has woven his knowledge into a most satisfying fabric of romance, intrigue and suspense. Mr. Williams has the role of a ne'er-do-well who has come to the end of his rope—a role similar to that he enacted in "The Fortune Hunter." Yet in many respects it is entirely different. He appears as Yale Durant who is prevented from committing suicide by the private secretary of his friend. Becoming involved in financial difficulties he appropriates securities of his employer to help an enemy. His employer learns of the transaction and puts the matter up to Yale. The latter declares that the securities are in the safe. Then follows a wild race on the part of the young promoter to secure the stocks and return them to the safe before his employer arrives on the scene. Chester Bennett is in charge of the production and his direction is capable throughout. H. Thompson Rick and Lucien Hubbard made the adaptation.

PROGRAM READER

If you found the man you loved taking bonds that did not belong to him from your employer's safe would you consider him dishonorable? That is the situation that confronts the heroine in "A Master Stroke," a Vitagraph production which comes to this theatre next _____ with Earle Williams as the star. He believed himself a thief, but the girl thought differently when she understood. "A Master Stroke" carries such vital elements as intrigue, adventure, romance, and suspense, and is capably adapted, directed and played. The role enacted by the star is similar to those he interpreted in "The Hornet's Nest," and "The Fortune Hunter," yet in many respects it is entirely different. Frederic Van Rensselaer Dey, one of the popular fictionists, is the author.

SUGGESTIONS

If you played "The Hornet's Nest," "The Black Gate," and "The Fortune Hunter," you can tell your patrons that Earle Williams has a similar story here. Again he appears in a role of a young man who has reaped the end of his rope. Make much of the central situation outlined in the Program Reader and use it to create discussion. Bring it out in appropriate catch lines. Make mention of the author and state that he is one of the most popular writers of the day. Feature the story as a moving drama of high finance and the abiding faith of woman and that such elements as romance, intrigue, action and suspense are featured. Mention the other players.

CATCH LINES

He had reached the end of his rope, then love came unexpectedly. What happened? See Earle Williams in "A Master Stroke."

How can a woman know that a certain man could not be a criminal, even though she caught him robbing a safe? Is it her feminine intuition? See "A Master Stroke," with Earle Williams.

"THE RED LANE"

(Universal)

A Pleasing Picture which Should Interest

IN "The Red Lane" Holman Day has written a story that should appeal and please, not that it is strong and vivid in its own function, but in the fact that it has a combination of elements which are interesting and at the same time different.

Canadian border life is taken as the theme and the author has mixed his romance and thrills in a convincing manner.

The locale is laid in the Maine north woods, on the border of Canada, and is a splendid background for a story which is concerned principally with the lives of the French peasantry who inhabit that country.

The star, Frank Mayo is a pleasing type in the role of the young American customs officer Norman Aldrich, who is determined to overcome all obstacles in his efforts to put right what might.

When the townfolks are being evicted from their home by a scheming lumber company, he takes a hand in the affair and in a thrilling manner with the help of the "people" overcomes the paid hirelings of the company and is rewarded by his election to office.

Romance is also introduced, when a young girl, the daughter of a smuggler, falls in love with Aldrich. The scenes leading up to where he rescues her from the band as she is about to be married to the "villain" are exciting and thrilling.

Capable direction and a good cast help to make this feature one which should please and thrill most audiences, especially in the neighborhood districts. Length, 7 reels. Frank Leonard.

THE CAST

Norman Aldrich	Frank Mayo
Marie Beaubien	Lillian Rich
Dave Ross	James L. Mason
Vestal Beaudin	Jean Hersholt
"Happy"	James O'Neill
Henni Billedeau	Karl Formes
Father Leclan	Paul Weigel
Blanc	Frank Thorne
Joe, the Deputy Sheriff	Harry Luntont

Story by Holman Day.
 Scenario by Violet Clark.
 Directed by Lynn Reynolds.

PRESS NOTICE-STORY

Frank Mayo in his latest Universal production, "The Red Lane," will be the attraction at the _____ theatre on _____ of next _____. It is a gripping story of the north woods and its primitive people, told by Holman Day, whose success in writing tales of this description is said to be supreme.

In this story Mr. Day has again chosen the American Canadian border as a locale for adventure and romance and has filled it to the brim with incident and action.

A few of Holman Day's previous works are "Pine Tree Ballads," "The Mayor of the Woods," and "Old King Spring."

In this feature Frank Mayo is seen in the role of a young American customs officer who is in love with the daughter of a border saloon keeper, the latter being none too scrupulous about his honesty and his associates.

The star has many trials with the inhabitants in his efforts to put right above might but is successful in the end when he is elected to the assembly. His troubles with the smugglers, his tireless efforts in putting down mob rule and his romance with the girl of his dreams are thrilling and exciting.

In the cast are Lillian Rich, James L. Mason, Jean Hersholt, James O'Neill, Karl Formes, Paul Weigel, Frank Thorne and Harry Luntont.

PROGRAM READER

If you like pictures of the Canadian border and the great North Woods with plenty of action and incident coupled with romance, you should see "The Red Lane," Universal's latest feature with Frank Mayo as star.

The story was written by Holman Day, whose tales of border life have always made interesting matter for red-blooded Americans, and whose previous works, "Pine Tree Ballads," "The Mayor of the Woods," and "Old King Spring," have furnished delightful reading in printed form.

In this feature Frank Mayo is seen as a young American customs officer in love with the daughter of a none too scrupulous saloon keeper. His troubles with smugglers, his tireless efforts in putting down mob rule and his bitter fight for a seat in the assembly, are only a few incidents in a story intermingled with romance.

SUGGESTIONS

This picture might be called a good program feature with enough thrills, suspense and romance injected to make it interest and excite the emotions. Be sure and tell your patrons that it is a story of the Canadian border but be sure and tell your patrons that it concerns principally the lives of the French peasantry who dwell in that part of the country.

Holman Day, the author has drawn his characters true to life, so you need not be afraid to exploit this point in your advertising.

The big scenes in the story are the hero's fight with the lumber company's paid hirelings in which he is backed up by the townfolks and his efforts to rescue the heroine from the villains who are about to marry her to a member of the band. You might run strong catch lines on these scenes without any fear of a comeback.

Of course, the star and cast should be played up for they are good both as to types and playing ability.

CATCH LINES

"THE LADDER OF LIES"

(Paramount-Artcraft)

Story of Woman's Self-Sacrifice Is Interestingly Told

WHEN a story is based upon a woman's spirit of self-sacrifice brought about by dishonoring her name to protect the home of a man who once loved her and whom she holds in the highest esteem, it is always certain of carrying sufficient appeal to enlist the sympathy of the average reader. When it is depicted upon the screen with its dramatic possibilities realized to the utmost, it takes on an interest the force of which cannot be denied. There are certain loopholes in this story of how happy married life can never rest upon a foundation of lies. While it is reasonable to believe that a woman would take the course that is depicted here, it isn't hardly within reason to expect the men in her life to act so utterly callidish.

She lies and therefore compromises herself to spare her erstwhile fiancé the misery of learning about the weak and vapid character of his butterfly wife. They have been such good friends that he is still an influence in her life and she makes promises to him to save herself from degradation at the hands of a philanderer. The good woman becomes engaged to the partner of her friend and when the ceremony looms up in the offing, the latter imparts the information which he has discovered—namely her past conduct, never realizing that it is his own wife who has trespassed. The villain finally makes amends with her second fiancé, and the story is back where it started.

As far as saving her friend her spirit of self-sacrifice has availed nothing. And it looks to us as if both men are not deserving of such a good woman's friendship and love. The picture is well told, the interest being held through sequences of cumulative dramatic power with the high lights standing out like beacons. It is easily the best offering Miss Clayton has had in several months. And she seems to have appreciated it through the sincerity and enthusiasm which mark her portrayal. The star always gives poise and dignity to her roles and such virtues are necessary in a story of this character. Clyde Fillmore as the figure who married the butterfly, Charles Meredith as the second lover and Irving Cummings as the adventurer in hearts, are all effective in their roles. Tom Forman's direction is skilful in every department. Edith Kennedy's scenario is well arranged.

PRESS NOTICE STORY

Ethel Clayton's new starring vehicle, "The Ladder of Lies," by Harold Vickers, which will come to the theatre beginning — is interpreted as the ladder upon which man climbs to happiness. It is shown that this ladder must be founded upon truth, for if it rests upon a lie, it will surely fall ere man has reached the top. This is one of the most powerful themes which Miss Clayton has interpreted for some time. "The Ladder of Lies" may be defined as the old story of woman's sacrifice for a man, but done with an entirely new twist. In this tale, the heroine doesn't love the man for whom she is risking her good name, but is just his good friend, anxious to shield him from the fact that the woman he married is unfaithful.

When her own honor is impugned, as the result, in the eyes of the man she loves, the heroine is silent, until the way is unexpectedly opened to her happiness. Miss Clayton was never more attractive than in "The Ladder of Lies" and never has she revealed such a mastery of her art. The picture presents ample opportunities for the display of her talent. It is also well fortified with a splendid moral. The star's support is praiseworthy, including such favorites as Charles Meredith, Irving Cummings and Clyde Fillmore. Tom Forman, for some time a leading man, branches out here as the director. Edith Kennedy, an experienced scenarist, attended to the adaptation.

PROGRAM READER

Have you ever climbed a ladder and stubbed your toe on one of the rungs? Have you ever climbed one that rested in soft earth and felt it sway under you as you climbed upward? This same illustration can be applied to the ladder of life. Before humanity starts climbing upward the ladder should first be inspected. This, briefly, is the theme of Ethel Clayton's newest Paramount-Artcraft picture, "The Ladder of Lies," which comes to the — theatre next —. Miss Clayton is said to contribute some of the finest work she has ever flashed on the screen and her supporting cast is entirely adequate. Tom Forman, erstwhile leading man makes his debut here as a director. The story was written by Harold Vickers, and scenarioized by Edith Kennedy. It is a genuine treat in picture entertainment. It presents the tale of woman's sacrifice in a new way.

SUGGESTIONS

The exhibitor should feature that this picture treats of woman's sacrifice for man in an entirely new way. He should exploit it as an appealing tense feature in which the emotional and charming Ethel Clayton has one of the finest roles which she has ever been identified with on the screen. The fact that Tom Forman, erstwhile leading man, is the director should not be overlooked. And the supporting cast should come in for good notices. The exhibitor should emphasize the central situation in his copy. And bring out the illustration emphasized in the program reader. The names of the author and adaptor should be made prominent. An appropriate prologue based upon the theme should be a stimulant toward enjoying the feature.

"A BROADWAY COWBOY"

(Hampton-Pathe)

William Desmond Has an Entertainment Comedy Here

THAT William Desmond has qualified as a light comedian has been testified to before, but his latest release, "A Broadway Cowboy," by Byron Morgan, brings out his versatility in this direction as it has never been brought out before. In keeping tabs on the star we must say that the picture is about the best thing he has had since "The Mints of Hell." Where the latter presented him in a straightforward Western role, his newest offers him in a take-off on the conventional cowboy. It's a good story—one which has a gaiety and sparkle that cannot be denied and it has all the appearances of being quite original.

Mr. Desmond portrays the part of a stage Westerner, the third act of the play holding New York spellbound through its primitive action. When the show takes to the road, the star is forced to go through the identical situations in real life that he enacted behind the footlights. The heroine is an infatuated actress girl who has come to New York from Montana to enter a finishing school. The high lights do not wait to present themselves. A fruitful moment is arrived at when the star loses his trunk and is forced to wear his cowboy disguise. And the local sheriff of the girl's town, being extremely jealous of his romantic ardor, sees to it that the resourceful thespian is rendered hors-d'combat. Which is occasion to score again with some delicious humor.

The show is billed for the cowboy, but the hero is locked up in a neighboring jail on general principles. But he turns the tables on the officers and escapes, however, not before they are given a taste of his medicine. The picture has all the appearances of a regulation Western here, though dressed up with satirical points. A time comes when the jealous sheriff catches him with a stolen horse and events boom up black for him. He is about to be strung up just as he was in the third act of the play when the heroine rides into the scene, climbs a tree unmotivated, and cuts the rope, and the "cowboy" gallops away to safety. Here is a new twist to present a scene having a make-believe character and to duplicate it in reality. And the actor being versed in it is able to make himself adaptable. There is a deal of rousing action and considerable suspense and the atmosphere of the great outdoors is always effective. Mr. Desmond plays the part in a spirited fashion and his support is adequate. Joseph Franz' direction is praiseworthy. —Laurence Reid.

THE CAST

Burke Randolph	William Desmond
Sheriff Dan McGann	Thomas Delmar
Colonel Jordan	J. P. Lockney
Sheriff Sims	Clarke Comstock
Archer-at-Large	Paddy McGuire
Betty Jordan	Betty Francisco

By Byron Morgan.

Directed by Joseph Franz.

PRESS NOTICE STORY

The versatile William Desmond, who is equally at home in comedy roles as he is in straight drama, will come to the — theatre next — in "A Broadway Cowboy," which is said to be one of the most amusing pictures that the popular star has ever had. This is an original contribution by Byron Morgan and the story places Mr. Desmond as a cowboy of the stage. The action unfolds a western melodrama, the third act of which has fascinated New York for a whole season. And among the hero worshippers at the shrine of the star is Betty Francisco, a Montana girl, who is attending school in the metropolis. Eventually the play takes to the road and is billed for the very town in which Betty lives.

But the actor has a rival in the person of Dan McGann, and the latter sees to it that Randolph is arrested in a neighboring town. The thespian has lost his trunk which forces him to wear his stage disguise of a cowboy. And to he is forced to act his western melodrama in real life. The picture is a fast-moving comedy which scores from inception to conclusion and the scenes and situations are rich in incident. Mr. Desmond acts the pseudo-Westerner with acceptable spirit and his support which includes the personable Betty Francisco, Thomas Delmar and J. P. Lockney, is entirely capable. The director has staged the picture with appropriate backgrounds. —Byron Morgan is the author.

PROGRAM READER

He was only a stage cowboy but something about his manner and his ability to handle two guns attracted a Western girl in the audience. When the show took to the road he lost his trunk and was forced to wear his cowboy disguise. Then one day she learned that the play was coming to her Montana town much to the disgust of the local sheriff. How the latter attempts to frustrate the actor's romance—how the actor adapts himself to his environment and ably takes care of himself through his experience in playing his Western role are events which lead to a most appropriate climax. "A Broadway Cowboy" is original to the screen—a comedy-drama which carries plenty of action and incident. William Desmond is the star. The picture will play the — theatre next —.

SUGGESTIONS

You can tell your patrons that William Desmond has the best picture since his "Mints of Hell." Bring out that the star is as talented in giving expression to comedy parts as he is in straight drama. Tell that the story is highly original and depicts the adventures of a stage cowboy who is forced by circumstances to play his character in real life. Play up the title. Tell that the star is supported by Betty Francisco, a newcomer to the screen, and an actress with oodles of personality. Feature the picture as a comedy-drama of the stage and the boundless use the catch lines based upon the double role the hero has to play. He is forced to wear his cowboy suit and encounter the same experiences off stage. You might stage the identical situation of the third act of the play for a prologue.

"BAB'S CANDIDATE"

(Vitagraph)

Fairly Interesting Story which Drags Considerably at Times

THIS story is said to have won a prize for its author for displaying a technique closely approaching that of O. Henry. Whatever merits it possessed originally are not successfully brought out in the screen version. Which may be due to the adaptation, or the direction, or both. There is no question that it is decidedly more interesting via the printed page than translated into film entertainment. For one thing it lacks moving moments since it presents very little action and incident. The situations and climaxes are few and far between. Which sort of emphasizes the weaknesses—one of which is its draggy development. The author has hit upon the germ of a good idea—an idea which has its humorous possibilities. And in bringing out a mirth-provoking glow occasionally, the director has caught the spirit of the piece at its best.

Some of this credit belongs to George Fawcett, who gives another of his cameo portrayals in a quaint character study. And there is no denying that Corinne Griffith gives it tone and quality by the aristocracy and good taste that she puts into the role of the young heroine who basks in the glamor of politics. She is engaged to a certain youth who is ambitious to be elected to the state legislature, but her father, a United States Senator, is unable to see his qualities as a law-maker. The old "fire-eater" finally encourages his daughter to dabble in politics, and before she is through her fiance goes down to ignominious defeat. The senator, a power in his community, decides that the village pauper is the proper candidate, and Bab as his campaign manager brings him through a winner. Naturally the fiance appreciates the fact that he is more fitted to be a good lawyer and father gives his consent.

One can readily see that the picture has a sound and logical idea, and had it been more spontaneously developed it would have scored as one of the bright offerings of the year. There is evidence of padding in several scenes and bits of action don't offer anything more than close-ups of Miss Griffith's lovely personality. Her charm and ability to wear mildred's wardrobe certainly add to the picture's worth. There is a deal of local color and atmosphere which tone up the offering not a little. Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"Bab's Candidate," a Vitagraph production, starring Corinne Griffith, which will be shown at the _____ theatre next _____ is a screen adaptation of "Gumshoe 4-B," a story by Forrest Crissey, which appeared originally in Harper's Magazine and which was allotted a prize in the O. Henry Memorial Contest offered by the American Society of Arts and Sciences. The tale is woven around political life as it is found in small towns. The heroine is the daughter of a Senator, who controls the political wires of his community. And she attempts to present her father in a favorable light with the fiery lawmaker to little effect. But David Darrow is convinced that he has the makings of a good legislator, is elected to office, while the senator is equally convinced that it will bring about his ruin.

Barbara, or Bab as she is familiarly called, undertakes the plan of disillusioning her fiance by exploiting the personality of the town pauper. She engineers the candidacy of the latter and when he is elected the townspeople are happy since a candidate is transferred to the state. The senator never allows a defeated candidate to become miserable in mind and David is given his consent to marrying Bab under the promise that he will not talk but pay strict attention to his profession. The picture carries a deal of local color and homespun touches and these are emphasized by a cast of genuine types. Miss Griffith again reveals her delightful personality and prominent in her support are George Fawcett, Webster Campbell and Charles Abbe. Lucien Hubbard wrote the scenario while Edward Griffith directed.

PROGRAM READER

The author of "Bab's Candidate," Forrest Crissey, received recognition with this story because he developed a style, plot and treatment closely approaching the technique of O. Henry. After it was published Vitagraph secured the rights to it and the result is a highly satisfying entertainment which presents the charming Corinne Griffith as the star. The picture is woven around political life as it concerns petty politicians and a United States senator and a novel note is struck when a feminine hand is seen in control of nominations. The picture abounds with local color and a delightful romance accompanies the serio-comic action. Miss Griffith is supported by that able character actor, George Fawcett, Webster Campbell and others. "PARLOR, BEDROOM AND BATH"

(Screen Classics—Metro)

Stage Success Is Rather Weak in Its Screen Version

ANOTHER case in which a successful farce comedy upon the stage failed to score in its film translation is presented in "Parlor, Bedroom and Bath." Having seen both productions, we will say that there is no fault to be found with the adaptation. The high spot of the play have been reproduced upon the screen, but deprived of sparkling dialogue, and not taken to the utmost advantage of by the player, the offering is a weak substitute. For one thing the tempo has been gamped in the regulation farce-comedy manner. Which is lamentable. If a subject lacks idea or novelty, the virtues must be covered up through a spontaneous development.

The plot isn't original, it being the visualization of a flirtatious husband endeavoring to be more devilish than usual in order to show his wife that she isn't sure of his affection. It is a single-track idea which doesn't offer enough variety to extend itself through five reels. Which, of course, introduces a lot of repetitious detail. And to make it broad, to give it color, plentiful slapstick is supplied and a tongue out or two. And so the treatment seems forced. Most of the action is told in subtitles with the majority lifted from the play. So everything is anticipated and surprise is missing. And humor can never be expressed in conversations when it is deprived of incident. Certain high notes are indulged in by the principals which met with response on the stage, but which are shown up here in all their bald nakedness.

Edward Dillon, the director, has done as well as could be expected with the material. Since he has proven his ability with farce-comedies before, the blame must not be attached to him. So it looks as if "Parlor, Bedroom and Bath" is not good screen material. It is primarily a subject of dialogue with emphasis laid upon delicate conversation. It is one of the bedroom farces and while this vague was emphasized a short time ago, there is no question that it has somewhat lost its punch. It is doubtful if more adaptable players could have brought out any of its original humor, because of the severity of amusing moments. Pictures must carry more than single-track ideas to get over nowadays. The leading character, in negligence, are compromised in a hotel bedroom. And there you are. The backgrounds are in good taste and entirely appropriate. Technically the picture is above reproach. But as a story it lacks spirit, color, action, suspense and humor. Mr. Dillon has kept it within bounds. Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"Parlor, Bedroom and Bath," the screen farce which sets forth the misadventures of a model husband who won his wife under false pretenses of devilishness, will be the feature attraction at the _____ theatre beginning _____. This farce in its original version captivated Broadway for several months and scored one of the hits of the season. It has been said that the play has lost none of its gayety and sparkle in the screen translation. The central idea deals with the matrimonial troubles of Reggie Irving who, to prove to his wife that he is an expert romancer, conspires with Polly Hathaway, girl reporter on a society scandal paper, to blemish his own reputation.

But the young bride discovers the deception and from this amusing complication is precipitated a score of comic incidents—all of which are calculated to rouse the risibilities of an audience. Eugene Pallette, who will be remembered as the model husband in "Fair and Warmer," plays the part of the devilish husband with plenty of fervor. Others who assist him are Ruth Stonehouse in the part of the reporter, Kathleen Kirkham and Henry Miller, Jr., Edward Dillon, the director, has brought forth all the high lights that were found in the original and has kept it sparkling with a good comedy touch. June Mathis and A. P. Younger adapted the picture.

Five Kinds of Advertising Discussed by Successful Exhibitors

Prominent Pittsburgh Showmen Argue Best Methods of Exploiting Pictures

Lobby Displays Best Medium at Olympic

By PETER ANTONOPOLOS

Manager, Olympic Theatre, Pittsburgh.

"N O other form of motion picture exploitation has brought to me results equal to those gained by the well-planned lobby display.

"For a while I made the usual exhibitor mistake in trying to make the lobby beautify the house instead of sell the picture to the public. Prettiness and attractiveness are unsought by me when the time comes to design a lobby. If they come naturally after the selling points of a picture have been emphasized, well and good. But it's salesmanship first, beauty second.

"The lobby display is the big brother to the newspaper display ad. An exhibitor might get his artist to paint a pretty half-tone proposition—something that would be the prettiest thing printed in the newspaper and yet if the selling argument was not there, the display ad in my estimation would not be worth the match to burn it.

"It's the same way with the lobby display. No matter how pretty your lobby may look, if you haven't got the selling punch, you're off the track. In my opinion, there is no sense in spending money for something that can't bring a return. Any time that I find my lobby displays having no other means than to beautify my house I intend to quit making use of them.

Peter Antonopolos, manager of the Olympic theatre, Pittsburgh

WHAT form of publicity and exploitation produces the greatest results, all things considered, is a question of great moment to every exhibitor. If it could be decided showmen would be able to save a lot of money. That it can not, being a particular problem with individuals and individual houses seems certain when five prominent exhibitors in one city, Pittsburgh, pick five different kinds of exploitation and put them forward as proven the most successful.

Peter Antonopolos, manager of the Olympic theatre, argues for the lobby display, or rather the well planned lobby display.

Sam Sivitz, publicity manager for the Rowland and Clark theatres, states presentation is the all important thing in coaxing the public into the theatre.

T. H. Schrader, manager of the Columbia, claims that the billboards hold first place as a publicity agent.

N. A. Benson, manager of the Stadium theatre, believes in originating novelties.

Each manager has more than a right to his opinion, for each has been successfully following out his theories, and each one has had his theories strengthened by years of experiment as practical showmen.

However, the arguments and statements made in this five-part article are interesting reading, and from it live showmen will be able to glean some facts which will aid them in their own particular problem of properly informing the public concerning the attractions to be shown in their theatres.

"The nature of the picture, of course, has most to do with the character of the lobby. When mapping out my lobby for special features, I first set the theme and atmosphere surrounding the picture. I always aim to make the exploitation suggest what is going to take place, and I never seize on one end in a plot to dope out a freak lobby.

"The thoughts of horse racing which always occur with the mention of Kentucky and the fact that the plot hinges on the outcome of a horse race gave me the inspiration for 'The Olympic Handicap' which I staged during my run of 'In Old Kentucky.' Without cluttering up the lobby I placed canvas and burlap representations of a race track in such a manner that a fairly truthful likeness was gained.

"But above all, I did not design the lobby for a smash. By arrangement of cut-outs showing the characters in the picture I brought out the fact that the result of a race would guide life events.

"The lobby must represent a short, rememberable, concise slogan. The kick must be there.

Billboards Hold First Place at the Columbia

By T. H. SCHRADER

Manager, Columbia Theatre, Pittsburgh.

"AS long as the wheels of the show-world revolve, the billboard will always hold a place by itself in the showman's exploitation. Time was, when old-time circus showmen used to travel from town to town heralding their wares, when the size of the audiences was estimated by the number of billboards bought. Even then, many of the ardent theatregoers judged the merit of an attraction by what the billboards represented.

"As the day of the sensational billboard poster has passed there has come upon the exhibitor an added responsibility. It is up to him to see that his billboard advertising is as up-to-date as his general theatre policy. In other words, I mean to say that the billboard is today a matter of art, not a method of telling the public that 'The Greatest and Grandest of All Mastodon Amusement Efforts Is Coming.'

"I need to cite no other proof than the fact that I use twelve billboards to boost the attractions played at the Columbia. Because of the fact that the twenty-four sheet stands cost more than other and attract more attention as a general thing, we try to make them worth more to us. We try to centralize our 24-sheet efforts in putting as attractive a poster as possible before the public.

"What little civic opposition there has been to billboard advertising can usually be traced to some flagrant bit of risqué poster. The sensational billboard that holds an ill influence for children is as needless as it is unwelcome.

T. H. Schrader, manager of the Columbia theatre, Pittsburgh

Opinions as to Exploitation Mediums

"I am of the opinion that some of the best billboard advertising ever done by the Columbia was done in the interest of Katherine MacDonald's—'The Thunder bolt.' In boasting Miss MacDonald as the most beautiful woman in the world it was naturally up to the theatre to show proof. This we did by the billboards. And as long as exhibitors select the artistic poster they are quite sure of good results.

"I believe that there are hundreds of people who never look at a newspaper to find out what attractions the motion picture houses are running. And I think that the most practical and most forceful way to reach this class of people is through the billboard, posted to reach all conveniently near a popular corner. The automobile has the billboard valuable to the exhibitor as it was to the circus man."

Presentation Big Item Says Sivitz

By SAM SIVITZ

Publicity Manager of Rowland & Clark Theatres, Pittsburgh.

"IF you present your attractions in the correct way, giving a care to comfort of the audience, perfection of projection and general atmosphere of the house, you have built up the greatest of all exploitation assets. This sounds rather strange, coming from one whose chief work is press-agenting. But it is my earnest belief.

"There's no exploitation that carries a greater fan-power than good presentation. If you please your audience you won't have any trouble in keeping your house playing to capacity. Word-to-mouth publicity is the most successful that there is, in my estimation. If an exhibitor can build this up he has got practically everything he wants in the way of feature exploitation. And he can build this up only by a careful study of his patrons and the conditions that surround the daily operation of his house.

"Good projection is assured by a competent operator, perfect apparatus and the spirit of loyalty and co-operation on the part of the operator. A break in film at an interesting situation in the story is not pleasing to the modern audience. There was a time when it was overlooked, but not any more.

"Presentation is a matter of study. I know of no better hunch than the exploitation departments of the trade papers for exhibitors who want new ideas in presentation."

"Again the problem of the co-operation of employees comes up when atmosphere is considered. If the exhibitor can secure the personal interest of attendants, he will go a long way towards exploiting his theatre.

Samuel Sivitz, publicity manager of the Rowland and Clark theatres, Pittsburgh.

Novelties Most Effective Reports Benson

By N. A. BENSON

Manager, Stadium Theatre, Pittsburgh.

"GIVE the people something to talk about.

"That's my experience in putting over pictures with exploitation.

"A man who has been in the exhibiting game since pictures first began to flicker doesn't need a world of advice about exploitation. There's no argument about it. Without it, a theatre is in the same class with a religious institution that continually complain about attendance.

"The difference between a church and a theatre is exploitation.

"I have found that the best way to interest people in my theatre is through novelty in exploitation.

"The local schoolhouses, the American Legion, the Armenian Committee of Relief, Girl's Welfare Committee's, women's clothing shops that will co-operate with the loan of models,—these are only a few of the sources that the exhibitor can draw on in his search for exploitation. Unusual twists bring out the novelty.

"When I was figuring out an exploitation stunt for a recent picture, one of my ushers came to me with an idea to allow kissing during the few seconds in which the house would be darkened. We were playing a rather kissy picture in 'The Love Expert.'

"Thus it came about that the Columbia allowed sweethearts to kiss during the showing of 'The Love Expert.'

"And maybe the news didn't travel. We've staged quite a number of novelties but none as fascinating.

Newspaper Displays Blackstone's Favorite

By ELMER HARRIS

Manager, Blackstone Theatre, Pittsburgh

"NEWSPAPER display advertising is my right bower when it comes to motion picture exploitation.

"The Blackstone has always been a strong advocate of newspaper display and we have planned many display campaigns, some of which have gone over with more success than others.

"My ideas of newspaper display writing are summarized from the campaigns that have scored the maximum success. There are a few simple rules that we go by.

"One plan that we have found advantageous is the hand-drawn display. We have this executed by our own publicity artist. This includes drawing the entire ad and having a lithograph cut made of it. This entails expense, but when the value of it is considered in ratio to the extra attention it attracts we feel that it is well worth the difference in cost.

"In our campaign for 'Summertime' we used this form of display extensively. We had four different drawings, cuts made of each, and used only the four different displays during the picture's run of one week.

"A general rule to go by is: Keep the display short and snappy, without too much illustration and decoration—Play up the name of your star—And give a slight idea of what your picture is about. Be human, above all things—Don't write grammar—write plain, every-day, interesting facts."

Uses Electric Current to Exploit "Live Sparks"

The people of Denver, Colorado, within a considerable radius of the location of the Strand Theatre of that city on the opening night of "Live Sparks," were startled out of their usual complacency when high voltage sparks blazed and crackled from the front of the theatre, due to an unusual technical lobby stunt. Hurrying to the theatre they found that the cause of their alarm was not accidental but the cleverly-designed attention-getting device erected by the Strand management.

To exploit "Live Sparks," the management of the Strand theatre erected an oil derrick of considerable height in the centre of their lobby. Electric wires were run out from the centre of the derrick to connect up with high voltage current. One wire was grounded, and the other operated by a telegraph key. By employing a person within the theatre to operate the key a tremendous spark was thrown. The key was operated at night, and naturally this stunt created a sensation. Besides the lightning-like flash obtained, the spark was of such high voltage that the crackling could be heard for many blocks.

Young But in the Ascendant

J. GORDON COOPER, brother of the well-known Marion of stellar fame, has been winning success in the directorial field while his gifted sister has been acquiring laurels as one of the popular actresses of the screen. It is principally to his sister's success as an artist in film that Mr. Cooper owes his initial interest in the film game, and he is not slow in acknowledging that it was her influence that first turned him to the screen and its possibilities. But whatever credit the pretty Marion may have claim to in steering her brother screenward, that young gentleman, since his entrance into film activities, has clearly demonstrated that he has ability of his own and has already achieved a marked degree of success in his chosen field.

Though born in Baltimore, Md., J. Gordon Cooper spent his school-days in New York and completed his education at St. Francis Xavier's College, New York City. He has been something of a globe trotter, having spent considerable time in traveling between America and foreign ports. London, Paris, Cuba, Mexico, etc., have been his stamping grounds, and it is to his intimate acquaintance with the customs, characteristics and environment of foreign peoples that Mr. Cooper owes his first success as a yielder of the microphone.

Mr. Cooper's first experience in the art of picture making was gained when he became associated with R. A. Walsh as assistant-director. Mr. Walsh found the knowledge acquired by his young assistant during his travels to be of great help in the selection of racial types and in instilling a faithful reproduction of foreign customs and characterizations into his pictures. Mr. Cooper was Walsh's right-hand man during the time when some of the greatest creations of the Walsh brand were brought to the screen. "The Honor System," "Regeneration," "Carmen," "Evangeline" are some of the Walsh productions in the making of which Cooper took an important part.

Mr. Cooper's association with Walsh came to an end when an offer was extended to the young assistant-director to direct the picture around the experiences of Detective Flynn, Chief of the United States Secret Service. Mr. Cooper directed four of these eight pictures which, released by Republic, have already won considerable favor during their run at the Capitol theatre, New York. Mr. Cooper's part in the making of these interesting short-subjects has added to his success as a director.

The latest contribution of J. Gordon Cooper to the screen has been his direction of the fifteen-episode serial, "The Evil Eye," starring Benny Leonard. That a young director should be selected to take charge of a serial production—requiring unusual skill in manipulating a multitude of details, keeping the action going "on high" at all times and sustaining the interest throughout the entire length of a continuous picture of fifteen parts—is a departure from the customary mode of procedure. And when a young director tackles this job and sees it through to a successful finish, his possession of an ability above the average is beyond question. And yet this is what young Cooper did in undertaking the direction of "The Evil Eye," and his work in taking an inexperienced professional ring-master and putting him successfully through the "paces" of a stellar role for thirty-reeks adds fresh distinction to his career as a director.

Readiness to speak during an interview is not a prominent trait of Mr. Cooper, but he did express himself forcibly on some of his convictions regarding various questions of production. "To begin with," said Mr. Cooper, "I believe the story with good direction is what goes most toward making a picture a success. The story is the paramount factor. I believe the interesting novel that has been widely read and the well-known stage-play offer excellent possibilities, but the average novel and stage-play must first undergo considerable modification before it can be made into a good picture-play. However, if a good story is present, the thing most essential is provided for and then it is up to the director. As for cutting, I insist that this phase of the work be done entirely by myself. I believe nobody associated with the making of a picture is in a better position to determine the dramatic values of the various scenes in the production than the director, and consequently I am convinced that nobody but he should carry out the work of cutting the picture and assembling it for final presentation."

Juanita Hansen, starring in Pathe serials under the direction of George B. Seitz

"Up in Mary's Attic" Reports Favorable

Reports from the sections of the country where "Up in Mary's Attic," the comedy drama being distributed by Fine Arts Pictures, Inc., has been released indicate a sweeping success for exhibitors according to an announcement by Murray W. Garsson, President of the corporation.

The E. & H. Productions, Inc., which is distributing the picture from Atlanta, Ga., report that while on the average production they are accustomed to purchase three prints for their territory, five prints are working continually.

BUFFALO

J. F. Kimberly, Father, T. W. Brady, Republic, F. Lawler, Hallmark; N. Filkins, Merritt and Henry W. Kahn, Metro, are the new members of the Buffalo Motion Picture Exchange Managers' association.

Otto Siegel, former assistant manager to P. H. Smith at First National, has accepted a similar position with Mr. Smith, who is now manager of the Robinson-Cole office. Herbert Kaufman and M. Edwards also of First National, have joined to Robertson-Cole.

The Reelart office is now established on the second floor of the new building at 254 Franklin street, the first floor of which will soon be occupied by Famous Players-Lasky. The office is one of the most lavishly equipped in the country, featuring a miniature theatre for projection purposes. Harry P. Lasky has secured the Victoria theatre, Rochester, where Manager J. J. Egan will show the entire Reelart output. He has also placed the output in the Avon theatre, Ithaca, and the Lumberg, Niagara Falls.

Jack Kirsch has resigned as manager of the Ideal Drama Exchange, Inc. He expects to remain in the business, in which he has been engaged many years and will announce his plans soon.

J. H. Greenwald, Fox exchange manager, has been touring through the territory screening the new season features. He expects W. R. Sheehan, general manager, in Buffalo the end of the month for a conference.

Frank J. A. McCarthy, formerly with Fox, has joined the Famous Players-Lasky sales staff. Manager Allan S. Morris reports signing up the Reelart corporation in Rochester, operating the Regent, Gordon and Piccadilly theatres, for the entire product of 1919-20.

"Bill" West expects to connect up with a local theatre for film exchange. He is no longer connected with the Regent theatre. "Bill" is also former manager of the Star theatre.

Elmer C. Winegar, manager of the Central Park theatre, has returned from Seattle where he journeyed with Isabella Temple, Nollies of the Mystic Shrine, to make a film history of the trip. Mr. Winegar shot some wonderful stuff, which will be exhibited at a special meeting of the Shrines.

The W. W. Holkinson corporation has closed its summer season of photoplay presentations at the Shubert-Tick theatre. The proposition was not a howling success.

ST. LOUIS

Arthur S. Friend, treasurer of Famous Players-Lasky, Max Goldstein of the same company, and Jack Cohn were recent St. Louis visitors.

Acce Berry, general mayflower representative, is on a tour to see that "The Deep Purple" is properly landed at hard for a "good opening."

The new Grand Florissant Airdome was opened recently to capacity audiences.

Erection and improvement operations will begin within the next fortnight on two new motion picture houses in the St. Louis business district, according to plans officially announced this week by the Famous Players-Lasky Missouri Corporation and the Buena Amusement and Investment Company. The Famous Players Corporation have purchased a building at 207 North Broadway, formerly occupied by the Mechanics-American National Bank. A price of $150,000 was paid for the property on which improvement plans have already been formulated. It is intended to have the present structure converted into a complete and modernly equipped motion picture theatre before the end of September. The new theatre, which will have a frontage on Broadway of 29 feet by a depth of 127 feet, will be known as the Criterion and will be modeled after the Criterion theatre of New York. It will have a seating capacity of 900 and all the latest innovations for theatrical comfort and convenience. According to Fred L. Cornwell, president of the Famous Players-Miscouri Corporation, approximately $90,000 will be spent in improvements and decorations.

The Buena Amusement and Investment Company has begun the wrecking of the present buildings on the northwest corner of Sixth and Chestnut. The proposed theatre will be known as the Capitol and will show first-run productions. Its plans provide for unique systems of projection and ventilation. The seating capacity will be approximately 1,200. Principal stockholders of the amusement company are: George F. Meyer, August A. Meyer, Harry Freund and Eugene Freund.

CANADA

Although the enterprise is in a strong financial condition, the shareholders of the Canadian Photoplays, Limited, Calgary, Alberta, have decided to place the corporation into voluntary liquidation. It will probably have further revenue from the exploitation of the one feature company that has produced. Those behind the announced reason being that they did not desire to continue the production of moving picture productions "because of the intricacies of the moving picture business." The Canadian Photoplays, Limited, was responsible for the making of the picture "Back to God's Country," in which Nell Shipman was starred. This subject was sold to the First National, the initial payment being $100,000, it was reported. This feature proved to be a real success and it is still being shown in many cities.

E. H. Tool, formerly manager of the St. John branch of the Regal Films, Limited, has been appointed the manager of the new Amalgamated exchange at Halifax.

Motion Pictures (Canada), Limited, a new enterprise at Calgary, Alberta, has purchased the screen rights for a series of historical sketches dealing with exploits of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police which was known until recently as the Royal North West Mounted Police. The company will shortly undertake to produce pictures based on the early incidents of the famous constabulary.

James E. Finch, formerly of Toronto and one of the outstanding figures in moving picture exchange circles in Canada, has been appointed district representative for the Select Pictures Corporation of Canada, Limited, for British Columbia and Alberta. Mr. Finch knows this territory well as he was the Vancouver, B. C. manager for Regal Films, Limited, for a lengthy period.

Canadian Films, Limited, Montreal, has been guaranteed $2,500 by the Dominion Government at the request of H. A. Mackie, M. P. for East Edmonton, as a part of the cost for the sending of a film expedition to Northern Alberta and the Yukon Territory to secure moving pictures of the natural resources in that virgin area. The expedition has already reached its field of activities and several months will be spent in the securing of the pictures. It has been planned to take about 15,000 feet of pictures. W. M. Gladish

"A Friendly Organization"

The policies and methods of Associated Producers can be, and are, like the virtue of Caesar's wife—above suspicion.

We do not own any theatres and do not intend to own any. And we are not going to lease or operate any theatres, openly or secretly.

We are each making for Associated Producers, Inc., fewer pictures than we have ever made in any one year in our careers—and we are making them bigger, finer, better than we have ever done before. Working thus, all seven of us intend to produce a combined total in twelve months from September 12th of only thirty productions. We are putting more money into production, per picture, than ever before.

Out in California all seven of us are "attending to our knitting." Our job is to make big pictures and, by the Eternal, we are making them.

We, the Producers, and our executives of standing in the industry have devised a sales policy that has sold itself instantly to exhibitors on a basis of confidence and approval.

In a field alive with suspicions and doubts and filled with rumors, we say to exhibitors everywhere that Associated Producers, Inc., is an organization conceived and operated to be close to and friendly with exhibitors and that all we will take from you will be honest contract rentals or payments in return for the honest picture values that we will deliver.

URBAN POPULAR CLASSICS

"A tragedy, such as fables are made of," said "The Playgoer" in "The Evening Sun" in his comment on "The Tragedy of the Praying Mantis," the first of Mr. Urban's Science Series.

"A real tragedy, like a chapter from 'Social Life in the Insect World, so graphically described by Fabre,'" wrote Alison Smith in "The Globe."

THE first of the SCIENCE SERIES made such a hit at the Rivoli Theatre in New York that Dr. Hugo Riesenfeld has contracted for an entire group of them. The entire staff of the theatre talked enthusiastically about the first one; even the ushers.

The enthusiasm of the public was amply reflected in the talk that spread all over town and in the lengthy, praiseful comments by the critics—a very unusual practice for such a short subject. It goes to show that motion picture audiences really want merit, not footage.

The SCIENCE SERIES henceforth will be incorporated as part of CHARLES URBAN'S MOVIE CHATS. They will average 300 feet in length. Each one will be so arranged that the Exhibitor may show it as part of the Movie Chats or he may show it as a separate subject, complete in itself.

HER BEAUTY

THE kind you adore; the kind that fascinates your stern old neighbor and charms his little grandchild; the kind that is extolled by the most discriminating critics — that is the kind of beauty possessed by

JUSTINE JOHNSTONE

She now becomes Realart's sixth star through the verdict of a jury of twelve men and women, world famous in the fields of literature, art, and business.

'Tis not alone the golden glow of her locks, nor the deep penetration of her blue eyes, nor her perfect face and figure that has won for her the authoritative recognition as the most beautiful woman in America. The members of the unique jury, in spite of their diverse opinions on beauty and stardom, have all acclaimed Miss Johnstone. For hers is a composite beauty, a loveliness of form combined with a personality that radiates the wondrous charm of youth and intelligence. In the choice of Miss Johnstone as Realart's sixth star, the verdict was unanimous.

HER TALENT

REALART has taken Justine Johnstone away from a most successful stage career, with definite purpose. Conforming to its own high standards and Miss Johnstone's splendid artistic capabilities, she will be presented in pictures portraying young American womanhood. These pictures will be based on plays or novels by the world's most celebrated authors. It is Realart's belief that there is a distinct field for such performance and that Miss Johnstone is well qualified to fill it. As a stage star, at twenty, she has a formidable list of musical comedy triumphs to her credit. Her experience ranges from that of Broadway leading woman to star parts in the smartest and most successful metropolitan stage offerings. She has also filled successful road engagements as a star and in stock.

By reason of her talents, temperament and training, it is such roles as Realart has in mind that this brilliant and beautiful young star is well fitted to interpret and adorn.

HER FIRST SCREEN ROLE

AFTER several tentative choices and many conferences, Realart has selected for Miss Johnstone's screen debut not the sweet, simple play of young love in which a young actress is usually first tried out, but a great, big, gripping emotional play that would tax the powers of many an older and more experienced actress. She will have a play of love, intrigue, crime and the adroit matching of wits against wits. And Miss Johnstone is going to startle film patrons with her acting ability, as she now astonishes everybody with her breath-taking beauty. The play is no less than "Black-birds," a "crook" play by the late Harry James Smith, which had a successful stage run when produced by Henry Miller in 1913 at the Lyceum Theatre in New York with Laura Hope Crews as the leading feminine "blackbird." This is an ambitious number for a young star to write at the head of her program. And it's going to be a big photoplay that will prove that Justine Johnstone is as talented as she is beautiful, as versatile as she is charming, as appealing to the whole wide world of photoplay fans in little towns and villages as she was adored on Broadway during her brief but brilliant career there. The director of this notable screen offering will be Jack Dillon, who has a number of tremendously popular productions to his credit. He it was who directed the latest Mary Pickford picture, "Suds." He also was responsible for "The Right of Way" and many other successes.

HER VALUE TO YOU

IT'S the new material that brings new faces into your theatre.

The stars of yesteryear have their admirers—the loyal clientele which always demands their pictures. But, a theatre to be really and progressively prosperous must go after new patrons. The distinctively original roles, so well typified in the acting of are as necessary to your theatre as the seats in it, because they keep the seats filled!

Finally, the JUSTINE JOHNSTONE type of productions are exactly the sort of new material the public clamors for; therefore they must have their regular place on your program. They serve a very definite and vital purpose in rounding out the Realart Star Franchise and when you sign up for that, you become the possessor of a live insurance policy against financial worry. Particulars are available at all Realart exchanges and they are available NOW.

WHAT DOES "BROADWAY" MEAN?

Every Release on Broadway

Educational's Releases Seen in Big Houses; Featured in Theatre Display

EDUCATIONAL FILMS CORPORATION claims that it has set a new record in that every release of the company to date has been given a showing at one of the leading Broadway motion picture houses. It also calls attention to the fact that practically every picture has been featured in lobby display, electric lights and newspaper advertisements.

"We have not been holding showings of our pictures for trade paper review," says a statement from Educational, "because all of them to date have been shown at one of the Broadway theatres, and exhibitors have had the benefits of the reviews where the critics have been more or less unconsciously swayed by the effect of the pictures on the audiences. And since the exhibitor is principally concerned with the audience appeal of the pictures, we believe that such criticisms are worth far more to them in judging their worth."

"This week 'A Fresh Start,' the first of the Mermaid Comedies, is given a prominent position on the bill at the Strand. Manager Jos. Plunkett has called attention to it every one of his newspaper advertisements has given it a portion of the display. This is unusual in the fact that the Mermaid Comedies are entirely new ones and have no ing the picture will be exhibited over the whole Low Metropolitan circuit.

"Chester-Outing pictures are also being shown at the Strand and the bill this week includes one of these, 'Dreams Come True.' These pictures are also being shown over the Low circuit.

"At the Strand, Brooklyn, 'The Valley of Ten Thousand Sinks,' one of the two specials that we have released, occupies a prominent position on the bill this week. This picture was given its pre-release showing on Broadway at the Criterion. The other special, 'Modern Centaurs' was shown at the New York Strand where it attracted much attention.

"The Robert C. Bruce Scenics are being shown at the Rialto or Rivoli and already Dr. Riesenfeld is well ahead of the release schedule with these pictures. Managing Director Edward L. Hyman, of the Brooklyn Strand, is also using these pictures and gives them a special ideal setting, often employing a specialist in connection with their showing.

"'Four Times Foiled,' the first of the Chester Comedies, was shown at both the Rialto and Rivoli. Dr. Riesenfeld has booked the first of this series, 'The Overall Hero,' will be showing in

JULY 10-

EXHIBITORS have justly ceased to be impressed by the mere fact that a motion picture has been shown on Broadway. It has lost meaning because they know that often such showings are merely sales arguments to them.

Every picture released by Educational Films Corporation shown on Broadway is paid for at the price fixed by the sales department. No inducement is offered a Broadway manager that is not offered every manager everywhere—he is invited to book the pictures purely on their merits.

But it does mean something when EVERY release of Educational is shown at the Rialto, or Strand, Rivoli, Capitol or Criterion.

IT does not mean that the Broadway manager is any more qualified to select the subjects that he will show than any other manager. But it does mean that he has had the opportunity to in person inspect ALL the material in the WHOLE market, much of which he can obtain at his own terms.

When you see EVERY Broadway motion picture theatre playing Educational product, when you see EVERY EDUCATIONAL RELEASE at one or the other Broadway theatres, you can be sure that they have met the quality test in competition with EVERYTHING on the market.

In that, only that, we submit, Broadway does mean something to you.

"Snooky" the HUMANZEE in "An Overall Hero" A CHESTER COMEDY

"Four Times Foiled," first of the Chester Comedies, rocked the nation with mirth, thrilled it with animal feats surpassing belief, set a new mark for two reel comedies.

"An Overall Hero" surpasses it in every respect. Two other screamingly funny monkeys join Snooky in laugh creations. Arthur Nowell, cleverest of stage babes, introduces his girl play mate. A wonderful horse race brings its thrills, the Humanzee and his fellow animals astound with their feats, and comedy, ever comedy, brings an earthquake of laughter.

It's the eighth world wonder of comedy.

Mr. Alfred A. Grasso,

Los Angeles, Cal.

My dear Mr. Grasso:

I want to thank you for your kindness in showing me the first picture in which Miss Compson is to be starred.

I was, naturally, after her work for me in "The Miracle Man", very interested to see her first starring picture, "Prisoners of Love", and I must congratulate you on—

First - A perfect cast.

Second - Exquisite and poetic photography.

Third - A scenario of great intensity of interest and packed with vividly dramatic scenes, which are splendidly acted and directed; and Finally - Miss Compson, whose performance of Rose in my "Miracle Man", fairly electrified audiences and the most blasé of critics, has in "Prisoners of Love", a characterization even more difficult to play—of even greater emotional range than Rose, and I believe she gives, as Blanche, one of the greatest performances as yet seen on the screen.

She has improved marvelously in depth and power and control since the days she played Rose for me in "The Miracle Man". The problems that a girl faces who possesses an unusual amount of sex appeal are beautifully and powerfully illustrated.

Please give Miss Compson my heartiest congratulations and again let me thank you for a most enjoyable evening.

Sincerely yours,

Another large film company has just completed an exhaustive direct-to-the-exhibitor test of the trade papers.

Three thousand exhibitors placed on record in black and white their preference in trade papers.

Great Posters—Great Profits

A BOAT does not get very far when the oars are pulled in opposing directions;—great progress will only come when all pull in the same direction.

Box-office receipts result mainly from three forces—the film—the theatre—and the poster. The better the film, the theatre and the poster—the better the ticket sales! The RITCHEY LITHO. CORP. is only concerned with posters—and with only one kind of poster—the really great poster, for that is the only kind it makes. The distributor who secures a large immediate profit by furnishing cheap posters makes money—but the exhibitor loses it.

Our own individual experience has demonstrated one fact to us—the fact that producing great posters is a profitable business. The shrewd exhibitor and the keen distributor want nothing else, for great posters are a powerful asset to every photoplay, and unquestionably produce sure and definite returns. That is why we make them,—that is why the distributor should use them,—and that is why the exhibitor should demand them! Which would be all pulling in the same direction,—the right direction,—the direction where increased profits lay!

JULY 24, 1920

No. V

The Real Field for Artistry

THE fact that Joseph Urban has spent the past six months in study and at work in a motion picture studio opens for discussion a new and decidedly important phase in picture production.

We have seen a number of "stills" taken from sets Mr. Urban has made for recent and forthcoming pictures, such as "The Restless Sex," "The World and His Wife," "A Whiff of Heliotrope." They are distinctly artistic and impressive. A good sample is the sun room set in the last part of "Humoresque." The lighting is new to picture work.

Added to Mr. Urban's entrance into the field of the picture, we have these other artists now busily at work: Hugo Ballin, Penrhyn Stanlaws, and Paul Chalfin. It is stated that Max Reinhardt, the eminent artist of the Berlin Theatre, will also devote himself to picture production upon the occasion of his approaching visit to this country.

The picture evidently is to benefit by the imagination and skill of the world's greatest artists, decorators and architects; and the innovation is timely and vital.

Fine work of this kind has already been done in the occasional picture, as witness Tourneur's beautiful scenes in the "Bluebird" several years ago and just recently in "Treasure Island." Also, we wish to give full praise to the pioneer art directors in this field and to those several directors today of lively imagination and high ideals.

THERE is, however, first of all, this practical aspect: if the work of Joseph Urban, for instance, has had such a telling effect upon the New York stage then the motion picture has a much greater demand for it, and holds out for it a still greater development.

The picture is—a picture. It must express emotions, moments, action—its various and telling "business"—by pictures and pictures only. It lacks the human voice and real life atmosphere of the stage. Certainly then it needs the vividness, the heightened expression, the telling effects of the Urbanesque kind of scene and lighting. These scenes, just as much as the human pantomime, are the voice of the picture. They must also talk—in the shades and with the emphasis of the human voice.

Secondly, the motion picture must not get in a rut. No entertainment can afford to: but, for the picture, there is little excuse. It is very young—an altogether new art. It is right now in its formative stage. It can't be still or look back.

Pictures are in a rut—the majority of pictures; and the majority of directors are in a rut. No further proof of this fact is needed than the delight with which a comparatively few outstanding pictures are hailed or the unlimited praise given now and then to a new director who after all has simply made a picture as sincerely as an author in another art style constructs an acceptable magazine story.

By "in a rut" we mean the ready and dull reliance upon cut and dried formulas, conventional situations, pigeon-holed locations and sets, stereotyped lighting effects—all the hard and fast studio routine and rigmarole of the mere "movie" making business.

WE are speaking now not from any "high brow" attitude nor in behalf of the cultured few. We speak for the motion picture millions. If any director thinks the "old stuff" is going over these days let him visit most any picture theatre and hear the derisive laughter of the average audience. The masses want novelty; and, anyway they don't pay good money for worn out goods.

We do believe that, in the general motion picture situation today, distribution is more at fault than production. It is not so much, in other words, that pictures are not good enough, but that the good pictures are not shown enough. They are barred from the small towns by high prices. And the picture is the only small town entertainment; right there is its important and exclusive field.

On the other hand the large centres today call for the new and better picture as never before. Building operations, since the war, have swept away the tawdry and added thousands of high class seats. Better before were theatre so beautiful and appealing. The people they attract will not tolerate the hackneyed and unintelligent.

We are not turning pictures through the hopper these days; the camera crank isn't geared up to the release date; and there is plenty of time to accommodate the work of such men as Urban, Ballin, Chalfin and the like.

Moreover, we suggest that they sit in the conference that precedes or should precede the making of the worth while picture; that they plan and construct along with the writers, the cast and the producing head so that their effort may be part and parcel of the whole rather than an insert here and there, and so that their influence may be felt, as it may and should be felt, upon the various other constructors of the photo play.

WM. A. JOHNSTON.

DEALING IN PERSONALITIES

"Tis Wednesday afternoon. The last time we had the nerve to look at the thermometer it said something so far over the hundred mark that we thought it was getting him salesmen's ideas. We haven't had the nerve to look since. And we are some five hundred odd lines distant from the end of this page. And it's a dull week. And—oh, shucks, what's the use?"

Then to make matters worse the Merry Vacationers pester you in every mail with those beautiful postcards showing cool, shady trees, shimmering lakes, and shimmering paradises. You can hear them giving you the loud ha ha as you toil over the desk.

More than ever we hope that the boss reads this page. That word "toil" in the last paragraph has such a satisfying sound. Satisfying, to our ears.

Even the exchange men are getting the vacation postal habit. "Doc" HOLAH, the medicine man from Omaha, captures the prize with one that comes in three sections from Lake Okoboji, Iowa. Pieced together the three sections make up a fish the size of some that figured in the stories "Doc" told us in Chicago.

As Bre'er Holah says—while we swelter and wilt—it's great to have a territory with such a place as Lake Whoozis in it. "Doc" even adds that if he were an exhibitor on Lake What'sitsname he wouldn't even have the nerve to charge for First National pictures.

We wonder if "Doc" told the local exhibitors that when they signed up for their franchises in Associated First National?

AL FEINMAN mocks us with a vacation postcard from Rockaway. And adds that "the water's great." None of the postcards we get from Canada use those words. BILL RUDOLPH has just returned from those parts and he declares all the tourists shut their eyes passing Niagara.

We'll say right here that Federated made a ten-strike when it placed the crown on "Doc" SHALLENBERGER's head. With "Doc" at the helm things should begin to hum for the independent boys. Congratulations to both sides.

And who blew into town this week but our old friend "NAT" BROWN. "Nat" has been down in the oil fields but confesses that while he dug deep, and occasionally found oil the Paralta Plan has not yet come to light.

MCCORMICK RESIGNS FROM CIRCLE

S. Barret McCormick, rated among the select top-notchers of motion picture showmanship, has resigned from the direction of the Circle Theatre, Indianapolis.

Mr. McCormick has big plans in view which will be announced in the near future. It is known that his services have long been sought by prominent producers for home office use in aiding exhibitors, while many of the new theatre palaces of the country have also made him tempting offers.

Sub-rosa, and not to be told to a soul, "NAT" and BOB KANE are going to break loose in the producing arena before many moons have passed.

"Nat" brings with him the news that FRANK CARROLL is another film man now loitering around the oil neighborhood. If Frank takes our tip he'll give us a real picture of the oil fields before he comes North again. It seems to us that an opportunity for a Twentieth Century epic has been overlooked here.

Even the hottest days can bring their laughs. One has just arrived in the form of a bit of publicity, quoting the letter "Doc" SAM ATKINSON, of Chicago, sent in his contract for a full Paramount week showing. "Doc" says, "I am signing this contract to show my independence."

The silvery tongued Evanston orator is henceforth on the black list of the EN Mock Association. He won't get a ticket to the chowder party.

Is this the Medical Journal or a picture paper? We haven't gone much further than a column and already we have mentioned three "Doc's"—Holah, Shallenberger, and Atkinson.

Perhaps the picture business needs them.

Even our own GEORGE GOULD rubs the heat in on us by strolling in from his vacation just as we are wondering where the other column and a half will come from. George reports San Francisco and Los Angeles still at the old stand but not serving the same stuff. What is a brass rail without the polish?

HARRY LUCAS, the Atlanta mail order king, arrived in town Monday to ask E. M. PORTER about the delay in shipment of ten car-loads of Simplex machines ordered last Saturday.

This week brings PATHE's turn in the list of special announcements. And before it passes we want to brave the fate of martyrs by making this statement: RANDY LEWIS and JOE REDDY are the leaders to date in the contest for the medal awarded by the members of the Rewrite Men's Association and Otherwise. The rewrite men almost dropped cold when they received special announcement copy that didn't have to be brought around on a truck and directed to the freight elevator.

And it means just as much space when it gets into print.

Speaking of special announcements reminds us that we have heard rumbling and rumors of a big blowing of trumpets on the part of Fox in the near future. We might add that the confidential reports received on "WHILE NEW YORK SLEEPS" and other coming specials would surely justify the loudest trumpet in the village.

Which brings to mind that VIVIAN MOSES acted as host at a Fox luncheon to the boys after the showing of "THE WHITE MOLL." Vivian reports himself to the gang as contented, happy and working hard.

We hereby deny the rumor that EARL HUDSON has been vacationing. He journeyed South over the week end on business. We couldn't believe that vacation stuff ourselves—in Earl's case.

Give us credit, boys. We're holding the heat at arm's length and getting closer and closer to the end of this page.

The training of the old space-writing days sure does come in handy once in a while.

There, the job is done.

Bring on the rickies!

Cohen and Abrams Cross Swords Over Advance Payments

Exhibitors' Chief Appeals to Griffith but Abrams Gives Unruffled Reply

FOLLOWING his article last week on the evils of percentage booking, Sydney S. Cohen, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, this week stepped to bat with an open declaration of war on Hiram Abrams and the United Artists Corporation.

Mr. Cohen's attack took the form of a letter to David W. Griffith, summed up in the declaration that "I feel it my duty to bring to your attention the hostile and arrogant attitude assumed towards the exhibitors of the country by your business representative, Mr. Hiram Abrams." He then took up the United Artists stipulation that full payment for the picture must be made on signing of the contract and told of a conference with Mr. Abrams at which a counter-proposition was made of twenty-five percent on signing of the contract, the balance seven days before play date. Mr. Cohen declared that "Mr. Abrams refused to discuss or entertain our proposition."

The United Artists executive refused to be ruffled by the letter, and when interviewed by a MOTION PICTURE NEWS representative asserted that President Cohen's epistle "only tells part of the discussion in which we engaged on the matter of advance payments."

"I met Mr. Cohen at the Hotel Astor," he continued, "and we talked from eight o'clock until eleven. The subject under discussion was the matter of the advance payment for film rental. Mr. Cohen suggested that we change our policy—do away with the full advance payment and accept twenty-five per cent on the signing of the contract and the balance one week in advance of the play date."

"Mr. Cohen told me it meant a great deal to him personally to put this over and that if I would accept this proposition and so state in a letter to him, it would react tremendously to the benefit of our company and to me personally."

"I told Mr. Cohen that personal advancement meant nothing to me, but that the advancement of our company meant everything; that the only way in which I wanted to see our company advance was through fair dealing. In order to accomplish this I made Mr. Cohen a counter-proposition. I said in substance: I will eliminate the twenty-five per cent advance payment that Mr. Cohen asks for altogether, and it might be arranged to let exhibitors play United Artists' pictures on credit, giving them thirty days after play date in which to pay, providing Mr. Cohen, as national president, will find some way in which to guarantee us our money."

"I told Mr. Cohen that I am running a business organization and that it is impossible to run any business without ample

Date and Place of Convention Is Changed

ACCORDING to word received from Alfred S. Black, of Boston, it has been decided to postpone the annual convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors of America, Inc., which was to be held at the Hotel Astor in New York on July 28 and 29th. The convention is now scheduled for the Hotel Congress, Chicago, on August 31st and September 1st. This was done, it was announced, to accommodate many exhibitors who are not in harmony with the methods invoked at the recent Cleveland Convention, and who are anxious that the meeting be held at some place more convenient for them to attend.

security for the fulfillment of obligations. Therefore, I have required full payment for a picture at the time of the signing of the contract. How far in advance of his play dates an exhibitor books his pictures is entirely up to him. He may book a week, a month or three months ahead—the time of the advance payment is entirely in the exhibitor's hands.

"As the head of the exhibitors' organization, Mr. Cohen can perhaps arrange with a bonding company to guarantee us our payments and thus make possible the elimination of the advance payments that we are now getting. This is only one suggestion made at random. It is up to Mr. Cohen to find the way. We don't care how he arranges it. If we were to undertake a credit business without guarantees, it would be necessary to raise the price on our pictures in order to cover bad debts and thus throw the burden on the reputable theatremen of the business. This we certainly do not consider fair."

"It is utter foolishness for Mr. Cohen to consider our action a reflection on the integrity of exhibitors, for he knows that credit cannot be extended promiscuously in any business."

"Just one instance of what we are up against: it takes at least three weeks to clear a check from the West. If it turns out to be a bad check, and surely Mr. Cohen does not pretend to believe that there are no bad checks in the fifth largest industry in the United States—the picture can have been played in the meantime and we would have to bring action to recover our money."

"At this point Mr. Cohen asked why I couldn't insist on certified checks or money orders. To this I replied that if for any reason the money order or certified check failed to arrive, I would be obliged to withhold the film from the exhibitor and consequently leave him with a dark house."

In all the years I have been in business, I have never left an exhibitor without his show and I wouldn't operate under any system that made such practices possible.

"I have no desire to carry this discussion any further in the trade papers. I discussed it fully and frankly with Mr. Cohen in the hope of arriving at an understanding with him, but his letter to Mr. Griffith does not indicate a fair frame of mind. I merely wanted you to know, and through you the exhibitors, that we are ready to meet the exhibitors more than half way—a fact which Mr. Cohen entirely ignores."

The letter of Sydney Cohen to Griffith, and also another statement issued during the week from the offices of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners' Association, cited the case of Tom Boland, of Oklahoma City, as an indication of reasons for the dispute. Boland asserts that after he had contracted for "The Mollycoddle" and "Suds" they were taken from him and booked to a new theatre without notice.

In regard to the Boland matter, Mr. Abrams merely said that he was surprised that Mr. Cohen, as president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, should attempt to discuss a matter on which he was apparently so poorly informed. "The entire Boland affair," said Mr. Abrams, "is a matter of record. Mr. Boland knows just what the circumstances are and our correspondence files show a clear and direct history of the whole matter, with which Mr. Cohen, apparently, is entirely unfamiliar, and any discussion, therefore, is out of place."

Joe Brandt Signs First Independent Contract

Joe Brandt, who recently resigned as director general of the National Film Corporation, and immediately thereafter issued a statement that he would start a new film distributing organization and also produce several serials, has brought his plans to a head by signing his first independent contract.

Mr. Brandt, in co-operation with Ben Wilson, is interested in a fifteen-episode fast-action serial for the Arrow Film Corporation. The serial will be made at the Berwila Film Studios at Hollywood and will star Jack Hoxie, who played the stellar role in "Lightning Bryce," a serial written by Brandt and now being marketed by Arrow.

"Thunderbolt Jack" has been chosen as the temporary title of the chapter picture.

Mr. Brandt and Mr. Wilson will leave for the coast very shortly.

E. C. Bostick to Manage Milwaukee Theatres

E. C. Bostick, formerly manager of the Merrill theatre, Milwaukee, has signed a contract with Saxe Brothers to act as general manager of all their theatres. Bostick directed the Merrill the past four years, leaving that theatre when it was acquired by Ascher Brothers, Chicago.

Besides having supervision over the Strand, Alhambra, Princess, Modjeska, Savoy, Theatorma and Miller theatres, he will govern the policy of a number of out skirt houses which Saxe Brothers expect to add to their string of theatres this summer.

As announced in Motion Picture News some weeks ago, the Saxe interests contemplate picking up about a dozen neighborhood houses which are not now doing exceptionally good business and after entirely remodeling them, running them along more modern ideas. It is also expected they will secure houses in nearby Wisconsin cities.

D. W. Griffith Will Not Purchase Theatres

D. W. Griffith emphatically denies the report that he is interested in "buying, selling and operating moving picture theatres." Mr. Griffith states that the new company bearing his name, and to be known as D. W. Griffith Incorporated, recently organized under the laws of Maryland, is an expansion of Mr. Griffith's present producing operations and will confine its activities to "the producing of pictures, disposing of films, and the carrying on of a regular business of theatrical production, concerts, vaudeville and grand opera."

D. W. Griffith Incorporated was granted a charter by the Maryland State Tax Commission on June 30, with a capitalization of $50,000,000. There are 500,000 shares of stock divided into 125,000 Class A shares and 375,000 Class B shares. The officers are D. W. Griffith, president; Albert I. Grey, general manager; J. C. Epping, business manager, and Albert H. A. Banzhaf, general counsel.

Day Off for So. America on Paramount Business

John I. Day, South American representative for the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, sailed on the "Vauban" July 10th, for Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, to look after the interests of the corporation in that territory. Mr. Day will spend several weeks in Brazil arranging for increased facilities for the distribution of Paramount pictures through Películas D'Luxé Da America De Sul, which is owned by the Famous Players Lasky Corporation From Brazil Mr. Day will go to Buenos Aires, Argentina, and Santiago, Chile, to make a survey of conditions in those countries. He expects to return to the United States in about six months.

Suggest Stopping Theatre Building in Brooklyn

ACTING BOROUGH PRESIDENT JOSEPH A. GUIDER, of Brooklyn, held a conference recently with the heads of the various bureaus of the borough to discuss the advisability of refusing permits for the erection of garages and motion picture theatres. Mr. Guider, who is a builder, said that he thought this denying of building permits would help materially to solve the housing problem. Four or five picture theatres are now in the course of erection in the Flatbush section.

Borough President Riegelmann is said to be in accordance with Mr. Guider's views.

Buffalo Exhibitors to Resist Musicians

Harold B. Franklin, managing director of Shea's Hippodrome; Ira M. Mosher, president of the Buffalo Theatrical Managers' Association and John R. Oishei, manager of the Shubert-Teck theatre, are members of the committee appointed by the Buffalo association to confer with the local musicians' association on the new wage scale just submitted to the managers which in many cases calls for increases as high as 60 per cent. Exhibitors of motion picture houses are up in arms over the situation and declare that they will eliminate their orchestras before paying the new prices.

The new wage boost will cost the theatres of Buffalo over $100,000 a year for music and in the case of Shea's Hippodrome alone, the increase will be $47,000. The exhibitors also declare that, under no circumstances, will they stand for a change in working conditions over last year. The matter promises to bring about some real fireworks before it is adjusted. The stage hands have also submitted a new scale calling for a 50 per cent boost and the operators may do likewise.

George Fischer Resigns Post as Exhibitor

George Fischer, manager of Saxe's Alhambra theatre, Milwaukee, for the past nine years, has resigned his post as head of Milwaukee's largest theatre. Mr. Fischer has been in the theatrical business for more than twenty years, working up from a program boy, and has been identified with the Saxe interests for more than twelve years. He is one of the best known exhibitors in America and his exploitation ideas have been featured in the pages of the Motion Picture News for several years. He was also identified with the fight against unfair censorship in Wisconsin, was an officer of the Milwaukee Theatre Managers Association and an organizer of the F. I. L. M. Mr. Fischer has not yet announced his plans for the future.

More Chicago Exchanges on So. Wabash Avenue

More Chicago exchanges will have quarters on South Wabash Ave., which already is the headquarters of Famous-Players-Lasky, Fox and soon will include Pathe, according to announcements made this week. The companies affected by the most recent announcement are Universal, First National, Metro and Vitagraph. Select will also have its quarters in the new building with the last named concerns.

Vitagraph has completed arrangements for the erection of one of the finest exchange buildings in the country for the use of its Chicago office, and according to the estimate of the architects Holabird and Roche, who have the new structure in charge, it will be ready in November.

The new exchange will occupy a site at 839-843 South Wabash avenue, and will be in the heart of what promises to be Chicago's film Rialto, extending along Wabash avenue. On July 8th, thirty day notices to vacate were served on the tenants occupying the present structure, and wrecking of the building will start promptly on August 8th.

According to the plans which have been drawn up by Holabird and Roche, it will be a three-story building of buff Bedford stone with a rubbed finish, and will present an impressive and artistic appearance.

Two entrances will give access to the first floor on which will be located the shipping department, poster rooms, five examining rooms, lighted by skylights and four film vaults. On the second floor will be three private offices, extending across the front of the building, a salesmen's office, booking office and bookkeeping and stenographic departments. Large skylights will enable the entire force to work by daylight. This is also the case on the first floor.

On the third floor will be the projection room, which Manager Fred Aiken says is to be elaborately fitted up, making it a model miniature moving-picture theatre.

The new building to be occupied by Universal, Metro, First National and Select will be a model structure and will be located at 833-835 South Wabash. According to tentative plans, it will be a four-story building with a raised basement and handsomely equipped projection room on the roof, it is expected to be ready for the exchange to move in by the first of the year or sooner. Electric elevators, light wells every twenty feet, commodious film vaults and well-arranged service departments and offices are some of the features which will go to make this building one of Chicago's show places. More detailed description of the plans will be given as soon as they are completed.

Jesse Lasky Will Reach New York July 17

Federated Names Shallenberger as General Manager

New Organization Announces Appointment; to Open Offices in New York

THE culmination of a meeting in Chicago in March of a number of the most influential independent exchangers in the United States and the subsequent meeting in May in New York, at which time the Federated Film Exchanges of America, Inc., was formed, is the announcement of the appointment of W. E. Shallenberger as general manager for the new organization. The announcement also states that permanent offices have been opened in New York in Suite 402, the Chandler building, 220 West Forty-second street.

The appointment of Mr. Shallenberger was made on July 13 following a meeting of the executive officers at the Astor Hotel in New York the day before.

At the time the Federated organization was affected it was announced that the "members had gone on record as saying that the biggest man on record is none too big for them." Since that time the executive committee has been busy combing the field of motion picture executives for a possible candidate and the result was the selection of a man whose reputation and ability has not only long been known but which has never been questioned.

The purpose of the organization is to buy collectively and cooperatively picture productions running from one reel to seven and eight reels in length. Federated is incorporated in Delaware for $100,000. At the meeting on Monday in New York it was announced that Federated was now ready to buy and distribute the biggest and best feature productions obtainable.

In telling of the activities of the organization to date, J. L. Friedman, president, said: "We have been an organization since the 24th of May and the spirit and growth has been remarkable. We have already contracted for several features and short productions, among which may be named "Nobody's Girl," starring Billy Rhodes, and a series of comedies produced by Warner Brothers featuring Monty Banks.

"We are now prepared to buy the biggest and best features obtainable, and I might add that they can't come too good. This organization is composed of individuals who are looking for individual success. Each man associated with the organization is in business for himself and we have banded together in a co-operative spirit for the purpose of correcting many evils and eliminating others. By doing so we assure ourselves of a bigger future. Our capital makes us one of the strongest organizations in the motion picture industry."

"The old evil of a producer advertising a picture just so long as he has territory yet to sell will be done away with," Mr. Friedman said. "Formerly the publicity received during the time the territory was being sold was wasted as far as the individual exchanger was concerned. Under the new system which Federated will put into effect, the release date will be so arranged as to allow each exchanger and exhibitor to receive the full value of the original publicity and advertising."

In speaking further on the advantages of the new organization, he pointed out that in the past the producer or distributor of the picture had been uncertain as to whether he could dispose of all his territory. In view of this situation he was obliged to ask a bigger price in order to make his cost plus profit. The new organization, Mr. Friedman said, would buy the negatives and the members would consequently get prints at a much lower cost.

Despite the fact that at first some difficulty was found in agreeing on a policy of selection, this was overcome, and there now exists a buying committee.

The officers of the Federated Film Exchanges of America, Inc., are: J. L. Friedman, Celebrated Players Film Corporation, Chicago, president; J. E. Pierce, Pierce Film, New Orleans, vice president; David G. Chatkin, Consolidated Film Corporation, San Francisco, secretary, and Sam V. Grand, Federated Film Exchange of New England, Boston, treasurer.

The board of directors, in addition to the officers named, consists of Benjamin Amsterdam, Masterpiece Film Attractions, Philadelphia; Arthur G. Whyte, Empire State Film Corporation, New York City, and Harry Charnas, Standard Film Service, Inc., of Cleveland.

The members of the purchasing committee are announced as follows: Harry Charnas, Arthur Whyte, D. G. Chatkin, Benjamin Amsterdam, Harry Lande, of the Quality Film Service, Pittsburgh; R. D. Lewis, of the R. D. Lewis Film Company of Dallas, and Sam Werner, of the United Film Service of St. Louis.

The membership of the organization is said to be growing in leaps and bounds, although it is limited to only the most progressive exchangers of the country.

In announcing the appointment of Mr. Shallenberger as general manager of Federated, the directors of the organization offered the following statement: "In selecting and appointing W. R. Shallenberger as general manager of our new organization, we believe we have chosen the most capable executive possible to obtain. For years we have had direct commercial relations with him and have in every case found him to be not only fair and square, but far-sighted and reliable. After sifting the field of men who might have filled the place we centered on Mr. Shallenberger without one dissenting voice. Under his management our organization should not only increase its activities but its general health and prosperity. We believe Mr. Shallenberger is the logical man for the big place."

Los Angeles Has A News Earthquake

LAST MINUTE ITEMS POUR IN FROM J. C. JESSEN

A FIRE originating in the projecting room of the Kinema theatre at Fresno caused the complete destruction of the interior of the house on Monday afternoon. The loss is estimated at one hundred and forty thousand dollars. There were no fatalities, three hundred people in the audience marching to the exits and out into the streets in an orderly manner. The theatre is owned by the Kehrlins, who also operate the Kinema theatre in Oakland.

Announcement is made of the formation of the Oliver Morosco Productions Corporation, capitalized at two and a half million dollars. The new corporation has for its purpose the filming of stage plays, purchased and produced by Oliver Morosco. The following officers have been announced: Oliver Morosco, president; George R. Bentel, vice president and general manager; Frank C. Egan, secretary. Plans have been adopted for the immediate erection of a studio in Los Angeles.

The work of filming Morosco's new play by Maud Fulton, "The Humming Bird," which co-stars Miss Fulton and Henry Walthall and which opens at the Little theatre on July 19th, is to go forward meanwhile. Following the production of this play, all of Morosco's stage successes are to be made for the screen, including "Seven Miles to Green," now running in Los Angeles; "The Clam Digger," which is to open shortly; "Linger Longer Letty," with Charlotte Greenwood; and a long list of Morosco's past productions.

H. J. Roberts, general sales-manager of the Special Pictures Corporation, has left for New York, and upon his arrival in the East will announce to the trade the 1920-1921 programs. He is also to make a statement of the policy of the Special Pictures Corporation.

Frank Elliott, Western representative and a prominent stockholder of the Sunlight Arc Corporation, is on his way to New York to attend the annual meeting of the Board of Directors. At this time, it is announced, the capitalization of the corporation will be increased from one to ten million dollars. The use of lamps in mining, which is found to have distinct advantages, is expected to increase the demand greatly.

Two hundred scenario writers of the Coast colony dined at the Athletic Club on Thursday of the past week with a view to forming an association for the purpose of affiliating with the Actors League. Frank E. Woods presided at the gathering. A committee of thirty was appointed to perfect a guild for screen-writers.

An announcement will shortly be made concerning the new first-run theatre to be built in Los Angeles by Adolph Ramish, Sol Lesser, Gore Brothers and all the leading franchise holders of the affiliated First National organization. The site for the new house is situated on Mercantile Place between Broadway and Spring Street, thus making possible the construction of a theatre with a seating capacity of 4,500, with an automobile ramp. Ground will be cleared in sixty days. It is thought that one year will be required to complete the big theatre.

The Kinema theatre will be closed on August 15th, to be completely redecorated.

Georgia Goes "Over the Top"—Wisconsin Plans Convention in August

A LETTER has been received at the executive headquarters of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, sent by Mr. Joseph Mogler, president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors League of St. Louis. Mr. Mogler assures President Cohen of the appreciation of his interest in behalf of the St. Louis exhibitors. He says that the St. Louis delegate, Mr. Willard Graham, has made a most favorable report to his home organization on the work of the Cleveland Convention. The Motion Picture Exhibitors League of St. Louis, after having heard Mr. Graham, passed resolutions to cooperate with the national body. They stand ready to furnish their quota towards the fund for maintaining the national organization.

Ex-Senator C. H. Bean, president of the New Hampshire exhibitors, has wired from Franklin, N. H., saying he is about to call a meeting of New Hampshire exhibitors. The date and place of the meeting will be published later on. Mr. Charbonneau, the New Hampshire delegate to Cleveland, will report to the New Hampshire Convention which will then take action on the question of joining the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America.

The organized exhibitors of the state of Wisconsin report that a convention will

Chicago Theatres Do Big Business Minus Music

BOTH neighborhood and "loop" theaters in Chicago report that the musicians' strike is not harming business and that in fact since the purveyors of harmonies quit work two weeks ago, attendance has been even better than usual. The heavy wage increases demanded by the orchestra men has alienated public sympathy from the musicians and it is a common occurrence for patrons to congratulate managers on the stand they have taken and to advise them to fight it out if it takes all summer.

A meeting of the directors of the Allied Amusement Association was held this week with every director present, and after going over the strike situation carefully it was determined to continue operation of Chicago's moving picture houses without music indefinitely. Directors were pleased over the reports which showed the exhibitors, large and small, were sticking together in this battle as never before and that not a single desertion had been reported up to the time of the meeting.

be held on August 3rd and 4th. The place of the meeting will be announced later. In a letter to President Cohen, Mr. Fred C. Seegert, president of the Wisconsin Exhibitors Association, says he hopes to have every exhibitor in the state in the membership of the organization when the state convention meets. In all probability some nationally prominent exhibitor will attend the Wisconsin state convention representing the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America.

The following telegram has just been received at the executive offices of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America from the convention of the Georgia state exhibitors held at the Piedmont Hotel, Atlanta, Ga., on July 11th:

"The Georgia State Exhibitors League organized today extends to you congratulations, indorses the Cleveland Convention and unanimously affiliates with Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America. One thousand, three hundred dollars raised. This amount insures Georgia's quota to national organization and start league off in splendid financial condition. Very enthusiastic meeting."

Berman in Chicago on Universal Business

Harry Berman, of Universal, was a Chicago visitor this week, arriving from New York on the Century Tuesday. While in Chicago he went over the plans for the proposed new exchange building.

A "bon voyage" dinner and dance was tendered to Carl Laemmle and Abe Stern, of Universal, before they sailed to Europe at the Hotel Biltmore, New York.

Laemmle Goes Abroad on Vacation Tour

Universal's President and Treasurer Guests of Honor at Farewell Reception

CARL LAEMMLE, president of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, accompanied by several of his relatives and Abe Stern, treasurer of Universal, sailed for Europe July 8, aboard the Olympic. He will be absent from the United States for at least three months, during which time he will tour England, Holland, Germany, France, Italy, Austria and as far East, perhaps, as Czechoslovakia. It is the first considerable vacation he has had in ten years.

Accompanying Mr. Laemmle are his two children, Miss Rosabelle Laemmle, and Julius, Abe Stern, treasurer of Universal, and his wife, and Louis Laemmle, brother of the Universal chief, with his wife and two children. Others in the party are Julius Bernheim, H. H. Zehner, secretary to Carl Laemmle, Joe Kramer, a valet, and Margaret Kramer, a governess.

The Laemmle party received a stirring farewell at the steamship pier before the Olympic sailed. Various personal friends and many of the Universal department heads had gathered to see the film magnate aboard the ship.

In Mr. Laemmle's absence, Mr. R. H. Cochrane, vice-president of Universal, will hold the reins of the complex moving picture organization.

Mr. Laemmle and Abe Stern were the guests of honor at a surprise dinner and dance held in the Grand Ball Room of the Hotel Biltmore, New York City, July 7 last, the eve of their departure for Europe. The banquet and the reception which followed were arranged by the "U" Girls' Club, an organization of young women employed in the Universal home office.

Several hundred friends and admirers of the film magnate were present to wish him "bon voyage." There were speeches galore, marshaled by E. H. Goldstein as toastmaster. Mr. Laemmle was assured of the continued good-will of every employee and the continuance of efficiency in the Universal organization during his three months' tour in Europe.

The dinner was a complete surprise to the Universal chief, it is declared. He was led to suspect that Mr. R. H. Cochrane, vice-president of Universal, had arranged a small dinner party for him. When he was led into the crowded ball-room and greeted by loud cheers, he was a much surprised individual.

The dinner was acclaimed as the most enjoyable Universal function ever held. Mr. Laemmle was loud in his praises when he learned that the entire affair had been initiated and arranged by the small group of girls comprising the "U" Girls' Club, headed by Florence Wallach, secretary to the treasurer of Universal.

Many persons not directly connected with Universal, but who at one time or another have been associated with Mr. Laemmle or with Universal activities, were present to bid farewell to the departing film men. Several of them spoke, among whom were Mr. I. N. Landauer, a prominent Chicago business man and an old schoolmate of the Universal chief, Hy Mayer, the cartoonist, S. Hartman of the law firm, Stanchfield and Levy; A. Schnitzer of the Equity Pictures Corporation, and George Blaw-dell of the M. P. Herald.

Among the Universal officials who facilitated their leader upon his approaching voyage were Mr. R. H. Cochrane, P. D. Cochrane, H. M. Berman and others. At the guest table with Mr. Laemmle were his children, Mr. Rosabelle Laemmle and Julius, Mr. and Mrs. Abe Stern, Julius Stern, Mr. and Mrs. R. H. Cochrane, Mr. and Mrs. P. D. Cochrane, Mr. and Mrs. H. M. Berman, E. H. Goldstein and Mrs. Goldstein, his mother; Mr. S. Hartman and Miss Hoffman, I. Landauer, Milton Einstein, and Louis Laemmle, brother of Carl Laemmle.

One of the features of the evening was a Universal song, written by John C. Brownell, Universal scenario chief, and Edward Moffat, advertising manager, and sung by Miss Olga Hadel, secretary of the girls' club. It was dedicated to the departing officials.

The dancing which followed the dinner was enlivened by several contests. Cash prizes were offered. Ethel Black of the Universal Purchasing Department won the principal prize as the most graceful dancer.

Pioneer and M. C. Elliott Buy Greater Stars Co.

The purchase this week of a one hundred per cent. interest in Greater Stars Productions by Pioneer Film Corporation of New York, and M. C. Elliott, one of the original organizers of Greater Stars, was the most important event which has occurred in Chicago independent film exchange circles for some time.

Mr. Elliott remains with Greater Stars as president and general manager, and Mr. Calloway, who has had an interest in the company for some time, will be sales manager. Messrs. Brockell and Corbett will no longer be connected with the company and have not as yet announced their future plans, although it is rumored that Mr. Brockell is going East within a few days to look over a proposition which he has under consideration.

The present policies of Greater Stars are to be continued, according to Mr. Elliott, and the Clara Kimball Young and other franchises retained, but at the same time many big new features are to be secured for release in the Chicago territory so that Greater Stars will become even a more important factor in the film industry of the middle west than heretofore.

Doraldina Picture Now Ready for Market

State Right buyers and exhibitors will be interested in knowing that Elmer J. McGovern now has ready for release, "The Woman Untamed," starring Doraldina. This picture was personally edited by Mr. McGovern and is said to be one of the first motion pictures in which the plot is logically from the dancing ability of the star. Jack Pratt was the director, and the photography is by W. H. Thompson.

Mr. and Mrs. Shipman Return to America

Among the arrivals on the "Lapland" Thursday of this week were Mr. and Mrs. Frederic Shipman, who are returning to America for the first time in four years after the successful exploitation of musical stars and feature pictures throughout Australia, New Zealand and the Eastern Orient.

Straw Vote to Extend to National Issues

First National recently announced its purpose to take a nation-wide straw vote of the presidential nominees of the major parties through the cooperation of exhibitors in all parts of the country. Now comes the announcement that the registration of votes under this plan is to include a popular expression of opinion on three momentous questions of the day—the League of Nations issue, prohibition and woman suffrage. This, says First National, will practically amount to a referendum vote on these three questions of national interest. The poll will be taken not only in theatres owned by First National franchise-holders but also in the houses operated by independent exhibitors.

Following is the statement issued by First National in connection with its proposed straw vote:

"The picture houses are now being lined up for this interesting test, and hundreds of pledges to cooperate in the poll have already been received at First National 'straw ballot' headquarters.

"It is probable that one week will be set aside as 'The Screen's Presidential Straw Ballot Week,' during which the poll will be taken simultaneously throughout the country with the motion picture houses as polling places. Republican and Democratic committeemen in every town and city where the vote will be taken by the theatres will be called upon to cooperate and assist in checking up the ballots.

"The machinery for handling this straw vote is now being perfected, and the intention is to have each theatre rush the returns to First National headquarters, where they will be classified and totalled. The final results, it is expected, will be known by the middle of September, two months before the presidential election in November."

Oliver Morosco to Enter Motion Picture Field

Information is given out in Los Angeles this week that Oliver Morosco is to enter the motion picture field on a big scale. No announcement was given as to what affiliation this stage producer would have with any distributing organization, but it was intimated that his entrance into the industry would mean the introduction of combining stage and screen respecting production. In other words, it is the general opinion Mr. Morosco will produce his plays for the screen with the same casts and shortly after they are produced for the stage. Producer Morosco is now on his way East and announcement of his plans is to be made from the New York office shortly.

Company Organizing to Make Indian Picture

John P. Powers, who served as business manager of the Capitol Film Company's producing plant, has organized a company financed by Texas capital to produce an Indian picture on the reservations of Carlyle, Kiowa and Comanche in Oklahoma. Norbert Myles is now at the reservations preparing script for the six-reel production in which more than 2,000 Indians, 800 horses, together with many deer, elk and buffalo will take part. R. E. Banks, an Oklahoma oil man, will be president of the company, which is to be incorporated under the laws of Texas.

National's Leading Lady Dies in California

Miss Lillian Webster, formerly a leading woman at the National Film Corporation of America studios and well known in film circles here and New York, died at the Methodist Hospital July 7th, following an operation. She was 26 years old.

The deceased had been working at the National studios for six months prior to her illness. She was the principal support in several Capitol comedies featuring Neal Burns, later supporting "Smiling Bill" Jones in the Marion H. Kohn Productions.

Franklin Waxes Warm at Geraghty's "New Evil" Accusation

Takes Exception to Scenario Writer's Inference That Exhibitors Meddle

"HONI Soit Qui Maly Pense!" One is inclined to feel, after reading the article in a recent number of Motion Picture News by Tom J. Geraghty on "Discovering a New Evil Mr. Prominent Exhibitor," that he either got up with a grouch or that his knowledge of the motion picture industry as to conditions throughout the country is rather limited. Mr. Geraghty forgets that the opinion of any exhibitor cannot influence original thought. When an exhibitor who thinks has an opinion it is not based on mere whim or fancy, but on cold, practical business conclusions that emanate from the box office.

The exhibitor holds the position of middleman between the producer and the public and patrons express approval or disapproval through their attendance or non-attendance at the theatre. The successful exhibitor is master of his work, just as we presume the successful scenario writer is an expert in his line. Most exhibitors have made a thorough study of the motion picture, its technique and the likes and dislikes of those who pay to see them. This knowledge is not based on theory but on the box office, which is the only real indicator of a picture's success or failure.

What makes the producer or scenarioist a prophet as to what the public wants? Has he the personal contact with the public such as is afforded the exhibitor? Most editors, continuity writers and scenario scribes never pass from their own environment, whereas the modern exhibitor not only knows the pictures of one producer or brain but of many and is therefore capable of judging true merit as expressed by the public. The scenario writer is too close to his job, he has not the proper perspective. Of course, there are exceptions and that's why we have Griffiths, DeMilles, Neilans and other successful producers.

One of the large producing companies thinks enough of the exhibitors' opinion to establish a special department whose business it is to invite criticism. There may be exhibitors whose opinion may not be worth much, but when a group of them from different parts of the country report certain conclusions, it is fair to assume that they are expressing the summary of public opinion. Surely the producer is competent to judge the value of anyone's opinion. He can separate the wheat from the chaff. There is not an instance on record where an exhibitor has tried to force his opinion.

When the producer presents a super-picture the exhibitor is more than pleased to

Introducing Mr. Franklin In Reply To Mr. Geraghty

HAROLD B. FRANKLIN, managing director of Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo, one of our Advisory Board and all around good showman and good fellow read Tom Geraghty's story concerning what he termed a new evil which threatened the photoplay, namely, the prominent exhibitor, in the News some weeks past and found it not only so interesting but so contrary to his own views that he has written for us an article which sets forth the case of the prominent exhibitor whom Geraghty inferred was a meddler in business of which he knew little, in an entirely different light.

The News is holding no briefs in the case of either the plaintiff or the defendant but it does welcome and hastens to publish Mr. Franklin's article the same as it welcomed and published that written by Mr. Geraghty, since both men are leaders in their particular line of endeavor in the motion picture industry and their views orally or in text will be found readable and bound to contain much of actual meat.

We therefore take pleasure in presenting for your perusal what Mr. Franklin has to say in defense of himself and his fellow exhibitors in the matter of the alleged attempt to dictate concerning the production of motion pictures play it and he does not ask who suggested the thought. Griffiths and DeMille can continue to produce master pictures.

When Mr. Geraghty makes the statement that "the exhibitors have never been responsible for anything new or better in pictures" he forgets that it was the vision of exhibitors that made possible million dollar theatres, which created a demand for pictures of the better quality. The exhibitor and producer have prospered together through each having an equal share in the progress of the industry. One can not do without the other. In fact, it is the demand for better pictures by the exhibitors that has made the present so-called super production possible.

I personally would like to know the name of the exhibitor who, playing a feature picture, to quote Mr. Geraghty, exclaims, "Give me more just exactly like that." Every up-to-date exhibitor realizes the value of variety. He knows that novelty and innovation is what keeps the business alive. If Mary Roberts Rinehart writes a novel no one expects that she need consult her publisher. But her publishers need not publish the book if they find it unsuitable.

One might get the impression, according to Tom, that producers go around the country to learn what exhibitors think in advance of a certain picture. I personally do not remember a single instance where I have been asked for an opinion on a future production, but I do believe that I am a competent judge of a finished product suitable for the Shea theatres.

When Charles Frohman, David Belasco, Arthur Hopkins, George M. Cohan and others produce stage plays they realize the great value of people in various communities by first producing these plays in small cities, making changes as they go along. The play is watched, trimmed and changed whenever necessary before it is finally staged on Broadway. Is it to be expected that all film that leaves the studio is so perfect that it cannot be improved. I know of one instance where Mr. Cohan rewrote the entire first act of his new play, "Genius and the Crowd," after it played Buffalo, thereby proving that even producers like George M. do not feel competent to foretell in advance what will be successful with the public. Mr. Geraghty, however, feels that the motion picture producer knows just what the public wants.

In regard to what Tom says about cutting pictures, the exhibitor who cuts his film merely to shorten a show is making a short cut to oblivion, but there are many instances in which unnecessary closeups occur every hundred feet or so, where pictures are padded into seven reels and where scenes are shown that no self-respecting man would bring his family to view. These are scenes that must be cut and if this is not done by the producer before release, it should be done by the exhibitor who has some regard for his audience. I have yet to see an instance where a Griffith, Tourneur, Pickford, De Mille or other well produced picture needed cutting; but there are many features that need editing before being thrown on the screen of a theatre attended by self-respecting patrons.

While Mr. Geraghty can see on the desert of failure the bones of successful exhibitors who have taken up producing, let me point out the producers who were formerly exhibitors, such as Adolph Zukor, Marcus Loew, Joseph M. Schenck, William Fox, Harry Garson and a host of others.

Mr. Geraghty is perfectly right in his assertion that an industry as big as the motion picture industry should cultivate its own literature, but this should not necessitate eliminating either the adapted play or the novel. Exhibitors in the past have been more than glad to support pictures that have not been stage successes.

Franklin Waxes Warm

It has ever been the cry of the exhibitor to get away from machine-made pictures. I can point to various articles published in MOTION PICTURE NEWS, which had pages on this subject.

Mr. Geraghty has a fancied grievance. It is much ado about nothing. He says that he knows of five or six productions which are based on war subjects that were released after the war that have been very successful. What are these productions? Personally I believe that the great war play, the great war motion picture, has not as yet been written and that the future will bring forth a wonderful wealth of material. These pictures of the future will not be the product of hysteria, sensationalism nor forced patriotism, but will have as their motif a genuine story of the heart. The reason exhibitors have been objecting to war pictures is because every producer literally rained war pictures without rhyme or reason. At the present time the people are trying to forget the war, which brings painful memories, and the motion picture theatre is primarily for entertainment.

Regarding the costume play, no less an authority than Jesse L. Lasky has put himself on record with the view that the costume play was not generally supported by the public. This, however, does not mean that we cannot have "If I Were King," with John Barrymore.

A good exhibitor will go out of his way to give constructive criticism even though it might hurt the feelings of the producer. If he is wrong time will tell. In short the motion picture exhibitor is not trying to

Dancing Numbers Appear at Broadway Houses

THREE of the four Broadway theatres we covered this week, the Capitol, Rivoli and Rialto are using dancing numbers on their bills, which would suggest that this form of entertainment is proving popular in the picture house.

The Capitol offering is an interpretative creation with Mlle. Gambrell and A. Oumansky. A stage setting is used and the performers work under spots. The number is entitled "Souvenir."

At the Rivoli the dancing specialty is "A Carnival Episode," a pantomime arranged by Paul Oswald with the famous "Arlequin," "Columbine" and "Pantaloone" as the characters. This number plays somewhat for comedy, along with the interpretative dancing offered. The costuming is traditional for the roles. At the Rialto the dancing number is a single performing without a stage setting and attired in fancy costume. His steps are fantastic and of the semi-tumbling type.

tell the producer what to produce, but is attempting to encourage producers in general to put their best efforts into the making of great pictures.

Mr. Geraghty's attitude is tyrannical; it smacks of kaiserism. Only by the collective thought of the industry will it march on, will it continue to progress. Our country has gone to its present greatness through collective thought and effort. Any steps toward bigger things in motion pictures will be brought about by the combined efforts of producers and exhibitors. One cannot live without the other.

Majestic Neglects No Opportunities with "Romance"

Frank Lacey, manager, and Ralph Ruffner, new director of exploitation and old friend of the News and to the picture 20th have recently put over an exploitation campaign for "Romance" at the Majestic theatre, Portland, Ore., which echoes clear across the continent to New York.

Special emphasis was laid on the lobby, which represented Mr. Lacey's best efforts. The front of the lobby and it all were covered with white lattice work in and out of which flowers and vines had been worked, giving it the appearance of a quaint old-fashioned garden. The use of hanging baskets filled with colorful posies added to this effect as did a mass of greenery which banked the top of the box office located in the middle of the lobby. Below the glass windows, it also was lattice work and covered. On either side of the main entrance and at several intervals on the walls of the lobby the lattice work gave way for large cuts or stills of Doris Keane, taken from the play. A huge high basket of flowers was placed in one corner of the lobby and in the other stood a wee tree from which drooped a white wicker bird cage.

Majestic ushers wore quaint garden frocks suggestive that they had been spending the morning in an old-fashioned, elaborate garden.

Mr. Ruffner designed some attractive ads and took care of the publicity in a way that brought the showing of the feature to the attention of every resident of Portland.

Presentation Stunt Overshadows Film Bill

Sid Grauman Scores Again as Originator of Specialty Numbers

IN staging specialty numbers that cause audiences to evince the utmost enthusiasm, Sid Grauman, of Grauman's theatre, Los Angeles, has scored another success. Some time ago Mr. Grauman was debating with some of his friends on the popular fancy in regard to "jazz" music as compared to the harmony of the grand opera type and from this conversation was born an idea for a special attraction at Grauman's which was labelled "Grand Opera Vs. Jazz."

The act was preceded by an announcement made by a hidden voice, that Sid Grauman wished to settle beyond any doubt the preference of his audiences in regard to the two types of music. The audience was to be the sole judge, and was asked to indicate by its applause the particular class of music they most favored.

The big orchestra began playing a dreamy waltz, the velvet curtains were drawn apart for a distance of about six feet, and a spotlight was focused on the aperture. The hidden voice then introduced Mr. Bobbie Gro, a representative "Jazz." A smiling young fellow in evening clothes stepped through the opening and acknowledged the reception the audience bestowed upon him as the "Jazz" representative.

It seems that the psychology of the hidden voice announcements, made the audience enter keenly into the spirit of the contest, another example of the thought of Sid Grauman.

The hidden voice then introduced Frederick De Vries as the representative of Grand Opera. This character was dressed as "Pagliacci," in a silken clown costume.

Then the orchestra swung into the opening strains of the Prologue to "Pagliacci," the curtains were drawn completely back, revealing an elaborate curtained archway, set in the midst of a forest of magnificent trees; cunningly contrived lighting effects were employed in such a way as to make the scene setting a thing of extreme beauty.

The representative of Grand Opera appeared in the archway and sang the "Pagliacci" Prologue to a veritable storm of applause.

At the finish of the number, Sid Grauman again forced his inimitable genius in producing applause for his audience. As the applause for the Grand Opera died away, the stage was suddenly flooded with light, and the "set" was changed before the very eyes of the astonished beholders, and in the space of approximately three minutes a new "set" housing the interior of a cafe, with a piano on a platform, presided over by Johnny Cooper, with Mr. Gross as the singer of "Jazz" songs.

This offering also won tremendous applause, but let it be said that when the final applause was rendered, indicating the favor of the audience, Los Angelenos went on record as being ideal in their musical likes, for the representative of Grand Opera carried off the honors in a perfect hurricane of hand-clapping.

Middle West Theatres Plan All Exploitation Carefully

Unique Publicity Ideas Suggested for Current Releases

Borrows Stage Coach For "Toll Gate"

RELICS of the wild west and the rush of the forty-niners entered into the mundane life of Bridgeport, Conn., as a sideshow to Paramount's Wm. S. Hart production, "The Toll Gate," when it played at the Lyric theatre. The old-time atmosphere was embodied in nothing more than a battered and traveled stage-coach formerly used by the Deadeye Dicks of the prairies and more recently a part of Barnum and Bailey's circus.

Through the assistance of Paul L. Morgan, exploitation representative at the New Haven Exchange of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, the manager of the theatre was able to obtain the stage coach from the circus, which has its permanent storing grounds for circus equipment in the same city. Then the exploitation man got busy and framed up something—nothing more or less than an old-fashioned, frenzied drive through the business streets of Bridgeport in '49 style.

Several of Bridgeport's adventure-seeking youths were dressed up like cow punchers and ranchers and pressed into service on the ancient vehicle. Then the management got hold of Chief Long Tom, one of the old-time characters of the circus game, and put him on the box next to the driver. The driver, by the way, was a regular feller who had chauffeured four horse-power vehicles long ago before the gas engine came into existence.

With this picturesque gathering as a nucleus, the stage, placarded with posters announcing "William S. Hart in 'The Toll Gate,'" and the theatre and date, got the attention of every one on the business streets of Bridgeport as the double team raced up and down to escape a mythical Indian attack. That a large percentage of those whose attention was attracted by this

Rothapfel Presentation of Opera Meritorious

S. L. ROTHAPFEL has made the overture at the Capitol theatre this week, "Faust," into practically the feature number on the bill by the manner of presentation.

Instead of playing the musical composition as arranged for orchestral use, a special number in ten episodes has been originated in which the Capitol orchestra, the Capitol ensemble and a specially engaged cast of recognized artists sing the principal portions of roles of the opera from the stage in a series of tableaux for which scenic investiture has been supplied by the Capitol artist, John Wenger.

The overture opens with the regulation orchestral production. It is followed by "The Vision," a tableau number by "Faust" assisted by the ensemble who are located in the orchestral pit. Episode C is "Choral" by "Valentine," and the ensemble. The famous duet of "Marguerite and Faust" is sung from the stage. "The Kermess" follows by the ensemble, and the "Soldiers' Chorus" by the male portion of the ensemble is next. The stage is used for the rendition of "Cavatina" by "Faust" and for the singing of the "Song of the Golden Calf" by "Mephistopheles." Up to this point no "props" have been used and the stage setting is a black velvet drop with the singers silhouetted against it by spots. "Mephistopheles" is supplied with some stage paraphernalia for this number. The ninth episode is the duet by Faust and Marguerite, "Highborn and Lovely Maid" with the closing number the "Trio and Finale" by "Marguerite, Faust and Mephistopheles" and ensemble.

The last episode is given a more elaborate stage setting than the other stage numbers.

Maddox Makes "White Elephant" Pay

The success of the Southern theatre, Columbia City, under the management of James A. Maddox is very interesting inasmuch as the theatre has been known through-out the state as a "white elephant" since the theatre was built six years ago and all legitimate attractions are placed there instead of at the Southern. All classes of management have been tried during the six years, and all have failed. However, Mr. Maddox renovated the house thoroughly, had it redecorated, carpeted, a ten-ton and dollar nursery was installed, and then proceeded to put on a first-class entertainment staged in an up-to-date way.

Recently the Southern played "Alias Jimmy Valentine." A prologue was provided that did much to give the picture unusual popularity.

Mr. Maddox introduced his prologue with lightning and storm effects and the appearance of a burglar with a gun and bull-eye in an interior with windows showing a night exterior. After a few bars of the storm introduction the orchestra played the introduction and verse of the old familiar "Look Out for Jimmy Valentine," while the burglar, one of the violinists, did some exploring around the set in the dark followed by a green spot. Near the end of the verse of the song the burglar, bull-eye changed on a violin and how he examines it, picks it up and, as the orchestra reached the chorus, play it as a solo, now in another spot. Near the end of the second chorus, he is frightened by a woman's scream, off stage, and hurriedly exits as the chorus closes, and the green dropped into the title of "Alias Jimmy Valentine."

Free Coupons Great Publicity for Serial

Brown Tries Experiment in Opening With "The Lost City"

THAT something out of the ordinary is to be preferred in putting over the first episode of a serial has been recently demonstrated by G. E. Brown, director of publicity for the Memphis Enterprises, Inc., of Memphis, Tenn., in connection with the running of the initial episode of "The Lost City."

Mr. Brown advertised for three days prior to the first showing of the opening episode, these ads being considerably larger than the Princess usually carries, and each advertisement carried a coupon, admitting any boy or girl under thirteen years of age free to the theatre on the opening day.

The advent of the free coupon in the ads created a furore among the younger generation and both afternoon papers which carried the advertisement reported an unusually heavy demand on the streets and at the counter.

When the doors of the Princess opened Wednesday morning at 11 o'clock, the lobby was packed with varied and interesting specimens of the coming citizenship. Each had his or her coupon and many of them were accompanied by their parents.

From 11 o'clock until closing, both their fathers, big brothers, big sisters and mothers were on hand at all hours. The box-office records of the house for week days were smashed and war tax tickets indicated that more than 1,300 juveniles had passed through the front door during the afternoon and night. At one time, about 4 o'clock in the afternoon, after school had been dismissed, the kids were lined up for a half block on both sides of the box-office and were as happy as if they were going to see a circus.

The second day of the opening episode showed returns from a box-office standpoint far in excess of the usual Thursday and for three weeks now receipts on Wednesdays and Thursdays are approximately 50 per cent higher than formerly.

Mr. Brown, to learn the exact cause therefor beyond a question of doubt, found that more than 50 per cent of the youngsters who had come with their elders on the opening day, were steady patrons, and they and their parents, judging from Wednesday and Thursday receipts, intend to see the serial through the entire fifteen episodes.

The cost of the advertising over the usual quota was small compared with the financial returns that have marked the showing of this serial so far.

Landers Pulls the Best Small Town Stunt in Months

Manager Charles H. Landers of the Opera House, Fredonia, N. Y., is setting a dizzy pace in western New York in exploitation stunts of a decidedly original nature. Fredonia is a small town on the Lake Erie shore about 35 miles from Buffalo, and the liveliest thing in the town is the Opera House and its management. Mr. Landers is constantly putting over stunts that keep the town on edge and money flowing into the box-office.

"John Barleycorn's Memorial Service" is the latest novelty put on at the Fredonia picture palace and it took the populace by a house afire. Mr. Landers distributed a couple of thousand "programs" showing the form of the "service" and in the local newspaper he told the folks that this was to be the year's most timely show. The stunt was suggested by the feature of the program, "Water, Water, Everywhere," and the fillers on the bill carried out the "memorial service" idea.

The program opened with an overture, "We Won't Go Home Until Morning," described on the order of services as an ancient Swedish folk-song and played by (full) orchestra. "Three Raisins and a Cake of Yeast" was the title of the Mutt and Jeff cartoon and "Drink to Me Only with Thine Eyes" was sung by "our own" John McCormack via the Victrola. "The Ghost of John Barleycorn" was presented in Prisma color pictures and Mr. Landers in his newspaper ad said that it was in natural wet colors and that it would make a camel thirsty. Billy Murray offered "I'll See You in Cuba," which was also given on the Victrola, and then came the feature, followed by "Oh, What a Night," a reissue, but very appropriate, in which Charlie Chaplin and "Fatty" Arbuckle appeared. The exit march was "Good Night, Ladies," and the author, according to the bill of particulars, was no less a person than Slammer Hard.

"Whether this is a victory celebration or a recollection of happy memories, we hope that you will enjoy it," said a footnote, and we'll tell the world that old Fredonia certainly did enjoy it, that is that part that was able to get into the Opera House. If Mr. Landers keeps up his business-pulling stunts, we can see where Fredonia is going to need a much larger theatre.

Small town exploitation is more or less of a problem, but it seems to have been solved by Mr. Landers, who always seems to have an original idea at hand of putting over a picture.

"Treasure" Hunt Goes Big in Steubenville

MANAGER TALLMAN of the Victoria theatre, Steubenville, Ohio, had all the kids of the town out looking for the "lucky spot" in Steubenville last week.

Views of Verdun Worthy of Being Featured

AT three of the Broadway picture houses a Pathe strip showing the recent memorial exercises on the site of the battle of Verdun with views of this city as it exists today, battle-scarred and crumbling from the effect of the carnage that occurred there during the war, is being used as a part of the current events numbers.

The strip is of sufficient length and of such deuced entertainment as well as historic value that it is worth being featured on any program.

Our national interest in the war is beginning to grow from a historical standpoint, and authentic scenic records of the places made famous in France and elsewhere by battles is something which the theatre going public will pay to see.

Audiences at the three theatres are according this news weekly strip a round of applause which is being denied any other film attraction on the bill, including Presidential candidates.

Don't forget to say something about "Historic Verdun" when you play the currently released Pathe News.

It was all inspired by the picture, "Treasure Island," which he was running the week of July 4th. Two thousand heralds were distributed all over the city, at Manager Tallman's solicitation. On the heralds appeared a flat map of an imaginary country. One corner of the map was marked with a big black spot. An arrow pointed to the black spot, saying, "THIS IS THE LUCKY SPOT IN STEUBENVILLE THE FINDER OF THE LUCKY SPOT WILL FIND TREASURE TO TREASURY ISLAND, PLAYING AT THE VICTORIA THEATRE NEXT WEEK."

These heralds appeared early during the week previous to the showing of the picture. The kids were seen in the most outlandish places of the town, looking for "the lucky spot." They wore out tons of valuable shoe leather hiking over the most unfrequented places. They quarreled amongst each other as to the possible location of this mysterious lucky spot. But above all, they kept the subject alive all week, a most important item of conversation.

And not until late on the Saturday preceding the opening run of "Treasure Island" at the Victoria was the location of the "lucky spot" divulged, and then in a novel manner. The Herald Star, one of Steubenville's leading newspapers, has a bulletin board over the entrance to the building which it occupies. On the bulletin board, late news events are recorded. And late Saturday evening of the 3rd of July the Herald Star bulletin board carried the announcement that "THIS IS THE LUCKY SPOT."

The news travelled up and down the street like wildfire, and children of all ages, large and small, crowded into the newspaper office to claim free passes to the show.

Gives Prizes for Best Samples of Crochet Work

GUS E. SNOW, manager of the Grand theatre, Fulton Ky., has recently received the reward attendant on displaying the earnings of good housework for his encouragement of "For the Soul of Rafael."

In looking over the picture, Mr. Snow hit upon the second act in his best act operation. The scene he exploited showed Miss Young, a Rafael Laidan crocheting a lace collar. Mr. Snow accordingly sent out announcements of a crochet test offering a prize to the first, second and third best collar crocheted according to the pattern used in "For the Soul of Rafael." The design used in the picture happened to be a very simple one, so that girls of every age were eligible. The department store of Fulton, of which there are two, displayed a photograph of Miss Young in the act of tatting the lace.

The interest thus aroused drew crowds to the opening of the picture. The lobby of the Grand theatre displayed scenes of illustrating the crocheting, and a table inviting the patron to watch for the second reel of the picture for a full view of the collar Miss Young was tatting was placed before the picture began.

After the second day of the showing, specimens of the handiwork of Fulton's crochet fan began to pour in, and are still coming in bunches. The prize has not been announced yet.

Brooklyn Theatre Builds Novelty Lobby Display

WILL BROTHERS, manager of the Fifth Avenue Theatre in Brooklyn, made very profitable use recently of a unique lobby display advertising Marjorie Rambeau in "The Fortune Teller."

A booth was fitted up in the lobby, in which a figure representing the fortune teller in the picture was placed with a crystal sphere, like that used by a crystal gazer, beneath her fingers. The figure was dressed in a paper fortune-telling costume of attractive colors, and wore over its blonde wig a fortune-telling cap. The background for the booth was blue lining, upon which were seen white stars, a symbol of astrology. Over the whole booth were scattered playing cards, and beside the sphere stood a tall, hand one floor lamp. In front of the booth was the sign, "For the greatest photoplay of the past, future and present, see Marjorie Rambeau in 'The Fortune Teller.'"

The lobby frames, which were executed to advertise this attraction, had in either corner a Ouija board, while the star and playing card theme was further carried out. Staring sagely into the face of the fortune teller, was placed an owl as a symbol of wisdom.

Mr. Wern said that his business increased substantially as a result of the lobby decorations.

Exploitation Most Abused Element in Whole Industry

Mrs. Anita Kanges Manager of the Playhouse Pittsburgh Expresses Views

I DO not maintain that every woman could make a good exhibitor. But I do maintain that a woman is equally well fitted with a man to take hold of a motion picture theatre and handle it without suffering bankruptcy or failure. And to make matters clear, I will state, while it is yet time, that I am no suffragist.

And I further believe that the day is not far distant when we will see a great many more women exhibitors. It is logical. The exhibitor-field is the place for a woman because women can appreciate the responsibility of maintaining the integrity of the industry. But more than that—they can hold imaginative and air-bubble exploitation schemes to a minimum, thereby making "exhibitorism" safe for exploitation."

This brings me to the statement that forms the basis of this story—that exploitation is the most abused element in the motion picture business and that the laws of common sense which women will naturally apply will go a long way toward correcting, at least bettering, this misunderstood advantage that is daily turned into a liability.

Unusual display tactics will not get an exhibitor anywhere unless they are backed up with sound practicability. Theory is no good unless it can be put into practice, and exhibitor exploitation schemes that cannot be put into practice not only prove worthless to an exhibitor, but in many cases actually have a deteriorating effect upon his patronage.

Some time ago, I read—I do not recall just where—a story about some western exhibitor's exploitation of a certain special feature attraction. The story outlined how he mapped out his campaign, and turned over some nine or ten paragraphs to his philosophy on exploitation assets in general, without ever getting anywhere. The campaign as laid down in the story included getting a group of local girls to appear in one-piece bathing costumes and do fancy diving into a large pool built on the stage of the theatre, which, it appears, was one of gigantic proportions. The exhibition would take place, so the story ran, during the break-in performances. I learned that the exhibitor packed his house during the two weeks the picture showed at his theatre, but I have doubts as to whether this sort of scheme paid him in full for his trouble and expense.

Personally, I would hardly consider this good exhibition. First, because to construct such a diving pool on any stage in any theatre would involve a greater sum of money than is necessary to tie up on any kind of exploitation. Secondly, I do not think that it would be very easy to hire

"High and Dizzy" Sets New Record for Lloyd

WITHOUT a question, "High and Dizzy," the new Harold Lloyd comedy, tops anything which Lloyd has turned out and runs a neck and neck race with "Shoulder Arms" in entertainment value and originality. Any exhibitor who books this and doesn't play and bill it as the feature attraction is neglecting an opportunity which doesn't come along every day.

One of the exploitation values the offering has, along with its wealth of new "gags," are some thrills that would be the making of a serial picture. Audiences at the Strand and Capitol theatre, New York, where the picture is playing are emitting loud gasps as Lloyd unsteadily ambles about on a window ledge hundreds of feet above the sidewalks of a Los Angeles street, apparently in danger of his life at every moment. This scene is not double photography and no one in an audience will ever give Lloyd credit for being anything but a daredevil of the first water.

You can promise something that has never been excelled in the line of film stunts in this and make good besides giving your patrons the greatest comedy of the year.

Don't bill this one "And Harold Lloyd in a new comedy, 'High and Dizzy.'" a group of local girls in and around Pittsburgh to do these diving stunts, providing that the exhibitor could equip his theatre as a natatorium, for the time being. Third, I think this exhibitor went about his exploitation in a very amateurish, unbusinesslike way, and took absolutely the paths of MOST resistance in trying to put over his attraction.

I would class this exploitation as a failure—even if he filled his house to capacity every performance during which the picture showed. When your expenses decrease the margin of profit and cause no material gain in good will or other tangible asset, you are not conducting your theatre on business lines.

This exhibitor could have put over a display campaign, using his daily newspapers for his advertisement. A well-gotten-up display series would have put over his picture, if it had any merit whatever. And if it did not have merit he was all the more welcome for trying to peddle off on his patrons a worthless commodity.

One of the most effective display campaigns I have ever been able to inaugurate was on "The Thunderbolt." And I attribute a great deal of the success of the campaign to the fact that Miss MacDonald was a Pittsburgh girl. Anything that has the name of "Katherine MacDonald" in it will be read widely in Pittsburgh, even if it is only a classified ad. And by emphasizing this name in the display specimen I only took advantage of a local condition that meant money to my house.

I'd like to see the day when we would put an end to the freak exhibiting and get down to brass tacks. Instead of thinking up weird schemes to thrill the multitudes, a few exhibitors would do better to devise ways and means of keeping their patrons satisfied with their programs. If an exhibitor scheme could be applied to another branch of trade, relatively speaking, it is a pretty good sign that it is practical. When it falls short of the business-like mark, it fails to be an example of true exhibiting.

Dubuque Theatre Built Nice Lobby Display

The first Dubuque theatre to redecorate for summer is the Strand. The decorations were completed during the showing of "Judy of Rogue's Harbor," starring Mary Miles Minter.

The color scheme is pink and white and green. A lattice work effect of pure white is used in the decorations of the lobby and the staircase, while the interior lobby represents a rookery in the midst of which is a bubbling fountain. This effect was secured by a cleverly arranged canvas, painted to give a rocky effect. The bowl of the fountain is filled with rocks and pebbles and adds greatly to the realism of the scene.

The lattice work encasing the ticket booth, and that over the entrance to the lobby and on the staircase, is beautified by entwining pink roses to give a creeping vine effect. The general appearance of the theatre is decidedly summery and this is enhanced by the cooling breeze drawn into the theatre by the cooling system.

Superba Showing of Idol Dancer Pleasing

Incident to the week-long showing of "The Idol Dancer" at the Superba theatre, San Diego, Cal., the management presented a special program appropriate to the picture. A special stage setting had been arranged, depicting an island scene in the tropical seas, with thatched native hut in the foreground and a warship at anchor in the offing. The Paiwaia Trio furnished Hawaiian music, and Princess Hokelani was seen in native dances.

Costello's Atmospheric Stage Setting for "Maimundis"

On this page is shown a stage setting created by Frank Costello, manager of the Little Opera House, San Francisco, for the production of the opera "Maimundis." The presentation was the most elaborate of anything ever attempted in the city in connection with a musical number as part of a picture theatre program. The singers secured were all famous names with international reputations.

Jacksonville Bows to King Exploitation

How Brown and Gersdorf Put Over
"The Idol Dancer"

HOLDING an exhibitor record of having launched with success one of the most scientifically planned exploitation campaigns in the history of Jacksonville, Fla., J. O. Brown, manager of the Arcade theatre of that city, and Phil Gersdorf, Publicity Director for the Arcade, are now receiving congratulations.

In addition to aiding in the realization of the maximum box-office receipts for the Arcade, the campaign as conducted by Messrs. Brown and Gersdorf has brought another result. It has demonstrated in all sections of Florida that the dawn of the exploitation day has arrived. This refers to exploitation in the biggest and broadest sense of the word—exploitation that means careful planning to get the most out of an appropriation and the most out of every force that can aid in the publicizing and general sales promotion of any given picture. Especially it refers to the method in which the Arcade exploited "The Idol Dancer."

The campaign began three weeks before the opening of the picture, which incidentally played a week's run. The policy of the theatre is never to advertise a picture more than one week in advance, but the campaign as mapped out under the new exploitation system called for a radical departure.

Three weeks before the beginning of the picture's run, one of the roto special broadsides was mounted and placed in a prominent place in the lobby. Mr. Gersdorf and Mr. Brown adopted the slogan, "Oh, how she can dance!" and they placed the emphasis of all their advertising on the girl herself, always using the slogan with every picture of the girl.

Besides the generous use of paper many other bits of good publicity were put over.

The fact that Griffith and his party were marooned last winter near Miami, while on the way to make scenes for this very picture, was used to good advantage and was the subject of two corking news stories.

The newspaper space was extra large. The campaign started a week in advance of the showing, with a series of teaser ads. Five of these were scattered through both morning and evening papers every day, with a different slogan each day—such as "Oh, how she can dance!" "Why, even the cocoanuts fell for her!" "White Almond Blossom—clad in a wisp of tropical grasses—the spirit of youth and springtime," and so on. On the Saturday preceding the opening, a special announcement was used, which brought the teasers to a climax.

An effective tie-up was arranged with the Kress Five and Ten Cent Store, whereby they gave their best window to a huge display of the song, "Rainbow Isle," the song number written especially for this picture.

Some additional interest was created by a special pass which was effectively gotten up. It was about an inch and a half or two inches wide, and about twice as long, printed on thin yellow paper. One half of the pass was taken up by a tiny cut, showing the dancer, a tiny group of palms, printed in green ink. This side read: "D. W. Griffith's Romance of the South Seas, THE IDOL DANCER." In small letters beside the figure of the dancer, the slogan, "Oh, how she can dance!" was printed.

Tivoli Staging Opera Elaborately

Manager Frank Costello, of the Tivoli theatre, San Francisco, recently captured all presentation honors with the barcarole of Marcelli's opera "Maimundis." A stage setting as shown on the opposite page depicted a scene in the locale of the composition, Ecuador, with a gypsy camp in the foreground and another on a distant peak where its fire made a point of red light in the moonlight effects produced by the use of electric lights.

Mr. Costello was exceptionally successful with his lighting effects, and the characters who sang roles in the opera were rare artists.

Dusk is stealing on as the curtain rises.

The gypsies busy themselves preparing the evening meal. Their camp fires glow red in the foreground, while steam floats up from the kettles in which the food is cooking.

As the darkness settles the stars come out.

After a while the moon peeps up from behind the mountain, its silver rays sending long lines of light across the lake's dark waters. Soon the waters begin to shimmer, and the mountain cascade dances and sparkles as Luna sails upward into the central heavens.

Elks Carnival at Chicago Offers Exploitation Opportunities

On Monday, July 5th, when the Elks descended on Chicago some 25,000 strong, M. C. Mintz, publicity director for Celebrated Players, saw an opportunity of putting something over for the Gump cartoons. He realized that when the Elks' Convention adjourned and the various Elks returned to their various haunts, they could help spread the Gump propaganda and do much good. Whereupon Mintz got up a combination Elk-Gump tag day, and distributed close to 25,000 tags bearing the legend:

WHO WAS THE FIRST ELK?

Which question was answered on the op-

The other half of the pass carried the name of the play, the date, and the manager's signature. The green ink of the printing, on the yellow paper of the pass, makes a most pleasing appearance.

Mr. Gersdorf figured by increasing the number of these special passes, the idea might be worth a little advertising value, for the new man with a pass is very likely to show it to his friends, and when he has seen the picture, he is apt to talk about it.

Rialto, Laredo, Texas, Opens

Due to the fame of an aviator of one of the owner's five bi-planes, joined in the dedication and opening ceremonies of the Rialto theatre at Laredo, Texas, which gave its initial public showings on the evening of June 1. Lieut. Harry Weddington, who established a passenger carrying altitude record on May 26th by a soaring 20,130 feet at Kelly Field, taking four people with him, is part owner of the new enterprise. Associated with him is H. A. Daniels, one of the pioneer motion picture exhibitors of Texas. Mr. Daniels will manage the theatre as Lieut. Weddington will continue in the service.

Members of the Eighth Aero Squadron, stationed at Laredo, started the exhibition at seven o'clock by showering the theatre with bouquets of flowers for Lieut. Weddington and the dropping of free admission tickets to the theatre and "glider" cards announcing that some stunts that even the members of the squadron did not care to tackle took place in the Curwood Cover production of "Back to God's Country," which was the opening attraction of the theatre. Then the five planes lighted wing flares and for an hour waged a sham battle in which nose spins, loops, tail dives and every other air stunt known to aviators followed one another in rapid succession. "I shall leave my wings wide open and 'very' guns were kept popping so that the portion of Laredo's population that was not present at the start had been attracted to the theatre by the time the door-ways opened for the first performance at eight o'clock.

Lobby display which the Queen originated and built for the picture and which did much to attract extra business for the engagement

Proving Release Dates Mean Nothing

THE News has commented numberless times both editorially, in the pages of the Service Bureau and in the news columns of the growing tendency of exhibitors to disregard the release dates of feature pictures and expressing a belief that the age of a picture so far as months are concerned should mean nothing. It is, therefore, with pleasure that we publish an article from the pen of C. A. Barbian, manager of the Waldorf theatre, Akron, Ohio, in which he relates an experience with a feature fifteen months old and a war picture at that.

Mr. Barbian's article follows:

"It was pure accident which led me to book the war picture 'Whom the Gods Destroy,' at the Waldorf theatre, a feature that had been practically shelved, for I was told for fifteen months.

"Having given the feature dates, I set my plans for the feature's exploitation. I knew it was a war picture, but I also knew it was a good war picture.

"My advertising was based entirely upon the strength of the story. I said nothing to suggest the great war. The pictures I used in the advertising were those of scenes in the play which were based upon strong scenes, rather than the spectacular war scenes. I gave full play to the fact that it was an enormous production, more than 8,000 people used in it. The story was the motif for all my exploitation.

"It paid, and paid in a manner that has set me looking for other such pictures. The people came expecting to see a great story and they saw a great story. The war in all its horrid splendor was there, but the difference was in their attitude. Advertised as a strong story the story-interest was first in their mind and the war setting an appropriate one. They had not come to see war scenes stretched together by a story that was incidental.

"There is the secret. If the people see what they have been invited to see they are satisfied. An invitation to see a war picture would have found them unresponsive. While the advertising of 'Whom the Gods Would Destroy' as a war picture would be justified, the greater value of the picture, and in fact the real value at the present time is the story and the splendid way in which the story is related.

"When it comes to war pictures it is well to remember that immediately after a war, they are distasteful. But as time passes the interest that attaches itself to historical events is found. In a year or so war pictures will make pretty good box office bets.

Wilmington Exploitation Campaign Goes Big

Elia Weinstein, advertising manager for four of the most important theatres in Wilmington, Del., the Queen, Marston, Playhouse and Kaito, has recently engineered an exploitation campaign for "The

Bannon Another Live Wire Small Town Exhibitor

Mr. Bannon recently put over a campaign for "The Great Air Robbery" that would have done credit to a much larger city.

Bannon would have liked to have secured Locklear for a personal exhibition but this aviator was in California, so he had to content himself with the services of P. F. Collins, one of the crack airmen of the Curtiss Aeroplane Company, and arranged for Collins to take him up on the opening day of his run of "The Great Air Robbery" and fly over West New Brighton and the nearby towns.

Bannon figured on pulling an additional stunt. He advertised for a man willing to make a parachute leap from an aeroplane soaring over his town. He was deluged with applications. Complications with the local police authorities and the Curtiss company put an end to this plan, however, and instead made his flights from the Long Island aviation field across New York Bay, circling over his theatre and dropping dodgers advertising the picture and also a certain number of free tickets.

A big sign had been arranged which advertised the flying event and told the residents of the city to "Look out for aerial mail handbills who would bomb the city from the sky on the date of flight."

Courage of Marge O'Doone" at the Queen that set a new record for live-wire methods for putting over a picture for the city.

Among the stunts which Weinstein originated and carried to successful completion was a lobby display, a "house of the opposite sex."

The newspaper campaign was in keeping with the rest of the exploitation, and included strong headlines and good selling talk.

Besides the lobby display, a window display was effected with one of the best local stores of the city in which the theatre advertising and the novel by Curwood, from which the picture was adapted, were the prominent features.

Copies of the novel were given away through the newspapers for the best local reviews of the picture.

A Real Idea for the Small Town Managers

It was the small matter of having advertising bills made out to a fictitious name that gained for the Grant theatre at Hamilton, Ohio, one of the most valuable publicity campaigns which has ever been experienced by a motion picture attraction in that city. The idea was based upon a sort of assumed form of the old proverb that "familiarity breeds contempt," for when the Grant decided upon a special presentation the management felt that the newspapers would not notice it and that it would not be accepted as a genuine New York presentation unless somewhat out-of-date of Hamilton was connected with it.

The manager went around to the newspaper offices with his advertising copy, which was just twice the space usually used by the theatre, and made the remark to the advertising manager:

"Make out the bill for this stuff to C. C. Brown, will you?"

It led to a query as to the reason, to which the manager said:

"Oh, I will guarantee your money, all right, but you don't think I am such a damned fool as to think a costly show as that can be made to pay in Hamilton, do you?"

That aroused interest and the manager proceeded to point out what made the show too expensive for Hamilton. In the first place, the picture, "The Idol Dancer," was a D. W. Griffith production, then there was Bell's Troupe of Hawaiians, who had to have salaries, also Mr. Lei Lehua, one of the best exponents of the Hula-Hula dance in the country, was not in the habit of working for nothing, but added to all that was the special stage setting which was going to be put on, and this Brown, identified a local man for Associated First National Picture, was crazy enough to think that Hamiltonians would keep the theatre crowded for a week. The manager gave the impression that Brown was going to stand the losses in order to prove to the Grant that Hamilton really was "big town" territory.

The next column of the paper pounded home the fact that it was a chance for the residents of Hamilton to know that they could support in a class up-to-date attraction. The special stage setting consisting of a beach of real sand and wide set pieces of palms were described in detail.

Hamiltonians accepted the challenge and the Grant was packed for the entire week, while the newspapers took occasion to comment upon the appreciation which residents had for real worth.

Comedies Best Bet for Summer Months

Manager of Kenosha Theatres Proves Light Entertainment Gets the Business

CHARLES PACINI, manager of the Majestic and Butterfly theatres of Kenosha, Wis., in the following article makes some statements and relates some incidents which should prove food for thought to every exhibitor in the country where warm weather comes with summer. He has proven to his own satisfaction that in the heated months people do not want anything but light entertainment on their motion picture bill. It is fair to presume that the populace of Kenosha as an average are the same as elsewhere, and anyway, don't people want to be entertained winter or summer and isn't good, clean comedy the height of entertainment. We think so, and so do a lot of people we know who pay their way into the motion picture theatres.

"Exhibitors who are not doing a clean-up business this summer may be keeping loads of money out of their box offices by pursuing the same mistaken policy I did up until about a month ago. Satisfied with the business I had done at both my theatres during the winter, I continued the same policy into the hot weather—that of booking the best pictures I could procure at the prices I could afford to pay. By best I mean the pictures of recognized story value.

"Business slumped. It got so that I figured that I ought to close, but decided to remain open rather than turn out my loyal house employees. The shows commenced to resemble exclusive parties. Finally one night a patron of mine whom I know real well came out just as the second reel had been run. It is full of tense dramatic situations. I asked this patron if he didn't like the picture. He answered:

"It's too darn good. I got to feeling all wrought up about the hard luck of the heroine and it is hard enough to keep from worrying in my office this hot weather without adding some unnecessary disturbance at night. That short comedy was just what I wanted."

"That made me think. I decided that if there were people in town who wanted nothing but comedies I was in a position to satisfy them for one week at least. I had Marshall Neilan's 'Don't Ever Marry' coming in. I gave it the advertising splurge that I felt was far too expensive for the business I had been doing.

Lobby display and other exploitation were resorted to. An awning in front of the theatre was used in combination with plants to create a cool appearance.

The opening night was a good attendance as I had had for some time. The second day, however, things began to look like winter. Before the week was over I was turning them away. People came out of the theatre with tears of laughter mingling with beads of perspiration, but they didn't know they were hot and they spread the word.

"I am booking only the light stuff now, and both the theatres are doing business to compare more than favorably with the rush weeks of last winter. Any other exhibitor can get the same business, for the public is anxious for entertainment without too much emotional exertion.

"In short, it is a safe rule to book the comedy stuff in summer. An audience is more likely to notice the heat during a picture in which the situations are hard to follow than in a comedy. Make 'em laugh in the summer time, make 'em cry in the winter."

Goldberg's Scheme Story on Editorial Page

Exploitation that hits the editorial page is the specialty of Joe Goldberg, advertising manager of the Strand theatre, Louisville, Ky. Of interest to showmen is the manner in which Mr. Goldberg went about getting a three-hundred-word story about "Don't Ever Marry" on the editorial page of the Louisville Times.

Included in the First National press sheet for "Don't Ever Marry" was a feature story describing the ill luck of the Moore brothers at marriage. This story was written with the idea that exhibitors would place it in local newspapers. Rather than send it out as a feature, Mr. Goldberg took the story to the editorial staff of the Times and pointed out the "human interest" and suggested that it be rewritten by one of the Times' star editorial writers. The result was "Moviedom and Divorce," which in part stated:

"When Marshall Nesten was looking about for a star for 'Don't Ever Marry,' he sent the manuscript to Owen, but Mary's former husband thought that he was being made the subject of a pleasantry. He declined with thanks. Then the role was offered to Matt Moore, the lone bachelor in the Moore family, and Matt went to it. He takes the title literally and points to the experience of his brothers as justification for his own refusal to enter into matrimony. He does not believe that marriage is worth while for motion picture folk."

Many times Prudence was shown at Jacksonville, but this shows such double-activeness as the 1st picture.

How "Why Change Your Wife?" Is Exploited in Canada

Some very effective and a trifle unusual exploitation ideas were used on "Why Change Your Wife?" in Toronto, Canada.

A week before the picture was shown at the Regent theatre, large showcards tying up "Why Change Your Wife?" with Gillette Razor, as Moohan uses a Gillette razor in two big scenes in the picture. Eight druggists were interested, four of them on the main street, Yonge Street.

The other tie-up was Mr. Master's Voice, Ltd., the Victor Record agency in Canada. Dealers in all parts of the city proved to be anxious to tie-up with the picture, and used howl card and bill from the picture.

A show of lingerie was also effected with one of the smartest shops in Toronto.

Henry Ullman, one of those picture Rochester salesmen, is scheduled to make a visit to New York this week on private business, traveling on the Century. Although last week he presented his wife with a handsome electric fan about

F. C. Rosbeck, formerly manager of the McCall and Strand theatres, Milwaukee, has returned from a two-month trip to the West Coast and accepted a position as general manager of the Saxe chain of houses in Milwaukee, which puts fifteen theatres under his control.

P. B. Dana, sales manager of the Arrow Film Corporation, was a Chicago visitor last week and while in the Windy City, said Harry Weiss of the Superior Screen Service, the territorial rights for Illinois and Indiana on "Woman's Man" and "Love's Progress," the only independent picture featuring Ora Carey, who has just been signed by De Mille for five years. Mr. Dana also disposed of "Wolves of the Street" and the "Desert Serpent" for the same territory, Frank Zamboni of Unity being the buyer.

Carl Harthall, manager of the Reelart Picture Corporation, Chicago office and Wisconsin territory, reports that the two reel comedy, "Ringside," to be released shortly featuring Leon Trolld, the headliner of vaudeville fame, is meeting with big box office success, exhibitors realizing the importance of Trolld's current picture held back by his great popularity on the stage as a laugh provoker.

Mr. Weiss lays stress on the fact that the new corporations will in no way interfere with his connection with Superior Screen Service, of which he is the owner. He also states that National Film Service, Inc., exchange will have separate quarters from Superior Screen Service.

Chicago and the Mid-West

Covered By L. H. MASON

The flock of rumors that has connected the names of several important exhibitors and producing companies with stories that they were interested in a huge moving picture theatre and hotel to be erected on the old Palmer House site were punctured last week when it was announced that ten year leases have been signed up with stories now occupying space in the hotel, that the lobby is to be rehabilitated and various improvements made in the present building.

The sale of his big property, founded by Irving Park Boulevard, River Street, Western and Claremont Avenues, by Col. William N. Selig marks the passing of what was once the largest moving picture studio in the world and one which played an important part in the pioneer history of the industry. The studios had not been in active use for some time past as Col. Selig has been confining his production activities entirely to other centers. Dragon Motors Co., a newly organized concern, is the purchaser and the consideration is reported to have been $400,000. The property was improved with nine separate buildings for moving picture production work which are said to have cost about $800,000.

Exhibitors are taking more interest in the fall announcements of the big producing companies than ever before in the history of the Chicago territory, and a very large number of contracts already have been signed up, according to exchange managers.

Manager Graumont of Metro in commenting on the eagerness of theatre managers to get lined up for the new pictures said that the day Motion Picture News carrying the Metro announcement was delivered to exhibitors in this territory, two wired inquiries, and the next morning mail brought in a flood of letters.

Action by the city to oust more than forty exchanges doing business in the loop from the quarters they now occupy was prevented last week by the granting of a temporary injunction restraining the city authorities from enforcing the new fire ordinance, which has been a source of worry to the exchange men for months. The suit was brought in the name of Harry Weiss, President of Superior Screen Service, and Judge Foel in granting the injunction did so with the understanding that by November 1st all the exchanges would be prepared to appear in court and furnish evidence that they had arranged for new quarters in accordance with the ordinance.

Manager Lesserman of Universal's Chicago exchange was prevented from leaving on his vacation as scheduled last week by the death of his sister and by illness in his family, but he hopes to get away from Chicago for a real rest in the Michigan woods at an early date.

O. A. Doob, who has been connected with the Cincinnati office of Famous-Players Lasky for some time, has been brought to Chicago by District Manager Wolfberg and will do special publicity work throughout the territory, reporting to the Windy City office Messrs. Roche and Cassidy will continue their publicity and exploitation work and Mr. Doob's arrival gives Paramount a very strong team of publicity getters.

Ralph C. Diggins, who is remembered in Chicago film circles as owner of the Regent Theatre, on the North Side, previous to his going to France as an army aviator, has returned to the Windy City, and now is taking the natives up at $10 the ride in his aero taxi service. He has opened up offices in the Cunard Building.

Harriet Ohming Pepple, former owner of the Starland theatre, at Michigan City, Ind., has opened a moving-picture theatre at Silver Beach, a summer resort near Michigan City.

R. C. Seery, manager of First National's Chicago exchange, was in New York this week on a business trip.

The latest addition to the ranks of the moving picture industry in Chicago is the Alice Clements Picture Company, a $25,000 corporation, which has just come into existence headed by Alice Clements, Chicago policeman, or Mrs. Paul, as she is known in private life. It is said that production will start within a month, and that the police-woman's experience with clairvoyant fakers, blackmailing crooks and the city's lure to young girls will be a basis of the pictures. Miss Clements plans to give lectures in connection with the pictures aimed to warn girls and help them protect themselves from the perils of a great city.

Harry Wellington, for many years with George Klemm, and who has been with New Era since its inception, reports a splendid growth of New Era's non theatrical department and declares he finds this branch of the moving picture industry as interesting as the amusement end.

Watterson R. Rothacker who was scheduled to sail for Europe on July 28th, left Chicago Tuesday for New York to board ship. Probably before he returns he will have secured a site for a laboratory in London, England, which will enable the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company plants at Chicago, Los Angeles, New York and London.

Goldwyn Will Present Popular Stories

A new name made its appearance on the Goldwyn roster this year which indicates another step forward for the photoplay industry in general and for Goldwyn in particular that of Maurice Maeterlinck, probably one of the greatest that has as yet been identified with motion pictures. Maeterlinck is essentially a poet, and poets generally have not taken kindly to the screen of the cinema.

M. Maeterlinck has agreed to write for Goldwyn one play a year for filming purposes; as a matter of fact, he has already completed the first. This was accomplished during the weeks he spent at the Goldwyn studios in Culver City, hiding out about the film business.

Not many months after the signing of the contract with Maeterlinck, negotiations were entered into which resulted in the securing of the services of Booth Tarkington, well known novelist and playwright, noted particularly for his stories about American boys and girls. "Penrod" has achieved a national reputation. But as a first child's nose is sometimes broken upon the arrival of a second, so "Penrod," without losing any of his own likable qualities, will find that "Edgar" is going to usurp much of the attention that has been showered upon him. "Edgar," as everyone knows, is a screen child created by Mr. Tarkington especially for the Goldwyn silver sheet.

By reason of the artistic and financial success of the Edgar comedies, Mr. Tarkington has just entered into a further agreement with Goldwyn to write long feature photoplays. He is now in New York for the purpose of discussing these projected pictures with members of the Goldwyn organization.

Among the novelists and playwrights represented in the coming season's output are George Ade, known as probably the country's greatest humorist, Ben Ames Williams, whose stories have appeared regularly in magazines like "The Saturday Evening Post," Maxwold Foster, another well known magazine writer, Octavus Roy Cohen, known particularly for his dialect stories of the South, Hall Caine, Graeme Mollen and Channing Pollock, playwrights, and

Milton Sills in A Big Role To Play Opposite Mary Miles Minter in Realart Production

MILTON SILLS has been engaged to play the leading male role with Mary Miles Minter in her forthcoming production for Realart, "Sweet Lavender," an adaptation of one of Sir Arthur Wing Pinero's most successful plays.

The picture has been completed and is scheduled for early fall release, having been designated as one of the first productions to be offered under the new Realart Star Franchise. The work of the star and her director, Paul Powell, as well as the cast itself, place the picture in the special featured class, according to reports received from the company's Hollywood studios.

Mr. Sills is considered by some to be one of the most accomplished leading men of the screen today. His long experience on the stage and before the camera has not only built for him a large following but stamped him as an actor of ability and attainment.

On the stage he had leading roles in such productions as "The Gypsy error's Lady," "The Fighting Hope," "The Man Inside," "The Happy Marriage," "Mother," "Diplomacy," "Panthea," and "The Law of the Land." He made his first screen appearance with Clara Kimball Young in "The Deep Purple" and played the leading role in "The Honor System." He was featured with Katherine MacDonald in "The Woman Thou Gavest Me" and recently completed "Dangerous to Men," with Viola Dana.

Some of the other members of the cast are Sylvia Ashton, Theodore Roberts, Jane Heckley.

Price Sells Rights on the Indian Dramas

A. L. Ehrigott, special representative of the C. B. Price Co., Inc., returned this week from a trip to Washington, D. C., where he sold to the Variety Pictures Corporation the territorial rights for that district of the series of fifteen single-reel Indian dramas, starring Mona Darkfeather.

C. L. Chester to Erect Building on Coast

Announcement is made by C. L. Chester of completion of plans for the erection of an administration building on Sunset Boulevard, near Gower Street, in Hollywood, on a plot of ground 100 by 100 feet. The plans for the building provide for the executive offices and staff on the first floor, offices for production staff on the second floor, with the laboratory workers and a private theatre on the third floor. The building will be ready for occupancy, according to present plans, early in September.

This week the fourth of the series of Chester comedies featuring Snookie, the chimpanzee, was completed and shipped to the Educational Film Company for distribution. W. S. Campbell, responsible for previous releases, was in charge of making this film.

Robertson-Cole Issues Special Press Book

Robertson-Cole has just issued, for the exploitation of "Moon Madness," a Haworth Special, which it soon is to release, a most pretentious campaign book. Special attention is given to the exploitation angles of the picture, and to press matter for the daily newspapers.

Goldwyn Will Present Popular Stories

Irvin S. Cobb, humorist and short story writer.

Ben Ames Williams has contributed two stories to this list, "The Man Who Had Everything," in which Jack Pickford will be starred, and a sea story which ran as a serial in "The Saturday Evening Post" under the title of "Black Pawl." The George Ade play, "Just Out of College," also has been selected as a Pickford vehicle. From Octavus Roy Cohen comes an original story, "Six Seconds of Darkness," starring Ivan Moore. Besides these are Irvin Cobb's "Law," Will P. Rose, in which Will Rogers will be starred, "The Highest Bidder," the film version of Maxwold Foster's well-known story, "The Leap," in which Mabel Normand will appear and Hall Caine's "The Christian."

Goldwyn Cast Announced

Madge Kennedy Will Have Fine Support in "The Highest Bidder"

SIMULTANEOUS with the announcement that Goldwyn has begun work on its new eastern production, "The Highest Bidder," starring Madge Kennedy, comes the publication of the cast which has been assembled to support the "best lady of the screen" in her new role. It includes such names as Fred Atwill, who will play opposite Miss Kennedy, Reginald Mason and Vernon Steele, all leading men on Broadway, while Mr. Atwill will be starred in the autumn by David Belasco.

"The highest Bidder" was taken from "The Trap," the story by Maximilian Foster. Goldwyn officials were so much convinced of the intrinsic value of the story that Wallace Worsley, a director at the company's Culver City studios, was especially brought east to produce the picture. Mr. Worsley's latest Goldwyn picture is "The Penalty."

The cast for "The Highest Bidder" includes in addition to those already named Joseph Breen, Reginald Mason, Fred Steele and Ellen Cassidy. Of these, Miss Steele has already played in a Goldwyn picture, "The Truth" starring Madge Kennedy.

A number of scenes for the picture have not been completed at Long Lake, N. Y., where it was the principals and extras which have been in the company to 30 days. Miss Kennedy is enjoying the vacation in the mountains, watching her daughter work, and Miss Mackay, Mr. Atwill's wife, was another vacationist with the company. Joe Sternberg is acting as cameraman. Robert B. MacIntyre, eastern production manager, brought the workers to the location and returned immediately to New York to arrange details for the further production of the picture at the Goldwyn Eastern studios.

Harry Carey, Lillian Lawrence and Ruth Golden, who supports him in his latest Universal production, "Blue Break McCopy."

At Full-Speed by September

Expects Every Educational Branch to Be Doing Big Business Shortly

"SEPTEMBER first will see every department of our organization through the United States and Canada, having our hundred per cent activity," stated E. W. Hammond, vice president and general manager of Educational Film Corporation, after sending a week reviewing reports of the various departments and exchanges during his six week absence in England and France.

"By that time all of our exchanges will be in full operation. The greater portion of them are already in operation, but in some instances there have been physical difficulties, such as cleaning pens for the offices. In a few others we have had to wait until the men we desired to have connected with us were able to give us their full attention. Every report here that each office is bending every effort to be first in the race for full sales activities."

"Our branches cover high classes in New York, Boston, New Haven, Buffalo, Cincinnati, Cleveland, Pittsburgh, Philadelphia, Minneapolis, St. Paul, Detroit, Washington, Portland, Seattle, San Francisco, Los Angeles, San Antonio, St. Louis, Kansas City, Omaha, St. Paul, Minn., La.

Amber, San Francisco and Seattle. That leaves the Dallas and Denver territories yet to be opened. We will soon be out there within a few days, that will provide a cash-in in the principal Canadian cities, St. John, Montreal, Toronto, Winnipeg, Calgary and Vancouver."

"Production is well ahead and we expect to continue it so. Up to the present time we have released but one each of the Chester, Aladdin and Fox film, Comedies and two of the Chester, of which there are three in many of the other branches. Two others of each brand have already been completed, affording time to have the necessary editing and printing done and the supply of paper and exploitation material ready."

"For the present our release plan will be one Chester, one Aladdin and one Comedy, two comedies, one musical and two two-reel Chester Comedies a month. There will be a weekly release in the Chester Comedies series and the Comedies will alternate with the Chester Comedies, thus affording a second weekly release. We have secured a large amount of other material and will probably take one each month."

Ready for Paramount Week

Exhibitors and Branch Managers Pledge Co-operation Is Report

FAMOUS Players-Lasky Corporation states that exhibitors and branch-managers from coast to coast have given assurance of lending strong co-operation during the third annual Paramount Week, Sept. 5 to 11. The following statement has been issued concerning the arrangements already effected for the week of special effort in behalf of the Paramount product.

"Many of the branches have already added performance to their promise. Stimulated by the announcement that the amount must exceed the $1,000,000 record established for Paramount week last year, the managers have started to put the amount in Paramount week supported by assurance of the biggest motion picture advertising campaign ever ordered through the newspaper, magazine and trade publications and encouraged by the promised award of a substantial prize to the winning exchange."

"Immediately on receipt of the news of Paramount week the Washington exchange canvassed that city and Baltimore. Lester Rosenthal, manager who is to pass through his first Paramount week as head of an exchange, having succeeded to the office formerly held by Oscar Morgan now in the home office, got a crew of three together and wired the result to Mr. Lehman.

"Fifty-two exhibitors have been interviewed. Fifty-one have signed up. The other one would really have signed but for the fact that he is closing his theatre for alterations on August 15 and will not be open during Paramount week. But this exhibitor has a solid Paramount program from July 15 on for closing date, with a definite change of house."

"At the Cincinnati exchange the first sold Paramount week has been mentioned. Robert Law, a salesman at the exchange, called an hour after the announcement of Paramount week had been received. Within two days more he had been booked solid for the week."

New Exchange Planned for Upper New York

Ben Fitzer, well known among the exchange men and exhibitors in the vicinity of Syracuse, New York, called at the Arrow offices in New York last week and announced he was entering the independent field and was planning on opening offices in Syracuse, Buffalo, and Albany, N. Y. He has not as yet selected a name for his organization.

Mr. Fitzer said he had already contracted for several feature productions for his territory. Among them was one from the Arrow organization. It is known as the feature September release of Arrow and is titled "The Golden Trail."

The picture is now in making and will be ready for screening to independent buyers in its complete state about August 1.

Levey is Congratulated by Employees

Harry Levey, who has organized the Harry Levey Service Corporation, which is to be managed on the basis of an "industrial democracy," has received a letter from C. A. Kaupon, speaker of the "assembly," congratulating him on the successful organization of the company and assuring him of the cooperation of his employees. Each employee has a voice in the shaping of the policies of the new company and each has a share in the profits that accrue from production.

Publicity for Educational Company Making Arrangements for According Exhibitor Publicity

UNUSUAL arrangements for according the exhibitor publicity, both direct, through the exchanges and in newspapers, have been made by Educational Films Corporation during the past week. Although Educational is handling no release longer than two reels, with the exception of the serial, "The Mystery Mind," every effort is being made to afford the fullest measure of co-operation.

During the past week Pat Dowling, director of publicity for the Christie Film Company, has been in consultation with the advertising and publicity department of Educational and some special exploitation plans have been worked out that are expected to result in bringing many window displays in every city and town where the Christie Comedies are shown. "Film Follies," the attractive Christie publication, will be distributed here after through Educational exchanges.

Ed. Rosenbaum, Jr., who has a long and successful record in the legitimate and motion pictures, has taken charge of the publicity work for C. L. Chester, Inc., and is preparing much matter on the Chester Comedies, Chester O'Nings and Serenades. Similarly, during the past fortnight A. Daniel Bell has taken over the publicity work at the Los Angeles studios for Mermaid Comedies. These include the Lack White and Lloyd Hamilton productions.

Arrangements have been made with Grosset and Dunlap, publishers of the "Torchy" stories in the popular editions, for an extensive bookstore co-operation on lines that have not been tried before. Since there will be a Torchy comedy every month, the bookseller is offered much more reason for co-operation than has been afforded with a single picture because he has a recurring demand for the volumes month after month.

Exploitation will begin very shortly on "The Mystery Mind," the Arthur B. Reeve and John W. Grey serial, produced by Supreme Pictures, Inc.

Levey Service Corp. to be Organized as "Industrial Democracy"

OFFICERS for the Harry Levey Service Corporation, the motion picture company which was organized for the making of industrial and educational motion pictures, have been appointed as follows: Harry Levey, president; Herman A. Mintz, vice president; Isaac A. Hertz, treasurer; and Chester C. Keller, secretary.

Plans have been worked out for the administration of the company on a plan of "industrial democracy," and this coupled with the fact that the Harry Levey Service Corporation is the first motion picture producing company to be organized on a profit-sharing basis, establishes a double record for placing the new producing business on a new footing.

The democratic plan on which the company will work takes the following form: An assembly will be made up of the entire personnel of the organization, this personnel to be divided into various committees whose character will be dependent upon the nature of the work done by their respective members and to be grouped under the headings of Committees on Production, Sales, Production, Distribution, Advertising and Office Staff. A Speaker will be elected by this Assembly.

Each committee elects a chairman and these chairmen in conference together form a Senate.

The Chairman of the four principal Assembly Committees, namely, production, distribution, sales, publicity and distribution, together with the speaker of the assembly, and Mr. Levey, form the cabinet.

Charles Ray Heads Program

Picturization of Cohen's Musical Comedy to be Released August 30

"FORTY-FIVE Minutes From Broadway," the first of Charles Ray's personally produced attractions, has been selected by First National for the inauguration of its 1920-21 season, during which more than sixty special feature films will be released. Not the least among several reasons why this presentation will be regarded as notable is the fact that it marks Mr. Ray's initial appearance under the sponsorship of Arthur S. Kane.

The release of this picture is set for August 30. The first presentation will be made simultaneously in between thirty-five and forty leading theatres in the United States and Canada. Announcement that Mr. Ray had purchased the picture rights to the great George M. Cohan play, which followed his union of forces with Arthur S. Kane, was a signal for spirited competition among exhibitors.

Reports from leading theatres in other large cities indicate that many managers are arranging special presentation and exploitation features in keeping with the importance of the occasion. The idea first suggested by Mr. Kane that the song hits of the Cohan play, such as "So Long, Mary" and "Mary Is a Grand Old Name" should not be neglected, has met with a hearty response, and when Mary is seen on the screen the melodies will be played and, in many instances, sung also.

In addition to the numbers of the cast already announced, Dorothy Devore, selected from a long list of applicants, will appear as a beautiful and appealing Mary; Hazel Howell as a captivating Flora Dean, and May Foster as an appealing Mrs. Purdy. Miss Howell had just finished a picture in support of Mildred Harris Chaplin when she joined Mr. Ray for this production.

As composed by Mr. Cohan the play was well fitted in every detail for adaptation to the screen and Mr. Ray has followed the original version faithfully.

Last Northwood Drama Delivered to Arrow

W. B. Williams, general manager of the Edgar Jones Productions, Inc.; was in New York last week at which time he delivered to the offices of the Arrow Film Corporation the last of his series of pictures known as the Northwood Dramas. The titles of these two productions have been announced as "A Knight of the Pines," and "A Man of Brawn." Edgar Jones and Edna Mae Spurl are co-starred in these two pictures.

While in New York Mr. Williams made known his plans to build a new laboratory for the Maine studios and his New York trip included the purchase of supplies for the laboratory. He announced also that he had a new series of short feature productions under way as well as a big production written by Holman Day.

Educational Reports on Mermaid Comedies

"A Fresh Start," the first of the Mermaid Comedies released by Educational, is playing a two-weeks' engagement at the Euclid theatre, Cleveland, O., where it is being featured. Educational reports that it has received the most flowing reports from every city in which "A Fresh Start" has played.

"Duck Inn," featuring Lloyd Hamilton, will be the second of the series which will be released early in August.

Hodkinson Names Authors

Distributing Organization Has List of Writers for the Screen

THE great authors and dramatists of America and England are sweeping into the tide of success and appealing to the greatest audiences in history, through the medium of the motion picture. The W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, has been one of the largest agencies in bringing about this "screen tide" in the affairs of literary men, men of such standing as Winston Churchill, Zane Grey, Augustus Thomas, Holman Day, Louis Joseph Vance, Emerson Hough and Sir Louis Tracy. It has released the works of more than a dozen authors, and, incidentally, given to the screen some of the best stories that have ever been produced.

Among the authors and dramatists whose novels and plays have been released to the exhibitor through the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation are the following:

Zane Grey, writer of western stories with a combined book circulation running into millions of copies; Augustus Thomas, dean of American playwrights whose play, "The Harvest Moon," was pictured by Theodore C. Bottrich and Arthur F. Beck, with Doris Kenyon in the stellar role; Louis Joseph Vance; Holman Day; Winston Churchill; Emerson Hough; Frank N. Westcott; Gallet Burgess; Stewart Edward White; Sir Louis Tracy and Wyndham Maury.

"Woman in His House" Edited by Stahl

"The Woman in His House," Louis B. Mayer's super-production starring Mildred Harris Chaplin as a First National release, has been cut by John M. Stahl, who directed the filming of his own story.

In this story Mayer and Stahl, as well as those who have been allowed a peep at it, believe they have made the picture of 1920. The picture is said to have satisfied the most critical that Mrs. Chaplin is an artist of the first degree and that her pictures are to be some of the best "money-pullers" of all filmdom.

Judge Plays Favorite Role in Picture

Judge Ben Lindsay, presiding justice of Denver's far-famed Juvenile Court, and nationally known as the "Little Judge," recently left his tribunal for a short trip to the Coast, where, at the request of William Desmond Taylor, director, he appeared in a scene of the forthcoming Realart release, "The Soul of Youth." This picture is built around the theme of the proper handling of youthful delinquents, a subject in which Judge Lindsay has been profoundly interested for many years.

When the Justice visited the Hollywood studio to play his part in the picture, he was astonished to find there an exact reproduction of his own office faithful in every detail, which served as the setting of his appearance in the production.

In describing his admiration for the thorough manner in which all the details of the setting had been carried out, he informed Director Taylor he was of the belief some magic of the black art had been employed to set up the reproduction.

Goldwyn Changes Title of Tarzan Picture

Because of its greater strength and exploitation possibilities Goldwyn Pictures Corporation executives have decided to change the title of Edgar Rice Burroughs' motion picture thriller from "The Return of Tarzan" to "The Revenge of Tarzan." The original title is that of the book, and was used when the film ran four weeks at the Broadway theatre, New York.

Editors Endorse Neilan Film

First National Promises Big Campaign for "Go and Get It"

MARSHALL NEILAN'S latest production, "Go and Get It," based on an incident in the life of a reporter, has won the endorsement of a group of city and managing editors on various San Francisco dailies. J. D. Williams, manager of the Associated First National Pictures, Inc., which will distribute this picture, has received the following telegrams of appreciation, following a private exhibition of "Go and Get It," at which newspaper men and correspondents attending the Democratic National Convention at San Francisco, were present.

"'Go and Get It' is the one great newspaper picture of moviedom, the only faithful portrayal of the workings of a newspaper plant complete from headlines to pressroom. It is a picturization of the inborn spirit of the true newspaperman, 'Go and Get It.' The up-to-the-second themes and the daring manner of portrayal makes it an epic of filmization."—Philip J. Sinnott, Managing Editor, San Francisco News.

"As a newspaperman of fifteen years experience, want to offer congratulations on 'Go and Get It.' There is not one moment not filled with tenseness and Marshall Neilan is to be praised on hands of all newspaper people and public. Do not hesitate to say it is the best picture I ever saw."—Kenneth Medcraft.

"For the first time in my life I have seen a newspaper story that will stand up under the acid test of a newspaperman's scrutiny. 'Go and Get It' certainly will go and get the praise of the critics, the applause of the multitudes and the money into the box-office. Not a bet has been overlooked by Neilan. Congratulations."—Curran Swint, Dramatic and Music Editor, San Francisco Call.

"'Go and Get It' is up to the minute and more film perfect in every detail. Great entertainment."—Elmer Reesner, City Editor, San Francisco News.

Backed up by the statements of well-known correspondents and writers, "Go and Get It" will be brought to exhibitors with a wealth of exploitation and publicity material, says First National in a statement just issued by that organization. The statement follows:

"The bulk of the promotion that has, up to the present time, been centered by newspapers and magazines, the nation over has been inspired by the various stunts and special exhibitions they put over at San Francisco in connection with the Democratic National Convention. The fact that 'Go and Get It' is essentially a newspaper story about newspaper folk served as the basis for interesting more newspapermen than have ever before been personally concerned in the success of a picture.

The fact that such writers as Irvin S. Cobb, Harry Leon Wilson,

A scene from Norma Talmadge's forthcoming feature for First National distribution, "The Branded Woman."

Samuel C. Blythe, Ring Lardner, Miles Locker, Robert E. Lee and Arthur Brisbane, personally appeared in a prologue to the production, prologue being shown to more than 200 well known newspaper correspondents in various parts of the country, caused nation wide flood of publicity regarding the production to be sent broadcast.

"An outline of the stunts pulled by Pete Smith, publicity director for Marshall Neilan, would require an extra-large sized diary. Pete started the ball rolling by lining up almost all the correspondents for a celebration to be held last Sunday, on the ranch of Mayor Rolph of San Francisco. The Mayor was a genial host and was more than glad to have the famous writers as his guests. Marshall Neilan sent a carload of motion picture apparatus and paraphernalia to San Francisco from his Hollywood studios. The taking of a prologue for 'Go and Get It' then followed with the writers as named in the foregoing appearing in the cast.

The famous correspondents and authors had hardly stopped talking about Miss Rolph's celebration and their invitation into the art of picture production when Pete Smith pulled another stunt that sent a score of reporters flocking in the region of the St. Francis Hotel. This was the stunt described last week in having a man dress of to impersonate President Woodrow Wilson walk into the lobby of the St. Francis. The novelty of this stunt caused the various press associations and newspaper syndicates to publish the stunt and through out the world. San Francisco daily newspapers gave columns to the printing of the type matter and photographs telling how an imitation of Woodrow Wilson had almost turned the Convention on its head."

Alice Lake Starts Picture

Metro Actress Given Fine Dual Personality Role in New Feature

ALICE LAKE now becomes the feminine Jekyll-Hyde of motion pictures.

In "Body and Soul," featuring Miss Lake at the head of a notable cast, and under production at Metro's West Coast Studios in Hollywood, Cal., the coming attraction plays a dual role that offers all the possibilities of the famous Hyde and Jekyll character.

But the Alice Lake story will present no struggle between good and evil natures. It ranges in the battle of two personalities, for the ascending personality that grows out of a chain of circumstances that can be pictured only in the language of the camera.

The story opens in the Latin quarter of Paris, where unexpected glimpses of the quaintly decorated studios, the night life in the French capital and the struggle of the soul, from every corner of the world are presented.

Miss Lake appears first in the role of an American art student. It is while working at her studios that she is a victim of an accident that robs her of all memory and leaves her with an entirely new personality. Finding herself in an environment of which she knows nothing, she believes herself a model and takes up the life of the Roumanian artist.

Norman Holmes will head the supporting cast in the new picture. Martha Green, J. Earl McDonald and Carol Gerard also are members of the company. Charles Swickard is directing the picture, filming of which has just begun.

Methodist Episcopal Plan Bigger Work

The recognition of motion pictures as an educational agency in the Church and the commendation of the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church of the work already accomplished by the Centenary Conservation Committee in its department of motion pictures and stereophones was one of the projects of action taken at Des Moines, Iowa.

We commend the work already accomplished by the Centenary Conservation Committee," declared the General Conference, "and request that the committee or its successors in office establish departments and exchange agencies of motion pictures and lantern slides in order that churches, Sunday schools and any kindred societies may be assured of the highest grade service at a minimum expense."

The Centenary Conservation Committee issues from its headquarters, 111 Fifth Avenue, New York, a white list of films for churches and social centers.

Magazine Story Bought for Carmel Meyers

Carmel Meyers, the new Universal star, who has just completed her first picture, "In Folly's Trail," by Helen Gardeshim Martens and Katherine Lisa Robbins, found the story so adaptable to her screen abilities, that Universal has purchased a second story from the same writers. It is "The Gilded Dream," a novella published in Young's Magazine for March, this year.

It has been decided that Rollin Sturgeon, director of "The Breath of the Gods" and many other leading Universal pictures, is to direct "The Gilded Dream."

Lois Wilson Poses for Rainbow Booklet

Lois Wilson, Paramount's leading woman, was chosen to pose for the cover illustration of a booklet published by the Rainbow Division to announce its coming convention at Birmingham, Ala. The illustration shows the smiling actress with extended arms, and below the cut a caption reads: "We Are Ready to Receive You With Open Arms." As Birmingham, Ala., is Miss Wilson's home town her selection is looked upon as a distinct compliment.

Paramount Releases July 11 Douglas MacLean-Doris May Are Co-starred in New Comedy-Drama

DOMESTIC comedy vies with domestic drama for the honors of the Paramount schedule for July 11, when Douglas MacLean and Doris May in "Let's Be Fashionable," a Thomas H. Ince production, and Ethel Clayton in "The Ladder of Lies," are released.

Douglas MacLean and Doris May are said to maintain in "Let's Be Fashionable" the standards of merit which they set in their initial co-starring venture, "Twenty-three and a Half Hours Leave." In this comedy, which was directed by Lloyd Ingraham they have the roles of newlyweds who rent a bungalow in a fashionable summer resort colony and make strenuous efforts to break into the swift society set. Being novices at the game, their attempts result in some humorous complications that persist until the two decide that it is better to be happy than fashionable, so they settle down to a life more in keeping with their pocketbooks.

Tom Forman, one of the screen's best known juvenile leading men, made his debut as a director in the production of the Ethel Clayton picture, "The Ladder of Lies," which is an adaptation by Edith Kennedy of Harold Vickers' story, "The Ladder," which was published in Snappy Stories.

The story treats of the age-old theme of a woman's sacrifice for a man, but it is here given a brand new twist. Here the heroine doesn't love the man for whom she is risking her good name, but is just his good friend, anxious to shield from him the fact that the woman he married is unfaithful. When her own honor is impugned in the eyes of the man she really loves, she remains silent, until the way is unexpectedly opened to her happiness.

Harry Levey Adds Two to New Organization

Mortimer M. Flanders, who is said to have made the first aeroplane films that were ever taken over the City of New York and Willard Van der Veer, have been appointed heads of the photographic Department of the Harry Levey Service Corporation. They will have charge of the photography of the educational and industrial motion pictures in whose production the company is specializing.

A Good Clean Ring- Bout in Warwick Picture

One of the features of Robert Warwick's forthcoming Paramount release, "The Fourteenth Man," is said to be an unusually good fight—and not the sort either where spilled gore, torn clothes and maniac tactics hold the stage, but a clean boxing-bout with gloves, in which Warwick and Norman Selby—otherwise known as "Kid McCoy"—are the principals. Paramount declares that this is a bout, "which even the most particular and well-versed sportsman will declare to be scientifically and perfectly fought." Warwick is said to have been under the training of "Kid McCoy," formerly middleweight champion of the world, for an extended period, "and the combat," declares Famous Players, "is realistic and genuine throughout."

Influx of Players to Den- ver Starts Work

With the arrival in Denver last week of a company of picture players from Los Angeles, activities began in earnest at the Lakeside Studios of Yellowstone Productions, Inc., Denver's new film company. The players who came from the Western metropolis include Miss Carol Holloway, Miss Ruth King, Harry Von Meter, Spotswoode Aitken, and William Lyon West.

Director Charles E. Bartlett announces as his initial offering a picturization of Charles E. Winter's novel, "Ben Warman," which will be known in photoplay-form as "The Vanishing Strain."

Choice of Star Pleases "Bonnie May" Authors

When a novelist claims the star selected to interpret his principal character and that star is pleased with the role and the story, great things may be expected of a film presentation. Exactly that situation exists with respect to "Bonnie May," the production which Bessie Love has just completed for Andrew J. Callaghan Productions, Inc.

Miss Love has expressed herself as charmed by the story and deeply in love with the central figure, from whom it takes its name. And now comes Louis Dodge, the author of the book, describing as a happy inspiration the meeting of Bessie and Bonnie.

Goldwyn Arranges for Foreign Distribution

Arthur Zichin, manager of foreign sales for Goldwyn Distributing Corporation, closed several big deals this week for the marketing of the Goldwyn producer in Europe. In each instance the contracts were signed at a figure far in excess of that received for the Goldwyn pictures in the first and second year groups, which is taken as another indication of the steady improvement in the European market for American productions.

The largest distributing company in Holland has taken the entire third-year output, including the Goldwyn-Bray Pictograph, the Capitol Comedies and the Ford Weekly. The third-year features offer the works of the Eminent Authors and pictures starring players who already have achieved a reputation in Europe, such as Mabel Normand, Madge Kennedy, Tom Moore, Jack Pickford and Pauline Frederick.

Mrs. Chaplin Picture Moves Rothacker

Watterson R. Rothacker, head of the big Rothacker laboratories, Chicago, sees so many good pictures that it takes an extraordinary film to create an indelible impression upon his mind. Yet so powerful is the super-production, "The Woman in His House," a Louis B. Mayer-First National production starring Mildred Harris Chaplin, that Rothacker recently sent a telegram of congratulations to the little blonde star.

John M. Stahl, who directed Mrs. Chaplin in this super-production, is now directing Anita Stewart in a super-special, "Sowing the Wind." Both the Chaplin and Stewart pictures are scheduled for December release.

Minister Commends 'Jes' Call Me Jim'

From every side Goldwyn Pictures Corporation is receiving letters of commendation on Will Rogers' latest picture, "Jes' Call Me Jim," which is generally conceded to present the finest screen work of the Goldwyn comedian. That its appeal is not limited to confirmed patrons of motion pictures is indicated by a letter of praise from Rev. Fred Alban Weil, pastor of the Trinity Methodist church of Denver, Colo. It came entirely unsolicited to Alvah G. Talbot, manager of the American theatre, Denver.

Ralph Graves to Appear with Ina Claire

Ralph Graves, who has played a screen career almost exclusively with David Wark Griffith and Maurice Tourneur, has just signed by Metro to make a picture with Ina Claire in the romantic comedy production "Bells With a Past." The new Metro picture will be produced by Mr. Griffith. In the meantime, Mr. Griffith has the complete leading man of the studio, and one of the most popular, through his screen career. In his last picture, "Three Years Ago," he played a man who spent his childhood in a prison.

Betty Compson Releases Jan. 1

Goldwyn Schedules New Star's First Production

PLANS for the handling of the Betty Compson production, which Goldwyn announced last week would be released as the first production, have presented a point where the date for the issuance of the first production starring Miss Compson has been set for approximately January 1. This means that about the beginning of the new year exhibitors will see a production to show "Prisoners of Love," the original starring vehicle which was chosen by the heroine of "The Miracle Man."

Miss Compson is now at work on her second production and Goldwyn officials feel that if it reaches a par with "Prisoners of Love," that there will be no doubt of the success which may be expected of the entire series of photoplays which the star has contracted to supply Goldwyn during the coming two years. It is understood that these pictures will be issued every few months, following the release of "Prisoners of Love."

This picture received the unusual tribute last week of a voluntary letter of praise from George Loane Tucker, the famous director, who is in no way connected with the Compson productions. Mr. Tucker directed Miss Compson in "The Miracle Man," and his interest in the star develops from her amazing characterization in that picture. The director viewed "Prisoners of Love" as a creative, moving, and original work, an enthusiasm that in a letter of thanks for the privilege of having been allowed to see the photoplay he said that Miss Compson gave in it some of the greatest performances as yet seen on the screen.

This tribute is tinged with the same critical appraisal which others who have seen the picture have accorded and which is undoubtedly expected that "Prisoners of Love" will prove one of the greatest hits of the year as well as a picture of which the actress is proud to be the champion. Arthur Rosson, who directed the picture, and who has directed Richard and the other included Mrs. Compson in it, said that her performance was a revelation on the screen.

Vitagraph Plans New Exchange

JOHAN M. QUINN, general manager of Vitagraph Inc., upon his return last week from Chicago, announced the completion of a big deal which the Vitagraph picture company, splendid, equipped-to-order, up-to-the-minute exchange building in the middle western metropolis at a cost approximately $200,000.

During the past year, and particularly the latter half of it, Vitagraph has been active in extending and improving its chain of branch offices throughout the United States and Canada. It has opened several exchanges in cities in which it was not previously represented; sometimes, as in the case of Chicago, the purchase of the construction of a new exchange building. The five posters for "The Week End" are said to supply the exhibitor with some strong advertising material. The 24-sheet is an effective eye-catcher, showing a pretty girl in bathing costume tentatively listening to the confession of love from the youth kneeling at her feet on the beach. The 3-sheet again portrays romance in its figures of the maid and the man, epitomizing youth, love and beauty. This poster is suitable for cutouts.

The 6-sheet is full of action and reveals more of the comedy. The star in London attire, as she strolls down to the kitchen at one A. M., is shown with "hands up," a bread knife in one hand and the loaf in the other, scared beyond utterance, facing the revolver of a man in pajamas and bath robe. A thief clearly, but her only booty a mid night lunch.

Louise Huff and Helen Weer Cast by Metro

Metro announces that Louise Huff, long a star for Famous Players, has been engaged for the all star cast to appear in the forthcoming picture of "Fine Feathers," adapted by Caroline Rosenthal from Eugene Walter's stage drama.

The cast of "Someone in the House," Metro's all star production of the stage play by Larry Evans, is completed with the signing of Helen Weer for the role of Molly Brant. The picture is being made at Metro's West Coast studios in Hollywood, California.

Harry Fraser in Charge of Levey Production

Harry Levey has appointed Harry Fraser chief of production for the Harry Levey Service Corporation. This announcement was made by Mr. Levey just before he boarded the train for Indianapolis, where a picture is to be filmed for the Cole Motor Car Company, showing the entire "Evolution of Travel."

In his capacity of Chief of Production for the Levey pictures, Mr. Fraser will devote his attention to the writing, acting and directing of the educational and industrial motion pictures.

Mr. Fraser's experience in the theatrical world covers sixteen years in drama and motion pictures. He appeared on the stage in many Broadway productions and with his own act "headlined" in vaudeville on the big time.

Special Fox Press Book Will Aid Exhibitors to Exploit Multiple Reel Sunshine Comedy

BECAUSE of the magnitude and lavishness of "Skirts" the multiple reel Fox Sunshine Comedy Special, William Fox, has decided to publish an elaborate press book to aid exhibitors in the exploitation of this film. This is an important step in the progress of the Fox company and a distinctly new departure in the Sunshine Comedy branch of the organization.

"Skirts" is the first big Sunshine Comedy Special to be produced by Fox Film Corporation, and it is the plan of the producer to introduce the initial venture in this field fitly with the first Sunshine Press Book. To this end the Advertising and Publicity Departments of the firm have concentrated effort to make a press book worthy of the picture in design, decoration and value to the showman.

As has been the Fox custom, there will be included in this book such publicity and exploitation material as has been declared by exhibitors throughout the country to be the most complete and effective.

William Fox, during the past few seasons, has received scores of unsolicited commendations from theatre men on the press sheet material accompanying Fox films, and it is his purpose in supplying the exhibitor with this Sunshine book to adhere strictly to the quality of material which has found such favor in the general feature field.

The book, of sixteen pages and cover, therefore will carry interesting lead stories, short items, and intimate personal articles that editors are always glad to print. It will contain also various novel advertising and exploitation suggestions that will fit the purse of the smaller showmen as well as the largest; and these have been arranged in a way which will enable any exhibitor to comprehend the scheme at a glance, without waste of time.

Directors Selected for New Metro Pictures

Fred Sittenham, the young Metro director, who is now finishing camera work on the production of "Clothes," the screen version of the drama by Avery Hopwood and Channing Pollock, has been selected by Maxwell Karger, Metro's director-general, to direct the forthcoming all-star picture of Eugene Walter's stage play, "Fine Feathers."

Charles Swickard has been signed by Metro to direct "Body and Soul," in which Alice Lake will be featured at the head of a noteworthy cast.

Distribution of Zane Grey Story Undecided

In the July 10th issue of MOTION PICTURE NEWS announcement was made that the latest Zane Grey Picture, "The U. P. Trail," had been placed for distribution with the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation.

Benj. B. Hampton, president of the Zane Grey Pictures, Inc., states that "The U. P. Trail" has not been placed with the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation for distribution. The distribution plans for "The U. P. Trail" have not yet been decided upon. The Zane Grey Pictures, Inc. made a contract with the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation for the distribution covering two Zane Grey pictures only, namely: "Desert Gold" and "Riders of the Dawn." Distributing arrangements for "The U. P. Trail" will be announced shortly.

Mayflower Representative Effects Tie-up

Ace Berry, field exploitation representative for Mayflower Photoplay Corporation, painted the town of Louisville "purple" in exploiting R. A. Walsh's "The Deep Purple" for its engagement at the Alamo theatre. Some of the prominent local merchants were involved in the tie-up which Mr. Berry effected for the picture.

Kaufman Straus Co., which operates Louisville's leading department store, devoted much of its window space to the display of women's purple wearing apparel. In addition stills and an announcement of the picture's appearance at the Alamo were prominently displayed in the window-shows. Paul Shultz's floral shop specialized in the display of purple flowers. Lewis and Hastings, haberdashers, announced "This Is a Deep-Purple Week" and set forth for the admiration of the passing male folk all varieties of purple neck-wear, socks, shirts, etc.

Borzage Leaves to Direct Picture on Coast

Frank Borzage, director of Cosmopolitan Productions' wonderful motion picture masterpiece, "Humoresque," left recently for Los Angeles, where he will begin work shortly on his second Cosmopolitan Production, "The Love Piker," which, like "Humoresque," originally appeared in Cosmopolitan Magazine. Marion Davies, who is now finishing work on "Buried Treasure" in Los Angeles, will be the star of the next Borzage picture.

The Unique Responsible for Fox News Growth

One of the strongest factors contributing to the growth of the Fox News reel, says a statement from the offices of the Fox corporation, is the initiative of the Fox News cameraman in bringing in unique educational topics. As an example, the Fox office cites the series of view of New York's East Side, appearing in reel No. 80. The bartering methods of the jewelry curb are especially emphasized. Stocks and bonds do not enter into the negotiations. One operator holds a lot of diamonds, while another bears a hatred of pawn tickets. Much argument and postulation ensue, and then the deal is closed. Shouting men and a wildly gesturing crowd add an atmosphere of the metropolis's financial district to the scene.

Minter Seen in a New Cumberland Story

Charles Mangue, director of "A Cumberland Romance," starring Mary Miles Minter, attended a private screening of the picture this week in the Realart home offices and declared himself gratified with the results obtained in departing from the beaten paths for pictures dealing with the Mountain Whites of the South.

"It is the simple tale of a little mountain maiden," said Mr. Mangue, "bumming over with youth and the joys of life, whose primitive ideals clash with those of the superficial 'intruders,' as the people of the valleys and cities are known, and who wins happiness through her steadfastness to the beliefs of her fathers."

Pictures Suitable for Churches in Demand

Educational Films Corporation declares that the demand for pictures which are suitable for churches and schools, on which it has specialized for the past five years is increasing rapidly. As evidence of this the sales department of this week pointed to an inquiry which it has received from a Southern organization which desired to obtain suitable pictures for a number of negro institutions. This is taken as evidence that the negro churches are vying with their white neighbors in educating their people with travel, scene, and general educational pictures.

Realartist in "Blackbirds"

Justine Johnstone to Make Debut Under Direction of Jack Dillon

"BLACKBIRDS," the stage play by Harry James Smith, will be Justine Johnstone's first production as a Realart star. "Moonlight and Housework," which was announced as Miss Johnstone's first starring vehicle, will be used by her at a later date. The script and all technical matters for "Blackbirds" has already been prepared, and Miss Johnstone began work this week.

"Blackbirds" was produced by Henry Miller at the Lyceum theatre in January, 1913, where it was played by Laura Hope Crews and B. B. Warner for a long engagement. Mr. Smith was a young American writer whose stage plays have been among the most successful produced in recent years. Among them were "A Tailor Made Man," acted by Grant Mitchell, and "Mrs. Bumpstead Leigh," in which Mrs. Fiske appeared for several years.

Jack Dillon, who will handle the new Realartist, is a veteran director. He comes to Realart directly from acting as Mary Pickford's director in her latest release, "Suds." He has had a varied career on the stage, before the camera, and as a director.

Mr. Dillon's screen experience began when he joined Carlyle Blackwell in organizing Favorite Playacts, Inc. In 1916 he joined Universal and played in Christie comedies. He was with the American Film Company for a time, and after this he was engaged to direct Vogue comedies.

From Vogue Mr. Dillon went to Triangle, where he directed Olive Thomas in six pictures. Then Universal engaged him for nine months, where he directed "The Silk Lined Buglar" and "Wanted a Husband." Recently he wrote and directed the production of "Out of the Frigging Pan," starring Jack Pickford. After this Metro engaged him to direct Bert Lytell in "The Right of Way."

"By Golly" Sets Record on Broadway

What is believed to be a record run for a two-reel subject was terminated last week at the Criterion Theatre, New York, when the Paramount-Mack Sennett comedy, "By Golly" gave way to "Salome vs. Shakespeare," also a Paramount-Mack Sennett subject, at the end of the fourth week of its showing.

Metro Engages Well-Known Writers

Waldemar Young, scenario writer, who adapted "Suds" for Mary Pickford, has been signed by Bayard Veiller, chief of production at Metro's West Coast studios in Hollywood, California, to write a minimum of four scenarios a year for Metro. His first will be "The Double Cure," which will be filmed with an all-star cast in the fall.

Hayden Talbot, playwright, author and former newspaperman, has been permanently engaged as a member of Metro's scenario staff in Hollywood. Mr. Talbot was recently commissioned by Metro to write the screen version of "Body and Soul," by William Hurlburt, in which Alice Lake will appear at the head of an all-star cast.

Russell Story to Have Religious Appeal

With the knowledge, gained by years of experience in the production of motion pictures, that anything touching on the question of sect or religion requires the greatest skill and delicacy in its handling for the screen, William Fox, president of Fox Film Corporation, after careful study has decided to film the newest William Russell vehicle, "The Man Who Dared" as originally conceived by its author, Julius G. Furthman. This picture, completed at the Fox studios in Hollywood, was written especially for Mr. Russell by Furthman, who is a member of the scenario staff of the Fox company.

Goldwyn's Continuity Staff is Busy

Charles Kenyon, well-known author of the stage success, "Kindling," is writing the screen continuity for "Bunty Pulls the Strings," which will be filmed by Goldwyn, with an all-star cast under direction of Reginald Barker, when the latter finishes the Ben Ames Williams' story on which he is now engaged. Elmer Rice, author of the well-known stage success, "On Trial," is preparing the continuity for a filmization of Cyrus Wood's story, "The Scoop," which will serve as a Madge Kennedy vehicle. E. A. Bingham, author of "Art Thou the Man" and other novels and screen plays, is writing the continuity for "The Guile of Women," a Peter Clarke MacFarland story, in which Will Rogers will be starred.

Nicholas Power Co. Expanding Facilities

In addition to his duties as treasurer of the Nicholas Power Company, Mr. Alfred P. Bell has been given full charge of the company's building at 90 Gold street, New York. Extensive alterations are to be made in the building, which is one of the largest in the famous Old Swamp District. It is one of the few buildings on Manhattan Island having an interior courtyard in which a fleet of motor trucks can be loaded and unloaded.

The development of the domestic and foreign business of the Nicholas Power Company has necessitated greatly increased shipping facilities and in a few months alterations will be completed which will relieve the present congestion in the shipping department. In addition to these changes the manufacturing departments will be considerably enlarged, and several additions will be made to the executive offices.

It is an encouraging sign of prosperity in the film industry to find the Nicholas Power Company, which ranks as one of the earliest pioneers in this business, making such extensive plans for increased facilities and taking a twenty year lease on one of the largest manufacturing buildings in New York City.

Mack Sennett to Have New York Offices

The Mack Sennett Comedy Productions have leased offices at Room 302, Capitol Theatre Bldg., as permanent New York Headquarters with E. M. Asher, Mr. Sennett's personal representative in charge. It was found necessary to establish these headquarters due to the tremendous growth of Mr. Sennett's activities.

"Married Life," Mr. Sennett's first National production, is meeting with big success all over the country, and he is now working on his second release for First National, the title of which has not yet been decided upon. This production will be released in September after which Mr. Sennett will immediately start releasing activities with the Associated Producers of which he is Treasurer.

Gaudio Does Excellent Work

Italian Cameraman Photography in "Life's Twist"

"LIFE'S TWIST," which stars Bessie Barriscale, and which is soon to be released by Robertson-Cole, contains what is said to be the best work to date of the famous Italian cameraman, Eugene Gaudio. Gaudio was born and trained in Italy, is a leader in the group of his countrymen who have made a notable place for themselves in the motion picture industry in America.

In "Life's Twist" is seen, according to reports, some of the most remarkable double-exposure work which ever has been done, and in making this so perfect that one cannot discover the line of separation. Gaudio worked overtime, using all the skill which many years in photographic work have given him.

"Life's Twist" portrays the widest extremes of society, shifting from slum to mansion, and from alleys of misery and filth to avenues of pomp and wealth. Gaudio had opportunity to show his ability at all sorts of photography, interior, exterior, in the great open, and in the crowded city districts. Although working steadily at new productions, Gaudio has been interesting himself in the improvement of the camera and motion picture photographic processes.

He has recently patented a camera attachment which will enable him to photograph dual roles, with the two figures of the person entering and exiting together, or moving about at will in the same scene. This traveling mat does away with the division line in double photography, and is said to be an advance in motion picture photography.

Eugene Gaudio, who has for the past year turned the crank of the Robertson-Cole production outfit ing, he is Barriscale, and who is photographed many of the National features, came from a family of Italian artists. His brother, Ralph Gaudio, is now president of the Photographic Association of Italy, and a portrait of the King, painted by Eugene's father, hangs in the art gallery at Milan.

As a lad of nine, Gaudio, entered the photographic field, by way of his brother's studio, where he learned retouching. At the early age of fourteen he became assistant cameraman for the Ambrosia Film Company, one of the first motion picture concerns in Italy. Two years later, through a rather unusual circumstance, he was made a cameraman. A blinding cold was to be photographed, and Gaudio, who remained near the exposure with his camera, was severely hurt by a flying rock, but he produced what was at that time the most remarkable piece of motion picture photography that is still being held as one of the finest cameramen in Italy.

When the war broke out he joined the Twenty-fourth Field Artillery, in Italy, and was soon made first lieutenant. After three years' service he came to America, not being able to speak English, he resorted to his only profession, that of retouching, in the photograph studios of New York. Later he superintended the laboratory work at several of the motion picture studios in the East.

Eugene Gaudio then became cameraman for "Scenes," with which he made "Revolution," "Days of Fate," "An Eye for An Eye," "Out of the Fog," "The Red Inferno," and "The Bird." He has been with Bessie Barriscale on the past year, photographing the Barriscale special features.

Universal Production Opens at Broadway Legitimate House

A display of the roads, which looked to be the Astor on the opening night, and which filled the theatre on the succeeding day, of the "cannibal" showing.

In arranging the Broadway presentation of "Shipwrecked Among Cannibals," Universal established a schedule of popular prices and adopted a continuous performance, shows being run off between 1 p. m. and 11. No attempt was made to detract from the photography by a prologues, stage entry or music other than the orchestra which played during intermissions and accompanying the action of the program.

In other words, "Shipwrecked Among Cannibals" is standing on its own merits as a Broadway attraction. With its shown a Century, comedy, and several subjects from the New Screen Magazine. There the show stops. It is a novelty for Broadway, long accustomed to lots of dressing with its moving pictures, all the way from faded down grand opera to the modern type of illustrated song.

It is reported that Universal may present other pictures at the Astor after "Shipwrecked Among Cannibals" has completed its run, and that they will be presented by the same method, as a straight moving picture show, without trimming. If this is done, once fully, it will be another step towards the inevitable acceptance by Broadway of the moving picture feature on the same basis as any other theatrical presentation.

"Shipwrecked Among Cannibals" also opened in the La Salle theatre, Chicago, July 10, for a run of several weeks. H. M. Berman, general manager of exchanges, went to Chicago to supervise this showing

ANOTHER Broadway theatre stepped into the ranks of moving pictures July 4, when the Astor theatre, Broadway at Forty-fifth street, was thrown open for an indefinite run of "Shipwrecked Among Cannibals," the unusual pictures of actual cannibals taken in New Guinea for Universal by William F. Alder and Edward Laemmle, two Universal cameramen.

The opening was heralded for many days by huge posters over the theatre entrance, showing portraits of the most weird and ferocious of the cannibal men and women. In addition to these, there was a series of four posters announcing the coming attraction in gripping and gruesome phrases. Photostatic of various types of the savages shown in the Universal film were used with the door posters.

The crowd that daily pressed around the theatre entrance to read the novel announcements was in-

To Advertise Church by Way of the Screen

The Rev. James P. Kays, dean of the Grace Cathedral, Seattle, has set on foot a movement with a decidedly unique angle. It purports to advertise the church through the medium of the screen.

"Churches need to get closer to the people," says Dean Kays, and it has occurred to me that there is no surer way of getting close to the people than through the "movies."

Accordingly, interiors and exteriors of the cathedral, motion pictures of the parish attending services, films showing the various ritual phases of the cathedral activities, among its parishes and like material are to be taken and presented on the screen to advertise the work of the church and increase its following.

The Dreyer Film Advertising Company, which makes educational and commercial pictures, is taking charge of the new advertising enterprise.

Realtor First to Apply Budget System

A budget system of finance, similar to those used by the large business corporation, of the country, has been originated and put into successful operation for the first time in the motion picture industry by Dario F. Feriali, Comp. treasurer of Realtor Pictures Corporation.

The system has been in use for more than seven months, and its success has been pronounced. It has not only proved a simpler and more practicable method of finance than the old guess work system, but it has resulted in large savings in production and distribution and placed rentals to exhibitors on a sound, commercial basis.

Vitagraph Building at Dallas Completed

Vitagraph has just taken formal possession of its new exchange building at 1801 3rd Commerce Street, Dallas, Texas, thus making the opening of one of the largest and most completely equipped exchanges in the South and Southwest. The Vitagraph office was formerly housed in the exchange building at 1900 Commerce Street.

The change to the larger and more modern quarters was made necessary by the greatly increased business handled in the area covered by the Dallas branch.

Three Pictures Completed

Tucker, Dwan, and Franklin Have Features Ready for Mayflower

THREE new productions soon to be presented by the Mayflower Photoplay Corporation have been completed and are now undergoing final editing simultaneously at the Brimton Studios. The productions now represented by the trio of new offerings are the George Leane-Tucker company which contributes "Ladies Must Live," the Allan Dwan Organization which is preparing "The Sin of Martha Queed" for release, and the Solvik-A. Franklin Production, scheduled for fall release, through the First National Exhibitors Circuit.

Unmistakable as being mainly financed by Producer Tucker in connection with the editing of "Ladies Must Live," his second independent production to be presented by Mayflower for the past two weeks, Tucker has been working behind closed doors in the editing room of the Brimton plant to which access has been granted none but important attaches of the Tucker staff.

The veil of mystery with which the producer has surrounded "Ladies Must Live," is due partly to the important technical innovations he has incorporated in the production and partly to an avowed policy of withholding advance reports until the final completion of the special.

"The Sin of Martha Queed," which Allan Dwan is preparing for publication as the sixth of his series of independent productions is based on an original story written by himself. The story is described as powerful in conception, presenting a remarkable character study in which is pictured the psychological influences wielded on a man by his associations.

Miss Cooper, who plays the leading role in R. A. Walsh's new production to be presented by Mayflower

The cast of the Dwan feature consists of a galaxy of motion picture favorites including Mary Thurman, Niles Welch, Frank Campeau, Joseph Dowling, George Hackett, and Eugene Lester. "The Sin of Martha Queed" is listed to follow Dwan's "The Scoffer" on First National's schedule.

Griffith Film Has Had Four Christenings

For every $100,000 that it has cost, D. W. Griffith's next United Artists picture has received a new name, and now it is to be presented to the public as "The Love Flower."

First, it was called "Black Beach," the original name under which the story by Paul Stock appeared in Collier's Weekly. As it was to have been Mr. Griffith's third picture for First National, that organization changed its title to "The Gamest Girl." Then Mr. Griffith rebought it, just as he did "Broken Blossoms" from Famous Players-Lasky and it was decided to call it "The Girl Who Dared." As this name did not seem to fit the gentle character of the principal feminine character, the more appropriate title of "The Love Flower" finally was decided on.

La Carmen Productions Start July 15th

The La Carmen Productions announce the completion of their business organization in Los Angeles, and they are now perfecting plans for starting work about July 15th on the first of a series of six five-reel dramatic pictures. The organization of the company has been perfected under the management of Claude Barber, who will also direct the series of productions. Mr. Barber is at present engaged in selecting the cast for the first picture and expects to announce the studio location soon.

Dolores Lopez is under contract to furnish six stories for the La Carmen Productions during the coming year, the first two of which have been completed and approved for production. Antonio Stanich, the operatic star, has been engaged as leading man for the first picture, and the balance of the cast will be announced shortly.

New Series of Comedies

Jimmy Aubrey Completes First Laugh Maker Under New Contract

OWING to the success of the Jimmy Aubrey comedies and the increasing popularity of the Vitagraph star, his productions will hereafter be known as the Jimmy Aubrey Comedies, and as such he has just become a new series. The announcement made by Albert F. Smith, president of Vitagraph, is direct evidence that with the starting of a new contract with the comedian Jess Robbins has been engaged to direct the pictures and the first of the series, "The Dictator," already has been completed.

Jimmy Aubrey was born in England and came through the harsh school of the stage that permits no person to star until years of experience and skill prove him worthy. For many years he was popular in London and he then came to America to appear in the Ziegfeld Follies.

Director Robbins and the comedy star have surrounded themselves with an excellent stock company. Oliver N. "Babe" Hardy, has just secured a new contract as Jimmy's "heavy" man. Evelyn Nelson, Kathleen Myers and Jack Lloyd also appear in all his comedies. Clarence McDermott is assistant director and Irving Rice is in charge of the camera staff.

Leah Baird's Picture Bringing Results

As was predicted by the W. W. Haskinson Corporation, "Cynthia-of-the-Minute," the Gibraltar production in which Leah Baird is starred, is receiving a great reception all over the country. This famous Joseph Vance story, which revolves around a gang of sea brigands who attempt to scuttle a ship in which the heroine has become interested and her spoiling of their plans, provides the setting for one of the best action pictures given to the screen in some time.

Fifteen Goldwyn Releases

Variety Marks Season's Schedule;
Prints in All Exchanges July 15

GOLDWYN states that its first group of fifteen pictures for the new season presents a striking array with a wealth of variety including dramas, rapid-action stories, comedies, romances and farces. Each picture, says Goldwyn, has been directed by a man whose previous work has demonstrated his fitness for translating that particular kind of a story from the manuscript to the screen.

"Heading the list," continues the Goldwyn statement, "are two productions which the Goldwyn staff believe will in intensity and emotional power surpass anything previously released by the organization. Madame X, one of the world famous French plays of the present century, shows Pauline Frederick at the very zenith of her powers as an emotional actress. This production represents the top-notch work of its director, Frank Lloyd, who has moulded the cast into the very image of truth.

"The Penalty," by Gouverneur Morris, directed by Wallace Worsley, is a powerful drama of San Francisco's underworld and its tyrannical ruler, Blizzard, as uncanny a creation as ever sprang from the brain of man. Lon Chaney gives a remarkable characterization of Blizzard.

"At the opposite poles of entertainment stand Mary Roberts Rinehart's comedy of 'prep' school days, "It's a Great Life," adapted from her story, "Empire Builders," directed by E. Mason Hopper, and the romantic comedy in which Madge Kennedy is starred, "The Girl with the Jazz Heart." Lawrence C. Window directed the picture.

"A highly diverting comedy drama by Ben Ames Williams called 'The Man Who Had Everything,' starring Jack Pickford, directed by Alfred E. Green, is followed by a picturization of one of the fastest and funniest farces of the decade, 'Officer 666,' by Augustin McHugh and Winchell Smith, with Tom Moore in the principal role. Harry Beaumont directed it.

The other forthcoming releases on the Goldwyn schedule include "The Branding Iron," produced by Reginald Barker, with an all-star cast; "What Happened to Rosa," which Mabel Norman is starred; Basil King's original story for the screen, "Earthbound," the romantic character comedy; "Milestones," by Arnold Bennett and Edward Knoblock; "The North Wind's Balance," a red-blooded melodrama of the North, by Rex Beach, and "Honest Hutch," which stars Will Rogers.

"Wonder Man" is Scoring Reports of Carpentier Picture Indicate Lack of Summer Dearth

REPORTS of the progress of "The Wonder Man," starring Georges Carpentier, which are coming in to the executive offices of Robertson-Cole, which released the picture, are said to disapprove the usual theory that summer is a dull time for the showing of a production.

These statements of the business done in various parts of the country far exceed the estimates which were made of what the picture would do, and seem to indicate that dullness in the summer is more a matter of not having a compelling attraction, than of being a normal condition.

The prediction which was made by Robertson-Cole to the effect that Carpentier would be a surpassing attraction has proved true, for exhibitors from many states report they find in their audiences a very high percentage of casual spectators; that is to say, persons who do not usually attend motion picture theatres.

The millions of men who were in uniform, and who knew the Frenchman as a soldier of France are coming, and bringing their sweethearts, wives, parents, and friends. Those interested in the man merely from a sporting and athletic standpoint are appearing in large numbers. Then there is another element of the older folks who are attracted by the youth and daring of the lad from the land of Lafayette and who have in their hearts the traditional admiration of Americans for the land which helped the struggling colonies.

Fox Director Warns Producer Who Aims to "Commercialize Christ"

DIRECTOR Howard M. Mitchell, of the William Fox organization, who staged productions, starring Madeline Travers, Peggy Hyland and Shirley Mason, has just completed the first picture with his new star, Eileen Percy.

The title of the picture, "The Husband Hunter," is from the story, "Myra Meets His Family," and its studio review labels it another Mitchell success. Mr. Mitchell's next picture, also starring Miss Percy is from Edgar Franklin's story, "Beware of the Bride" which is said to fit the star most appropriately.

Director Mitchell, known on the Fox lot and among his friends reported to be a student of metaphysics, takes a fall out of those producers who would commercialize the spirit of Christ in pictures:

"It can't be done and that sort of thing is just as dangerous as playing with matches in a powder mill. If the motive is to bring a helpful message to mankind leaving the financial returns as incidental to the main purpose success may be achieved providing the story is convincing and the production in the hands of those who know how to apply the practice of the presence of God to every day affairs. Spiritual things cannot be trifled with. You can't put up Divine Love in packages and sell it. It isn't a commercial commodity and the producer who, having in mind profits alone, says; 'I'm going to make a Christian Science picture,' is in for a peculiar experience.

"The Miracle Man" was not written as a Christian Science story, nor was it produced as a Christian Science picture. It just happened, but it did not over the lesson of faith; and big as its boxoffice returns have been the use value of the picture is ten-fold greater.

"I think the vision of producers has been too narrow. Why, even a soap manufacturer seeks first to put merit into his product before he begins its manufacture—merit first—money follows. What we need is more of the Christ spirit in pictures without preaching. Jesus did not commercialize his spiritual powers; neither may any man, lest his presumption bring him to disaster."

"Spirit of Gold" to Be Released in July

"The Spirit of Good," a William Fox production to be released before the close of July with Madeline Travers as the star is said to be a refreshing and delightful departure from the so-called "sex" story and the lurid melodrama.

The play follows lines suggestive at times of the noted success, "The Miracle Man," and is one which every father will be glad to have his wife and daughter see.

Stars Spend Fourth of July With American Doughboys in Coblenz

WHILE two United States infantry bands played the Star Spangled Banner and the men under the command of General Allen of the American Army of Occupation stood at attention here today, Mary Pickford and Douglas Fairbanks sang the National Anthem as thousands of German citizens watched with heads uncovered, as the beginning of a Fourth of July celebration which was quite the opposite of things here two years ago.

There has never been a demonstration anything like that given to Mr. and Mrs. Fairbanks, unless it was when the news of the signing of the Armistice was announced. When the word was flashed but a few hours previous to their arrival here, that Douglas Fairbanks and Mary Pickford would really be here, throngs of people crowded the streets along the main thoroughfare leading from the railway depot and the crowds anxiously awaited the appearance of the two notables. As Miss Pickford and her athletic husband loomed up in a large touring car instead of coming by rail, there was a rush from every direction and even the police and military authorities were swept aside.

Later at the headquarters of General Allen, where a division of American soldiers are stationed, there was another demonstration and for an hour it was impossible to move an inch with the Fairbanks automobile.

According to their plans Mr. and Mrs. Fairbanks are to sail for the United States about the twentieth of the month, both stating that they had arranged to start another production for the United Artists Corporation at their studio in Los Angeles, California, before the close of July.

Brunet Announces Pathe Policy : : : :

A STRENGTHENING of co-operation with exhibitors, a steady improvement of service and a continuance of the Pathe policy of courtesy, square dealing and honesty of purpose in all business relations, are the important features of Pathe policy as outlined in a statement just issued by Paul Brunet, vice-president and general manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc. No startling changes in policy, no new booking schemes and devices are mentioned, but it greatly emphasizes that the Pathe organization believes that its course in the past has been so thoroughly endorsed by the patronage of exhibitors that it can remain with success as the guide for the future.

As made clear in the recent controversy over producer-owned theatres, Pathe will remain strictly in its chosen field as the distributor of independent productions to all exhibitors. It is the belief of Mr. Brunet that the American picture-exhibitor is not looking for discussions or schemes, but for high-class features, serials, comedies and short subjects, and every effort will be made to give them pictures of the highest type. Sincere action in this respect will speak louder than volumes of megaphone discussion and promises.

"The policy of the house of Pathe always has and always will be a policy formulated with the interest of the exhibitor as the first consideration," reads Mr. Brunet's statement. "We have found by long experience that the success of the picture theatre owner and his prosperity means the strengthening and the success and prosperity of our organization. We have specialized in serving this purpose and we have achieved an unquestioned place in the esteem of exhibitors by so doing. This recognized fact indicates the logic which dictates that we must continue to work for the exhibitor, and that naturally we must rally to his aid at all times.

"Pathe will aid exhibitors in their independent efforts to the extent of giving them product which will enable them to stand off all opposition—to make their programs the most attractive to lovers of the silent drama.

"During the coming season Pathe will offer the works of nearly a dozen of the masters of motion picture technique and production. These contributions to the Pathe product will include features, short subjects and serials. In each of these divisions, exhibitors can confidently expect offerings of assured box-office merit, for the Pathe standard is being constantly raised and any picture meeting its requirements must be far above the average.

"The addition to our list of feature producers of the Federal Photoplays company of California and Kellor, Brunton is evidence of Pathe's promise to exhibitors that they shall have only the best on the market. These production units make a noteworthy addition to those already on the Pathe schedule, including Edgar Lewis, Jesse D. Hampton, J. Stuart Blackton and James Perret.

The so-called ordinary picture of the past few years is about obsolete. Standards have been steadily raised in the production of motion pictures and today satisfactory pictures must be of careful selection, clean and genuinely strong physical construction. Pictures which are made are readily detected and are not wanted. Pathe has long sensed the demand of the public for pictures of superior merit. No picture, not of true 'pep' quality, will be released. Much more will be spent of course upon each production.

"All this means simply that we shall concentrate toward the single purpose of not only maintaining the reputation we have earned for service to exhibitors, but that we shall reach out for added recognition by giving an even greater and more extensive service. From top to bottom our sales force are under instruction to be ever guided by the thought that we must build good will with the exhibitor on every picture, that we are building for the future and not merely working for the profits of the day.

Realizing the necessity for being ever closer to the needs of exhibitors and to helping them in the conservation of their time, the Pathe Exchange system is being extended. It is our purpose to have an exchange of sub-office convenient to every exhibitor. In fact, we want our office to be a little closer and a little more convenient than any other office. As it is located in our advertised policy announcement, efficiency, thoroughness, promptness and square dealing are expected of the Pathe Exchange force. It follows naturally, since this is true that it must serve the exhibitors' interest well.

"In closing, I would like to thank the American exhibitors for their cordial co-operation with the Pathe Exchange, and I would like to assure them that I am convinced that all signs point to a prosperous and happy year for all the exhibitors. We will do our part toward building and the optimism in the outlook and we know the exhibitors can be depended upon to do their part."

Line-Up of Producers for Pathe : : : :

INSTEAD of devoting its energy during the forthcoming season to the introduction of "startling policy changes" or other schemes which, to exhibitors, have become frequent occurrences, Pathe Exchange, Incorporated, will endeavor to furnish its patrons with the finest feature subjects money will buy.

This statement is made by Paul Brunet, vice-president and general manager of Pathe Exchange, Incorporated, in announcing the preliminary details of his plans for the coming year.

Mr. Brunet lays stress upon the fact that exhibitors are interested in "pictures with box office value, not policies"—and that is what he will endeavor to supply them with.

For the coming year, Mr. Brunet has brought together the most successful assemblage of stars, directors and producers in the annals of Pathe. All have reputations which rank with the foremost in their chosen fields of endeavor. With only one or two exceptions, all are known to the thousands of exhibitors who have done business with Pathe during the past year.

A notable addition to the producers of Pathe features will be the Federal Photoplays of California, an organization which, during the past twelve months, has given to exhibitors some of the biggest money-getters of the year. It will furnish for Pathe distribution a series of four special productions of unusual power, to be produced from widely read novels. The complete details of this arrangement, which was made by Mr. Brunet only a short time ago are not ready for publication.

but will be announced within a short time.

Robert Brunton, the California producer, who gave to Pathe one of its greatest serials, "Daredevil Jack," starring Jack Dempsey, is another addition to the feature makers. Mr. Brunton is now producing for Pathe a big special, "The Devil to Pay," in which will appear a cast of well-known players.

It is probable that other Brunton features will follow "The Devil to Pay."

Edgar Lewis, who during the past year gave to Pathe two big box-office winners in "Other Men's Shoes" and "Sherry," both adapted from widely read novels, continues his affiliations with the house of the Golden Rooster. He has contracted to produce four or five more specials, to follow "Lahoma" which will be released early in the fall.

Jesse D. Hampton, one of the most successful of American motion picture producers, will have two stars listed among the Pathe attractions for the year. Blanche Sweet, whose remarkable "comeback" in less than a year is largely due to the wonderful productions she has been given by Mr. Hampton, will continue in the realm of fame she has regained since Pathe took over her pictures.

In addition, Mr. Hampton has contracted with Pathe for a series of pictures starring H. B. Warner, increasingly celebrated stage and screen star whose last Pathe picture was "One Hour Before Dawn," which had a pre-release showing at the Capitol Theatre, New York.

J. Stuart Blackton whose "Peepers By 'Man and His Woman'" and other features were big money winners under Pathe distribution, will personally direct six more releases for Pathe through the same channels. Mr. Blackton's success has grown with every new release, as numerous among his biggest hits are "My Husband's Other Wife," "Responsible to Brass," and "The Blood Barrier," in addition to "Peepers By 'Man and His Woman'."

Leonore Perret, internationally famed director and producer, who has given exhibitors some of their best attractions in recent years, will make at least one drama for Pathe release. He has just returned from Europe where he went to film scenes for "The Empire of Diamonds," which he adapted from the novel by Valentine Mandelstam. "Mr. Perret took part of the pictures in London, Paris, New La Havre, Monte Carlo and Paris and is now finishing the production in New York."

In addition to these great attractions, Pathe will distribute the product of Associated Exhibitors, the first of which will be Geraldine Farrar in a version of "The Riddle of the Sphinx." Edward José is now directing this play, which on the stage served as a wonderful vehicle for Bertha Kalich for nearly two years. The production is one of the earliest ever made in pictures, but will be an exceptional improvement for exhibitors by use of its dramatic stage, the value of Mrs. Farrar as a star and the unusual beauty of production.

The American Film Company and W. W. Hodlins is continue their releasing arrangement with Pathe.

During the season of 1919-1920, Pathe gave to the world several of the largest production costs seen on the screen. But during the coming season it hopes to surpass even these efforts. Always keeping abreast in touch with the trend of modern demands, Pathe long ago realized that the day of the so-called "program" picture was over. The public wants only big pictures—and in "big," Pathe means production with a powerful appeal from the standpoint of players, story, direction and production. From direction cannot be pulled off on the public any more than can a poor story or a cheap production.

Serial Program for Coming Year : : : :

WITH a record of thirty successful serials to its credit, Pathe's plans for the coming year with regard to the episode form of photoplay must necessarily be elaborate in design and of huge proportions, if the serial program is to achieve that greatness to which the famous House of Serials has pledged itself.

In order to accomplish this ambitious aim, Pathe will release a total of eight serial pictures over the designated period. The two-at-a-time policy, inaugurated in the Fall of 1919, will be maintained and weekly one episode each of two big serial offerings will be released.

The names of seven players, all of proven ability and popularity as serial stars, are to play an important part in the campaign laid out by Pathe to bring it greater serial achievement than ever before in its history, which covers a period of nearly seven years. These stars are familiar to exhibitors and public alike as artists whose records show them valuable box office attractions. They are: Ruth Roland, June Caprice, Juanita Hansen, Marguerite Courtot, George B. Seitz, Charles Hutchison, Warner Oland.

The year of forthcoming big serials will commence with the release on August 15th of "Pirate Gold," a ten episode picture starring George B. Seitz with Marguerite Courtot. It will mark the second serial produced, directed and starred in by Mr. Seitz.

Both as an artistic production and a drawing card, "Pirate Gold" is considered by the Pathe officials a picture well deserving the distinction of inaugurating a year which will bring forth two serials starring Ruth Roland; one starring Juanita Hansen, with Warner Oland, and one with these stars in a cast that will also contain Marguerite Courtot; and the promising Pathe discovery, Lucille Lennox; two in which George B. Seitz will star with Marguerite Courtot; one with Seitz and June Caprice; and two starring Charles Hutchison.

"Ruth of the Rockies" will be the first in this group starring Ruth Roland. The second with this favorite is to be produced at the Robert Brunton Studios under the supervision of Robert Brunton. The first Pathe serial produced there was "Daredevil Jack," in which Jack Dempsey starred. The picture was so excellently staged that Paul Brunet, Vice President and General Manager of Pathe, made arrangements to have the Charles Hutchison starring vehicles filmed there and determined him to give Ruth Roland the advantage of an equally fine setting for her second release of the coming year.

The two pictures with Juanita Hansen are to be products of the George B. Seitz studio, both directed by Bertram Millhauser. "The Phantom Poe," starring Juanita Hansen, which will present Warner Oland in a heavy role, was completed in the latter part of June and work has already commenced on the second picture, an original story by James Shelly Hamilton, which has tentatively been titled "Roaring Oaks." In this play important roles are to be played by Marguerite Courtot and Lucille Lennox.

Charles Hutchison began work at the Brunton studio under his new contract with Pathe on April 19th. His vehicle is an original scenario by Jack Cunningham, the author of several recent successes. W. S. Van Dyke, who directed "Daredevil Jack," is directing the picture and rapid progress is reported by Mr. Brunton.

The variety in style and type of plays which Pathe has so successfully endeavored to incorporate in the serial program, is greatly aided by the acquisition of Hutchison. He is the leading exponent of daredevil stunt, as illustrated by "The Great Gamble," and his pictures are bound to add greatly to the completeness of the Pathe serial product.

The George B. Seitz pictures are comparative novelties. In "Bound and Gagged" Mr. Seitz courageously introduced a new type of the hero—a young American, typically energetic and intrepid, whose utterly care-free attitude of mind and agility of body brought him face to face with situations he had no previous experience with which caused the audience to cheer and applaud all the while, because of the serial play. The comparison of the situation and its dramatization and to use a colloquialism, he got away with it in the finest style. For "Bound and Gagged" met with sensational success.

After "Pirate Gold" Mr. Seitz will appear in "Velvet Fingers," a fifteen episode play which he completed only a short while before his departure for Spain to film a Pathe feature. "Velvet Fingers" is a "crook" play aimed on a far more elaborate plan than Seitz has previously attempted.

In "Ruth of the Rockies" Ruth Roland returns to the West for the setting for her play. At the time it was announced that Miss Roland's next serial would be a Western story, Pathe was congratulated by many veteran serial exhibitors for the wisdom of preventing her in such a vehicle, for the past experience proved her followers preferred to see her in pictures of the great outdoors. "Ruth of the Rockies" is an adaptation of "Broadway Bab," which appeared in All Story Magazine and was written by Johnston McCully.

Early in 1920 in a statement regarding the new serial policy, Mr. Brunet predicted greater improvement in serials, from the standpoint of acting, stories and production, than in any one previous year. With the announcement of the schedule for the next year, it now becomes evident that Mr. Brunet has had the courage to direct the course of Pathe on the conclusions inspiring that prediction. It is a pace-making schedule to which the great distributing organization has committed itself for the next year and one that is certain to bring the serial into greater importance to the entire industry than ever in the past.

The impressive scale on which Pathe will operate in this field takes on greater significance when consideration is given the amount of experience the organization has collected during its long and efficient specialization in the distribution of serials. The fulfillment of these plans has necessitated a general increase in personnel and equipment throughout the Pathe organization. The new program the pictures have been promptly improved to meet the demand for greater and more consistently produced and filmed better stories than was ever at attempted heretofore.

During the past year Pathe serials have shown an appreciable improvement in quality and a large increase in the extent of their distribution. They have steadily gained in the direction of longer runs, and presentations in the cities with reputations for present means only the largest attractions. Artistically the serial has kept well abreast of the feature play. It is only necessary to recall some of the pictures of two years ago and compare them with recent Pathe offerings to appreciate the extent to which the serial has advanced. More elaborate settings are constantly noted and greater care for technical details is evidenced in the later works of the leading serial directors.

The art and technical directors of serials have introduced notable works of interior decoration. And pictorial effects are utilized to the fullest extent in aiding the action of the episode plays. Formerly the thrill was all the producer and director seemed interested in but an increasingly exacting public has brought about a change. The serial picture is held on a high regard by a goodly portion of the multitudes that patronize the photoplay, who appear to recognize no distinction between the "special feature" and the "serial" and as much "art" is demanded in one as the other.

Since the beginning of the motion picture industry the producers and distributors have shown a ready willingness to improve their product to keep pace with the improved taste of the public and the latest illustration of the progressive trend of the motion picture is the exceptional artistic advance made by the serial production, which in view of Pathe's plans for the coming year appear to be but a starting point for the great thing that are to be accomplished in the future.

Pathe Discusses Exhibitor-Service : : : :

IN a statement just issued from its home office, Pathe Exchange, Inc., emphasizes the high character of exhibitor-service which the company has rendered in the activities of its exchange forces and sales organization. The statement follows:

"Throughout the motion-picture industry the Pathe Exchange has come to mean perfect motion-picture service as far as the science of picture distribution has been developed. With Elmer R. Pearson as Director of Exchanges and some of the best known film men in the country in charge of the various branch offices, the complete personnel of the organization represents the development of several years of the consistent Pathe policy of building for permanency and progress.

"From the inception of the Pathe organization in the United States under the inspiration of Charles Pathe and its growth under the personal direction of Paul Brunet, vice-president and general manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc., the necessity for genuine co-operation and effective service has been so thoroughly recognized in the minds of every one in the organization that today it is the slogan of every one in the exchange system.

"Pathe service begins with the production and not with the sale of the picture. In every phase of production—features, serials and short subjects—the services and experts are utilized at the beginning and the sales effort is not commenced until the Pathe organization has that the product can be offered to the industry as a credit to the name of Pathe.

"From the moment it is decided to accept the product for Pathe distribution, the wheels of the great system of selling direct to the public are set in motion. For several years in the leading magazines and newspapers of the country Pathe has been conducting an advertising campaign designed to popularize their product and exhibitor. An Inspection Department made up of experts, cameramen and exhibitors, on every production, and the central bank of the name of the Product Department, directed toward the work of selling the picture direct. In connection with the publicity work several prominent writers are employed and their stories of Pathe sales and production are widely distributed by the leading newspaper syndicates.

"Attracted about this great force, which reaches in its appeal every theatre in the United States, is the actual sales organization, composed of men whose personal integrity has been established by long years of service with the exhibitors of the United States. Every man in the Pathe selling organization is a picked man and the prime requirement in his selection is that he shall have firmly established himself in the minds of exhibitors as a man of his word and a man who can uphold the integrity of Pathe service. The backbone of the Pathe selling organization lies in the establishment of permanent friends who will respect the clean business methods of the house of Pathe.

Pathe's Short-Subject Schedule : : : :

THE leadership of the Pathe Exchange, Inc., in the distribution of short subjects is now generally recognized. This leadership has been accentuated during the past year by the achievements of the Pathe News, by the success of the Harold Lloyd comedies, by the growing popularity of the Pathe Review, by the distinctive public approval of "Topics of the Day," and by the unusual demand for the one-reel Rolin comedies. In recent weeks the new "Young Buffalo" series of two-reel Westerns has been added to the list and is recognized already as one of the most meritorious subjects of its kind.

After three years of one-reel comedies, Harold Lloyd branched out in a series of six two-reel special productions in the last year and has reached a place of leadership among the greatest box-office stars. His latest comedy, "High and Dizzy," is said to surpass all previous achievements. He will make two more comedies after "High and Dizzy" for Pathe, and will then be free to enter into his Associated Exhibitors contract, which was recently signed.

The genuine merit of the Lloyd comedies is perhaps most strikingly emphasized in the consummation of his recent contract, which involves over $1,500,000 a year, it is stated by Pathe. This contract was executed after a careful canvass of leading exhibitors, and on their assurance that he was regarded by them as the most attractive proposition to exhibitors in the field today.

Lloyd started his comedy success with Hal I. Roach, who has been producing comedies for Pathe for the past six years, and, while under Roach's direction, he has appeared in over 300 one-reel comedies. Mr. Roach is also responsible for the Rolin comedies featuring "Snub" Pollard and the famous little "darker" Pickens. Sammy Hays plans for the future embrace a wide scope in the field of comedy and assure the Pathe clientele of a remarkable series of one-reel productions in addition to the famous Harold Lloyd comedies.

The tremendous popularity of all these comedy features can be appreciated when it is understood that the Harold Lloyd new comedies are being featured in hundreds of theatres and are booked in more than 6,000 houses in the United States. He is also in big demand in the foreign market. The Rolin one-reel comedies are appearing regularly each week in approximately 5,000 houses.

Backed by the prestige of being the first news-reel, the Pathe News was an institution in thousands of theatres at the beginning of last year, and, owing to the many exclusive features since that time, it has made tremendous gains. Hardly a week has passed without one of the big news features of the world being exclusively featured in the Pathe News. The list of exclusive achievements reads as follows: The first of current history. The first of the underworld. The first of the topical reel. The first of the first of the 5,000 million picture machine.

Pathe has just announced that his "Movie" Travellers, which have been one of the most successful features of the program at the Capital Theatre, New York City, will be incorporated in the Pathe Review. The add-on feature feature to the already imposing list. Each day has been the green magazine. In the course of the past year Pathe's short subjects, photographically, have been produced in a reel of brilliant entertainment.

"Topics of the Day" became famous to theatre-goers with almost the very first release under Pathe distribution. The prominent photographs which form the body of this remarkable reel are selected from the newspapers and magazines of the world by the editor of the Pathe News. Day and night they have captured for American intellect a high place in the world.

As an indication of the popularity of the reel it can be stated that in the recent contest for school teachers in which a prize was offered for the best reason each week by a school teacher for increasing the pay of teachers, 181,283 topics were entered in the contest. When it is realized that only school teachers were allowed to enter this contest, it will be appreciated that millions of people who are not school teachers must have viewed and appreciated "Topics of the Day" at that time.

In keeping with a policy of strictly watching the demands of exhibitors and responding to that demand, Pathe recently effected the distribution of a series of two-reel Westerns. These subjects will recognize the fact that the public has been looking for great one-reel pictures with a western touch and they represent pictures in which "Young Buffalo" is featured as moving that does not. All indication point to the success of some one of the most successful of the short subjects.

Mr. Sidney Drew comedy fever did not with great success when ever shown. They are comedies unique in their smoothness and in their adherence to the routine of life and are distinguished for fine humor. They have all been given upon their release a premiere at the Capital Theatre in New York City, and they rank with the great comedy successes in Broadway. John Cumberland, the star of the series, is one of the best known of American stage actors, and in these pictures he has won for himself a place among the leaders of the theatre.

How Pathe News "Covered" World : :

"THE World Before Your Eyes" is a slogan adopted some time ago for the Pathe News, and it is one which aptly fits the work of this great cinematographic news gathering agency. With the most remarkable events in the world history occurring during the twelfth month just closing, the Pathe News can proudly point to its record of never having missed covering a single event of importance, and to the most remarkable series of "exclusive" pictures ever recorded in news-reel annals.

Time and again the Pathe News cameramen in all corners of the globe risked their lives, states Pathe, in order that American audiences, sitting back calmly in their upholstered theatre chairs, might have brought before their very eyes events that had roused their deepest interest through newspaper columns.

But American audiences are appreciative, and the commanding position attained by the Pathe News, is evidence of this. The Pathe News has become established as the standard news-reel, and there are thousands of exhibitors throughout the United States, who would rather eliminate a feature, than to keep this reel off their program.

The Pathe News has built up the greatest news gathering organization in cinema history. There is no part of the world where this organization is not represented by a cameraman who is thoroughly alive to the importance of his position. From the far-flung battle lines of Soviet Russia, to revolution-torn Germany and Mexico, Pathe News cameramen during the year just passed risked life and limb to obtain scenes of importance. On land, on sea, and in the air, Pathe News cameramen were ever on the alert, and their romances were keenly written in issue after issue of the Pathe News, with its scores of "exclusive" and ever entertaining subjects.

It would be almost impossible to name the "stories" which appeared in the Pathe News and were not found in any other news reel. But a resume of a few of the more important "beats" is contained in a statement just issued by Pathe, calling attention to the facts of its news reel, beginning with the pictures first showing the Allied occupation of the Dardanelles.

Surrounding scenes were noted on the following news Pathe in a statement just issued from its headquarters:

"The signing of the armistice treaty, and the signatures of the representatives of the different nations ratifying the treaty, a document of special importance."

"First view of the work in the French by San Francisco in the court house in Lexington, Ky., during the great lunch riot there recently. Rioters were down actually being shot down. The Pathe News representative risked his life photographing this feature."

"First pictures of the German revolution."

"First pictures of the activities of the German Reds in the Ruhr district."

"First pictures of the French occupation of Frankfurt, Germany, which almost resulted in the renewal of the war between France and Germany."

"First pictures of the Supreme Conference of the Allies at San Remo, Italy."

"First and only pictures of the Mexican revolution."

"The Pathe News has shown more spectacular and thrilling pictures than all other agencies combined, paraded, in the field of aviation. Among the leading ones recorded by the Pathe News in the field, are a 'loop for one' in which an army aviator, who had leaped from an aeroplane, soaring at 100 miles an hour and over the Capital at Washington."

Other "one-man" was the first aeroplane flight ever photographed over London, in which Captain Jack Alcock, an aviator in the army, the Atlantic crossing flight, just made, was remarkably close to the ground, a human plane, "chattering" from one plane to another, that picture of a flight over the Panama Canal, ever made for public record, picture of a flight over the volcano at Mt. Fuji."

"These are but the high lights of the phenomenal work of the Pathe News during the year. They are significant of what can be expected during the coming year, for the organization is the most perfect in the news reel field, and is ever prepared to film any event worthy of being filmed, and no corner of the globe is too remote for its activities."

Lloyd's Rise Feature of the Year : : :

MANY big outstanding events have developed during the motion picture season which is now rapidly drawing to a close, but none is more impressive than the wonderful jump into popularity taken by Harold Lloyd, who, from almost total obscurity six years ago, is today one of the high expressed stars in the motion picture firmament. Even before he was signed recently by Associated Exhibitors, under a contract which involves more than $1500,000 the first year, Lloyd just a youth of twenty-seven was virtually in the "Million Dollar" class of stars.

Beginning last fall, when he made his inaugural appearance in two reel comedies, "Bumping into Broadway," Lloyd has made seven multiple re-releases. Each of these comedies involved more than $100,000. By the end of the year the young comedian will have been starred in nine comedy specials, and, with each being listed as a $100,000 offering, it can be seen why he is even now rated a Million Dollar Comedian.

Tracing the rapid rise of Lloyd to the top of the comedy ladder is a task rich in achievement and discloses how an energetic American youth, once determined to accomplish a thing, and supported by the proper enthusiasm of his associates, can progress to fame. A less energetic comedian than Lloyd might have been satisfied with the fame and fortune he had gained in single re-releases. Lloyd's one reel comedies under Pathe distribution were being circulated in between 5000 and 6000 theatres. No star could claim wider circulation. Yet Lloyd was not content with his efforts. Hal E. Roach, under whose direction the young Pathe star has reached the peak height, was not satisfied either. They wanted to make better comedies—comedies that would not be forgotten just as soon as the audience left the theatre. They wanted comedies that left no foot imprints on human forms. In fact, they were opposed to slap stick merriment because they felt the public was tired of this type of entertainment.

The consequence was the development of the two reel series of special comedies. "Bumping into Broadway" led the procession. Lloyd was an instantaneous success. His judgment and Hal Roach's, that the higher type of comedy was demanded by the public, was vindicated. But one two-reel didn't make Lloyd America's greatest comedian. "Captain Kidd's Kids" followed, and the young star's reputation took on a new aspect of greatness. Then came "From Hand to Mouth," something a little different than ever before had been attempted by a first grade comedian. It too, was heartily endorsed. And then "His Royal Stenness" was next in order. Lloyd gained further fame by this issue. His fifth release, "Haunted Spooks," up to this time was considered Lloyd's superlative endeavor, and just when the public and critics began to assume he could not make any better comedies, along came "An Eastern Western." Exhibitors well know the success of this picture. "An Eastern Western" was the last of Lloyd's first series of two-reelers for Pathe.

The initial issue of his second series will be made this month—"High and Dizzy." The chosen few who have had a preview of this picture are so enthusiastic as to proclaim it the "great American comedy." Pathe makes no such pretentious claim for it, but confidently expects it will be hailed as not only Lloyd's best work, but as the finest comedy of the year. It is a rarity in any line of entertainment that a star can turn to such a record of unbroken success as is credited to Lloyd. In cinema parlance, he has not made a single "flivver." Some have been better than others, but one continued to improve over the other—that is the only reason.

Lloyd is in a class by himself for his type of comedy. His success can be attributed largely to the loyal and conscientious efforts devoted to his work by Hal E. Roach, and by his own keen insight into the value of comedy "business." No comedian studies these details harder than Lloyd. With him, comedy-making is a serious business. He cannot fail under these circumstances, and Pathe is proud at being the medium that brought him to the head of the comedy field. That his remaining comedies under his Pathe contract will be memorable pictures, is the assurance of everybody connected with their production.

Farrar Finishes Interiors Company Leaves for Massachusetts for Exteriors of "Riddle: Woman"

WITH the "choosing" of what are practically the last interiors at the Hawthorne Studio, New Rochelle, Geraldine Farrar and her entire company working in "The Riddle: Woman," her first Associated Exhibitors production for distribution by Pathe moved to Marlborough, Mass. There the final exteriors will be taken and it is now only a matter of days before the actual filming of the picture, under the supervision of Edward Toss, will be completed. Marblehead is just outside Boston. Miss Farrar's home town, and the star eagerly looked forward to the trip there.

Under the patient and painstaking direction of Mr. Jesse, this drama is reported to be growing in beauty and power, the scenes are unusually artistic and the action or the story as swift and intense as a rational presentation of the play will permit. The company has already reached the peak, or climax of the story, where "The Riddle: Woman," goaded to desperation, bids herself of the man who is trying to turn her dream life into a nightmare.

Miss Farrar's support is most admirably chosen. The villain is an unusually personable one—the blond-haired and mustachioed William Carleton, who plays his part with all the finesse of the well-trained English actor; he is so good looking that one doesn't mind his being a "heavy." The leading man is Montague Love, another tall, athletic, strong featured Englishman, well qualified to enact the part of the hero as the author of this virile drama created him.

Pathe Talks on Service

It is the aim of the organization, outlined by Mr. Brunet, and carried into effect by every subordinate, that the Pathe Exchange system shall typify courtesy, fair dealing and the highest efficiency in both the delivery of film and its presentation to the public at the greatest possible profit to the exhibitor.

"There are thirty-two branch offices established in the important centers of the country and two sub-offices. It can be stated with the assurance of every one in the industry that the volume of film handled in these offices is greater than the volume handled by any other exchange system in the world. The establishment of sub-offices during the past year was undertaken to provide more rapid and accurate service to exhibitors in territories somewhat isolated from the accepted film centers, and in the future this necessity will govern the creation of other offices. This step is in accordance with the recognition by Pathe of the fact that service itself, the convenience of the exhibitor, an assurance to him of his product, is of paramount importance.

"Elmer R. Pearson, the director of exchanges, embodies in his career a development of the American exchange system itself. For more than a decade he has been identified with the distribution of motion picture film in executive capacities with the leading companies, and he developed many of the features of the modern exchange. During a considerable period of this time he enjoyed the co-operation of J. E. Storey, who is now the assistant director of exchanges, and these two men are now directing the vast system of the Pathe Company. Mr. Pearson's work has made him the friend of thousands of exhibitors in the United States, and he understands their problems and has them ever in mind.

"E. A. Eschmann, feature sales manager; M. F. Gibbons, short subject sales manager, and E. O. Brooks, serial sales manager, are also men of long experience in dealing with the exhibitors in the field. W. T. Vonder is manager of the Southern District; R. S. Schrader is the Central-Western district manager; and W. S. Westling is in charge of the Western district. These men spend a great portion of the year traveling with the sole purpose of supervising service.

PATHE PLANS

for the Coming Season

PATHE OFFERS NO STARTLING
"CHANGE IN POLICY," NO
FREAK SCHEMES, NO CATCH-
PENNY BOOKING DEVICES AT ALL.

PATHE proposes to furnish the exhibitor with the best pictures that brains can make and money buy, at prices at which he can make money.

PATHE proposes also, if possible, to better a service already reputed to be the best in the motion picture industry.

PATHE does not intend to compete with the exhibitor, but to serve him with the best and in the best way.

The product of no distributor has shown greater improvement during the past twelve months than that of PATHE. The proof of the statement lies in the very remarkable success of the pictures released during that period; and the largely increased length of the average run.

It is the PATHE purpose and the PATHE promise that this gratifying improvement shall be continued during the coming season.

The PATHE plans are made clear in the pages immediately following. We are justifiably proud of their scope and character.

Pathe Features

for the coming season

THE day of the so-called "program feature" is passing.

The day of the true "Special" has come.

Pathe, months ago, anticipated the demand of exhibitor and public for pictures of super-merit.

Pathe's plans are now complete.

Pathe will release fewer features.

Pathe will release no feature not of true "Special" quality.

To insure that "Special" quality Pathe has arranged with several of the best producers of the time for a limited number of big productions from stories and plays by authors of unquestioned success.

Pathe will pay for these productions much larger sums than have been spent upon the features of the past, but the extra cost will be apparent in every scene.

The pictures will be worth the difference.

Pathe Serials

for the coming season

Pathe serials have been standard for nearly seven years. The Pathe record of over thirty successful serials is unapproached in the industry. High specialization in direction, production, authorship and casting, plus very large direct-to-the-public advertising, have made them box office attractions of unique and tremendous value.

Pathe has made extraordinary efforts to insure for the coming season serials which in quality and drawing power shall exceed any hitherto released.

HAROLD LLOYD TWO REEL COMEDIES

Exhibitors, reviewers and public have united in declaring these superb comedies to be the ultimate in picture comedy. Mr. Lloyd has come to be the most outstanding screen comedian of the time. Many leading exhibitors advertise these comedies more extensively than the feature on their programs. Even greater success is assured for them during the coming twelve months.

HAL E. ROACH, PATHE COMEDIES PRODUCER

For six years Mr. Hal E. Roach has been producing comedies for Pathe. He found and developed Harold Lloyd; he found and developed "Snub" Pollard. He has never made a comedy for any other distributor than Pathe.

Mr. Roach today is the greatest comedy director and producer in the business. The quality of his product is pre-eminent. He personally directs the sensationnally successful Harold Lloyd comedies; he supervises the production of the Rolin one reel comedies:

Pathe is proud to announce the continuation of the harmonious and advantageous relations with Mr. Roach.

Big Stunt Advertises "Gumps" at Chicago

What is said to be one of the greatest advertising stunts that was ever pulled in connection with any film in the history of the industry was sprung by the Celebrated Players Film Corporation on everyone who happened to be in the city of Chicago during the F.B.K.'s Convention.

No less than twenty of the most beautiful girls that could be procured were stationed at the various "tag corners" along Madison Boulevard, State Street, Wabash Avenue and a few other thoroughfares, whose business it was to tag every man or woman that happened by. This made an exclusive Celebrated Players Film Corporation Tag Day, or, rather, a week, for the activity started on Monday and lasted through until Saturday. No one was spared. The tag created considerable favorable and witty comment, for on one side of it read: "Who Was the First Elk?" while on the other side was an elaborate picture in colors of Andy Gump himself, answering the question, viz.: "I, Andy Gump. Look Me Over in the Movies."

Ostriche Comedies to be Made in West

The remainder of the series of Mural Ostriche comedies will be produced on the West Coast according to an announcement from the Arrow offices this week. Garnette Sabin who is producing the comedies is arranging the plans for the West Coast producing and expects to leave for Los Angeles on August 1.

Three of the Ostriche comedies which are distributed by Arrow have been produced in the East. They are: "Betty Sets the Pace," "Betty's Green Eyed Monster," and "Meet Betty's Husband."

Jans Screenings Well Attended by Buyers

Private screenings of "A Woman's Business" and "Wings of Pride" that have been held lately in the projection room of Jans Pictures, Inc., have been largely attended by buyers from all sections of the country.

"A Woman's Business" and "Wings of Pride" were both produced under the personal direction of B. A. Rolfe of the Jans organization. Reviews of the two pictures and the daily newspapers were most hearty and sincere in their praise of both pictures.

Next of Hallroom Boys Series Issued Soon

Jack and Harry Chinn, the producers of the "Hallroom Boys" Comedies, in which Percy and Ferdie are featured, announce that the next picture, which will be entitled "The Misfortune Hunters," Barré Williams directed this time.

Jack and Harry Chinn are very enthusiastic over the success the last picture of this series are enjoying. The pictures are being released on schedule as every other week.

Work on Tarzan Serial Goes on Rapidly; Four Episodes Finished

WORK is progressing rapidly on the filming of "The Son of Tarzan," the fourth of the Edgar Rice Burroughs stories to be put into pictures. Because of the great strength of the story and its extremely rapid action from start to finish, it was found necessary to make this picture as a serial instead of as a special feature, the policy pursued in the former Tarzan pictures.

It is being made by the National Film Corporation under the direction of Harry Revier, who are the same people who made "Tarzan of the Apes" and "The Romance of Tarzan." It will be distributed throughout the world by David F. Howell.

The fourth episode has been completed and it is estimated that this will be the most expensive of any single episode in the picture, for according to the demands of the scenario it was necessary to burn a large steamer, and construct an enormous African village large enough to accommodate in their natural surroundings hundreds of natives. Plans of erecting a scene for the taking of the picture had to be supplied so all that came to hand was such as to shine, and sand.

So different is the natural vegetation of the golden state from the genuine tropical jungle that three freight car loads of undergrowth, palm trees, mosses and grasses, tendril vines were imported from Africa in a single order from Engle Rice Burroughs, the author of the Tarzan stories, to a planter friend with whom he lived while securing material for his famous story of the African wilderness. In all details the picture will depict a large and splendidly equipped and in the South Pacific are to feature and fulfill every demand of the author.

Bradley Will Produce Dramas by Daze

A contract has just been signed by The Bradley Film Company, Inc., and Charles F. Daze, author of "The Old Kentucky School," Samuel R. Bradley, director-general of the company which bears his name, will produce for the screen Mr. Daze's latest dramatic composition, "The Women Men Love." Robert W. Price, president of The Film Market, Inc., acted for Mr. Daze, and Ben W. Kohnen for the Bradley Company.

The cast for "The Women Men Love" will be headed and the first scenes will be shot the second week in August.

Masterpiece Film in Field New Distributing Concern Opens Exchanges in Many Big Centers

THE Masterpiece Film Corporation is a new distributing organization which has entered the independent field. R. C. Buttrick is its president. Mr. Buttrick was for many years an important member of the staff connected with the distribution of Fox pictures. Lou Rogers, a former player, with William Fox, and Famous Players is vice president of the company. Its main offices are at 140 West 40th street. Since April 4th branch exchanges have been opened in New York, Chicago, Boston, Philadelphia, Detroit, Cleveland, Cincinnati, Baltimore, Minneapolis and Buttrick with two sub-exchanges in Milwaukee and Indianapolis. The territory controlled by the Masterpiece comprises 40 percent of the United States and includes all territory as far west as the Dakotas and Western Iowa and as far south as North Carolina and Tennessee.

The Masterpiece proposes to give the motion-picture libraries one feature a week and one special feature a month. The weekly releases include the Brady-made pictures in which Charles Kemmler, Young Ethel Clayton, Mae Busch, Robert Warwick, Virginia Brown, Holbrook Blinn and George E. Stone are the most prominent among the stars. The distributors include Maurice Tombrin, John J. O'Brien, Allan Capellini, Emile Chautard, Harley Knoles, Travers Auld, John Ross, James Young and S. E. Taylor.

The first special feature is "The White Rider," starring Joe Mason and Helen Sedgwick. Known to picture patrons by reason of her work in such important pictures as "The Lure of the Circus," with Eddie Polo, "Number 10 West Bound" and "The Trail of No Return."

The new distributing corporation in speaking of its policy says:

"It is the policy of the Masterpiece to cooperate with the exhibitor in every way and each contract is based not on the letter of the document but the spirit, to which is added a minority of interest that should make it a profitable arrangement to all parties concerned. The slogan of the Masterpiece is No Deposits."

Lee Kugel, known as a theatrical producer and a publicity man of 25 years' experience, has been engaged as the publicity and advertising adviser of the new company.

"Movie Chats" Scoring in Great Britain

The way Charles Urban's "Movie Chats" have caught on in London was illustrated by still another cablegram which reached Mr. Urban's desk early this week at the offices of the Kineto Company of America, Inc.

Down to town in Great Britain and Ireland is being handled by British cities. Film Service Ltd. Shortly after they started handling the "Movie Chats" they received their order for 80 per cent. With the order they sent them they came either first or last. The latest cablegram extends it still further and asks how the exhibitors are bringing back the "Movie Chats" for repeat dates.

Wistaria Take Exteriors at Gloucester

Thomas A. Vercy, vice president of Wistaria Productions, Inc., announced this week at the House of Representatives that his latest production will be a picture. Vercy leaves Saturday to take exteriors in Gloucester, Mass., under the direction of Philip Van Heut, who is also the author of the story from which the picture will be adapted. Creghton Hale, who will play the leading role, George MacQuarrie, and Harold Thomas will make the trip.

Neal Hart Stars in Series

Pinnacle Company to Back Every Feature with National Campaign

THAT Pinnacle Productions, Inc., has completed arrangements whereby this fall made and pocket eight pictures a week, one picture every six weeks, each one a credit of eight pictures to the exhibitor's exchange, has just made. Fred Eckels, general manager of Pinnacle.

This organization, which has been formed around Neal Hart as an independent feature star, has leased its own studios at Glendale near Los Angeles, and the first of the Neal Hart series already is underway.

C. M. Giffen has been placed in complete charge of production, and both he and Neal Hart are elated over the excellent and diversified plays which have been selected as Hart's feature vehicles, according to Mr. Eckels, who has just returned from a ten-day visit to the West Coast.

Neal Hart pictures will, in every case, be adaptations of nationally popular plays or books, Mr. Eckels says, and in the case of the first of the series, Hart will appear as the western dispenser of the gospel in the title of "The Fighting Parson." The picture, however, will be known as "Hell's Oasis."

Mr. Eckels and his associates plan to use the eight five-reel Hart pictures as an example to show the exhibitors throughout the country what real co-operation means and what they believe to be the necessary why and wherewithal in bringing together all threads of a national campaign.

The Pinnacle Productions will be released through Independent Film Association, Consumers' Building, Chicago.

In a statement issued recently, Mr. Eckels declared that an elaborate national advertising and exploitation campaign would be put behind each of the Neal Hart features, fifty-two weeks in the year, concentrated locally in every territory. "Bill" Issatels from coast to coast," are promised by Mr. Eckels, "every exhibitor circularized constantly throughout the year in addition to strong trade-paper advertising—in fact every possible angle of the publicity-phase of picture-production."

Five on Hodkinson Program

A NUMBER of independent exchangers from various parts of the country met with Ivan Abramson at the Hotel Sherman in Chicago on July 7th and discussed the matter of organizing a production unit and a distribution concern. An exhibitor's franchise plan similar to that of First National is the basis of the Abramson project.

The production unit would be capitalized at $500,000 and the exchange organization at $100,000 and exhibitors would hold a franchise on a pro rata basis.

After a canvas of the situation, the meeting adjourned without taking final action, but it is understood that the exchangers will again meet at Mr. Abramson's call in New York sometime during the week of July 18th.

Those who attended the Chicago meeting were:

California Settings In Demand Abroad

During the course of a recent visit to the Realett West Coast studios in Hollywood, Charles Stoffel and L. Faessler, representing J. Steck and company, of Zurich, Switzerland, one of the largest importers of motion-picture film on the Continent, declared foreign exhibitors were hard pressed to obtain sufficient quality pictures to meet the ever-increasing demand.

They further stated that while German and French pictures could be purchased at a lower figure, American made pictures, particularly those with the California stamp on them, were the most popular. This, they said, was due to the varied and beautiful scenic effects to be had in Los Angeles pictures, which seemed to be lacking in others.

New Office to Serve Southern States

A new state-right unit has been established with the home office at Atlanta, Ga., to serve the six Southern states. Frank W. Salley, formerly general sales-manager of Consolidated Film and Supply Company, Atlanta, and D. Tweed Roughan have organized under the firm name of Frank W. Salley & Company, and their first production is Robert McLaughlin's "The House Without Children."

BEGINNING with July 18th the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation announces the next five screen dramas from five independent producing organizations which they will distribute before October in accordance with the Hodkinson policy of open booking and every picture on its merits. Further announcement of additional pictures is to be expected, according to well founded rumors that indicate many new production units are negotiating to distribute through Hodkinson.

The Hodkinson list indicates a wide range of appeal in type of drama, ranging from a romantic mystery to a drama of London and the Alps, a great Benjamin B. Hampton production dealing with a New England locale, a sensational love story from J. Parker Read, Jr., and a masterly rural romance from that new independent producer Irvin V. Willat.

With "The Green Flame" released by Hodkinson on July 18th, Robert Brunton presents J. Warren Kerrigan and his own company in a detective mystery story which Director Ernest C. Warde declares will be the most popular picture in which this Apollo of the screen has yet appeared.

July 25th comes the first of the Louis Tracy Productions, "The Silent Barrier," in which Sheldon Lewis, Gladys Hulette, Florence Dixon and many other favorites of the screen appear. Arthur F. Beck and Charles C. Burr present "The Silent Barrier" as the first of fifteen pictures to be made from some forty novels from the pen of Sir Louis Tracy. A recent picture that was a pronounced success, "Wings of the Morning," was based on one of his novels. "The Silent Barrier" is regarded as the choice to introduce a series of pictures to be known as Louis Tracy Productions. The Hodkinson organization decided to release the picture in July as a special attraction to summer audiences who will be delighted with the many beautiful shots of winter scenes in which the love story is enacted.

J. Parker Read, Jr.'s, next

Will Be Released Between July 18 and October

vehicle for the stellar Louise Glaum carries the inviting title of "Love Madness." C. Gardner Sullivan wrote the scenario of "Love Madness" as well as the earlier achievements "Salara" and "Sex." To direct Miss Glaum in this picture, J. Parker Read, Jr., selected Joseph Henaberry, who has directed such stars as Douglas Fairbanks, Mildred Harris Chaplin and Roscoe Arbuckle. He is said to have surrounded Louise Glaum with an all-star cast of box-office as well as histrionic appeal. A clean picture is promised and one that will respond to the credit and prestige of one of shadowland's greatest showmen.

"The Dwelling Place of Light" is regarded by the Hodkinson of needs as Benjamin B. Hampton's masterpiece. It is based on Winston Churchill's great novel of that name and should attract and win the enormous Churchill following. The scenes are laid in a New England mill town. This brings Mr. Hampton into a new field, as "Riders of the Dawn," "The Westerners," "Desert Gold" and "The Sagebrusher" are photo-dramas of the great west as described by Emerson Hough, Stewart Edward White and that most popular of American authors, Zane Grey.

More than half of Irvin V. Willat's first independent production, "Dabney Todd," has been completed. The story of "Dabney Todd" is taken from Frank N. Westcott's famous novel, and was prepared in continuity by Irvin Willat.

Billy Van to Star in Reelcraft Series

The new Royal Comedy Series now being prepared for distribution by the Reelcraft Pictures Corporation will have another star from the amusement world, in the person of Billy B. Van, the well-known comedian. Van has a national reputation in nearly every form of amusement musical-comedy, burlesque, vaudeville, melodrama, the burlesque of the minstrels, and at last the movies.

The first release of the new series will have for its star, Leon Errol, of vaudeville fame, in his two reel production of "Buggins," to be released to the distributing exchanges on July 15.

"Each release of this series will have a star of national prominence, surrounded by a suitable cast and production, and will be given a national trade paper advertising campaign as well as the usual advertising accessories," says the Reelcraft Pictures Corporation.

Each Royal Comedy release will be in two reels, and will be released every other week by the Reelcraft and allied independent exchanges.

Reisenfeld Books Group of Science-Subjects

Charles Urban, president of the Kinetograph Company of America, has received Dr. Hugo Reisenfeld's acceptance to a contract for an entire group of the Science Series. The first one was shown at the Rivoli Theatre last week and attracted much attention among critics as well as among the audiences.

Ahson Smith writing in "The Globe," commented the first of the series to a chapter out of "Social Life Among the Insects," the book by Fabre, the great Frenchman.

"The Playgion" writing in "The Evening Sun" says:

"The motion picture camera in revealing secrets of insect life, explains why scientists are enthusiastic about their profession. While a bug may be only a bug to a layman, the scientist has enacted before his eyes some of the most startling dramas."

"Sea Side Simps" Next Hallroom Comedy

Jack and Harry Cohn, producers of the two-reel Hallroom Boys Comedies, in which Percy and Ferdie are featured, announce that their next release, which will shortly be available, will be entitled "Sea Side Simps."

Harry Williams directed this farce and is also responsible for the story.

"The Son of Tarzan" Is Object of Interest

Inquiries are beginning to stream into the office of David P. Howells of "The Son of Tarzan," the fifteen-episode animal serial which is being made by the National Film Corporation and to which Mr. Howells controls the distribution rights. It is expected that the picture will be completed and ready for release about the first of September.

Schnitzer on Exploitation

Proper Advertising is Big Factor in Box-Office, Says Equity Head

"NEXT to the star, the exploitation of a production is the biggest factor in box-office receipts" is the conviction of Joseph L. Schnitzer, President of Equity Pictures Corporation, as expressed in a recent interview. "I would even go a step further"—Mr. Schnitzer added—"a popular star is not always necessary to put a picture over. Providing the picture is really worth while and has meat, I am convinced that with wide-awake exploitation and with moderate expenditure on a campaign, it can yield a handsome box-office return. Every exhibitor will recall cases where a picture was mediocre, and barely passed muster, and if exhibited on its face value would be a down and out loss, which have gone over profitably by dint of a little ingenious exploitation."

"In laying particular stress on exploitation as an indispensable link in successful showmanship, I anticipate many who will throw up their hands in protest at laying out extra expense on a campaign that may or may not be effective. To those exhibitors I will say that a weekly review of the box-office income of the exhibitors of Equity pictures proves that those showmen who dug into their pockets and financed an exploitation campaign came out many more dollars to the good than the conservative exhibitors who kept their pictures a public secret and expected the public by force of inertia to steer into their theatres. While many exhibitors may be drawing a profitable patronage regularly without the stimulation of exploitation stunts, it is only a matter of time before their competitor will beat them in the race, and side-track their clientele to his own doors, by the skillful application of publicity campaigns.

Forward Film Has Another

J. J. Sameth Announces Latest Addition to List of Winners

ANOTHER addition to the list of winners now being offered by J. Joseph Sameth of the Forward Film Distributors, Inc., is entitled "Youth's Desire," featuring Joseph Bennett, who is supported by Doris Baker. This photoplay portrays very clearly the necessity of perseverance, and is a good lesson for "If at first you don't succeed, etc."

"Youth's Desire" is a story laid in the small town of Plainfield, a suburb of Los Angeles, wherein Joseph Bennett, playing the role of Bud Wise, is devoting all his spare moments to studying aviation.

His only encouragement is that received from Edith Kent, who secretly admires him. After a sad and humiliating failure in an attempt to fly in a monoplane which he built, Bud leaves for the city to live down his disgrace.

Arriving in the city, Bud secures a position with an Aeroplane company, as a mechanic's helper, and writes home that he is shining among the Aces.

After going through all the manoeuvres of a finished aviator, he at last lands safely, much to the delight of Edith, who has come to visit him and to the surprise of his superiors. After getting his bearings, Bud accepts the congratulations as a matter of course, and Edith happily waits the time when he can return to his home town and show the folks how he has made good.

Clermont Voices Few Ideas

Is Strong for Statistics; Gives Burroughs Credit for His Star

HANNIBAL N. CLERMONT, president of Clermont photoplays Corporation, financing Lloyd Carleton Productions, announces, after a trip to Washington and New York that Uncle Sam has been "asleep on the job" so far as compiling statistics on the motion-picture industry is concerned, but he has assurances that the census reports when finally made up will open the eyes of the people regarding the growth and importance of the film business.

Uncle Sam has been too busy with other matters to pay much attention to the movies, but at that he has a lot of cameras and photographic supplies in cold storage in Washington that the producers would like to get at and this same Uncle Sam admits that the movies did much to win the war.

Mr. Clermont tells of the great demand and forecasts the arising of great picture theatres which will show short-subjects exclusively—as educational reels, news-travel films, cartoons, novelties, etc.—a return to old time movies in point of cost, but with up-to-the-minute service and combined with show features.

Motion pictures he says, constitute the biggest cash business on earth just now, and annual admissions will be well up toward the billion dollar mark in 1921.

Mr. Clermont brings the interesting news that the movies have put the chorus girl into the discard. The movie bathing girl has the spot light because she is far prettier; there is more of her to see; she is cheaper to look at, and one may see her as often as one cares to.

State-Righters Predict Comedy's Success

Fine Arts Pictures, Inc., submits two letters received from state-right buyers of the comedy, "Up in Mary's Attic," as evidence of the hit that the picture has made with the independent market. T. A. Burke, of the Wescott Film Corporation, Minneapolis, Minn., writes:

"Have already started work on 'Up in Mary's Attic,' and exhibitors all over this territory are in a very receptive mood as respects the picture."

Jay Emanuels, of the Royal Pictures, Inc., of Philadelphia, who is handling the picture in Eastern Pennsylvania and Southern New Jersey, says:

"Every exhibitor in this territory is eagerly waiting an opportunity to see 'Up in Mary's Attic,' and I sincerely believe that it will prove the biggest success ever released on the independent market. The fact that Fine Arts is continuing the trade paper advertising even after the territory is sold will prove to the ultimate benefit of every state-right buyer handling the picture."

Big Jans Production is Arousing Interest

"Madonnas and Men," the big special feature production of Carey Wilson's and Edmund Goulding's story of ancient and modern times that was directed by B. A. Rolfe for Jans Pictures Inc., has been the subject of much lively bidding from the state rights buyers. This is also true of offers received for bookings from owners of large circuits of theatres, according to a statement from one of the Jans officials.

No definite plans have been made as yet by Jans Pictures Inc., as to just how "Madonnas and Men" will be placed on the market. Many offers are still being given careful consideration but nothing definite has been done about the matter to date.

Aywon Will Have Five Features Ready Soon

The five productions, soon to be put on the state-rights market by Nathan Hirsh, president of The Aywon Film Corporation, are now being put in shape for public presentation, it is announced.

"These special features," says Aywon, "will offer a line of motion-picture attractions of a very high order. Each picture tells a different story, and each should prove an unusual box-office attraction. The five features cover every angle of what is considered the best in entertainment. Tense drama, thrilling action, laughter, pathos, tears and practically every human emotion is strongly registered in these various features."

Robt. Broadwell Issues Statement : : : :

"TWENTIETH century efficiency is summed up in the word organization," said Robert Burke Broadwell, President of Broadwell Productions, Inc., producers of the Nick Carter series of two reel dramas, as we interrupted him in the midst of his studio activities while supervising a scene of his first production, "The $100,000 Kiss."

"This is the lesson taught us by twenty years of motion picture producing," continued Mr. Broadwell. "Organization has come to be recognized as the all important factor in any great industry, and in no other industry is it so essential as in this, the fifth industry of the world. Nature is the greatest organizer in the universe, and nowhere does she exemplify the perfect co-operation that comes from organization than in the construction of man, in whose fertile brain originates the first germ of the story that eventually leads to the finished picture production."

"Could you give me an outline of just how you would proceed to organize a production from the time the story germ you speak of grows into a theme which is transferred to paper and handed to you as a story?" we inquired.

"Well, after getting the story, and having my finances arranged for, I would erect a studio and proceed to the formation of my producing organization. The first unit of this organization to be the scenario department, the head of this to be designated as the scenario editor, who would also be an assistant supervisor of production. Under him there should be a staff of at least three well known scenario writers. This organized the department should originate the scripts, except in those cases where books or plays are purchased in which case, they make the adaptations and write the continuities, always keeping to the line of the author's original theme, as far as possible. When finished the story should meet the approval of the executive officers of the company, after which a director is called in and the story handed to him."

"The next step then is to select a proper cast to portray the characters in the story, after which the director should call into consultation the heads of the other departments, principally, the technical director, and thus assembled, the story should be gone over very thoroughly, and an estimate of the cost of the picture be arrived at. After this, the director should add to the estimates his known fixed expenses, allowing above the sum so arrived at a reasonable amount to cover costs of extras, amusements, rentals, costumes, and incidentals. He should be able to approximate then the total cost of his forthcoming production. The director thus by knowing the estimated cost of his picture in advance may, by proper supervision of expenses, keep his production within a certain definite and reasonable cost. Under these restrictions he will not be prone to become extravagant or resort to thoughtless waste of the company's finances."

"After this important matter of costs has been settled, the director should assemble his cast, read the story to them, so that each member of the cast can visualize the part he is to enact and then stage a rehearsal, similar to the method used in the legitimate. At this rehearsal there should be present a representative of the executive office, the scenario editor, the heads of the necessary supply departments, such as the technical director, the chief property man and such other departments as might be concerned in aiding the director in staging his production. The benefits to be derived from this are that the rehearsal conducted by the director in the presence of the man or men who constructed the story will keep the director in the line of thought in which the story was originally developed."

"Further the casts, being thus familiarized with the action which is to follow in the production, can visualize the necessary costumes they are required to use, and the characters they are to enact, enabling them to better understand what they are about to do when the time for action arrives, thus, accustoming them in advance to whatever action the director puts them through during the production of the story."

"There seems to be quite a lot of preliminaries required before a picture is ready to be filmed," we interjected, as Mr. Broadwell paused.

"Yes," he replied, "but they are absolutely necessary to the successful outcome of the production, a good foundation means a substantial structure, and too many houses have been built upon the sands, and where one of these have collapsed it was due to faulty organization at the base."

"And," continued Mr. Broadwell, "this is only the beginning of the picture. The scene you are looking at is the first one of the story to be taken, and to be able to even get this far, there are other units of organization that have to be taken into consideration, such as the technical, transportation, property, rental and electrical departments, not including the business department, all these combine to make possible the taking of the first scene of the picture. Then while the picture is being produced, other departments such as the laboratory and cutting departments, must be prepared to receive the product as it is turned into them daily by the director. Meanwhile other units, the title and publicity departments, are preparing to carry on the work after the cutters have released the film."

"In the meantime the New York office, although they have not seen the film, work on the material the publicity department has forwarded them, and using this as a groundwork prepare for the exploitation of the finished production, to interest the distributor, who in turn commences an advertising campaign to call the attention of the exhibitor to the product, and the latter, devotes his efforts to interest the public. So you see, there is a great amount of organization work to be accomplished before the general public see the film."

"At this point we ventured the opinion that if the general public were enlightened regarding these matters, they would be less prone to criticize the efforts of the producers, who are slowly but surely eradicating the defects that still exist in this young and successful industry."

"Yes, I believe they would," said Mr. Broadwell, "but the only remedy that will overcome present-day shortcomings is organization and co-operation, and I am using my utmost endeavors, knowledge and ability to perfect my organization and to so co-ordinate the various units that they will work in perfect harmony, thereby creating a motion-picture product that will measure up to the standards required by a discriminating public. For with me the public is always paramount, and I believe in giving them the full value of entertainment commensurate with the quality they expect, and this can only be done by proper organization in the studio. Build the foundation on the bed-rock of organization, and the structure will stand."

"At this moment, the director having finished the scene he was working on, came to consult with Mr. Broadwell, who is personally supervising the production of the first Nick Carter picture, and I took advantage of the opportunity to request Mr. Broadwell to introduce me to the director and the principal members of the company. It was with great pleasure that we acknowledged introductions to "Bobby" Ross, the director; Tom Carrigan who is the star of the series, and who enacts the part of the famous Nick; the charming Miss Mae Gaston, who is Carrigan's leading lady; and Colin Chase, who with Harry Keenan, forms the permanent Nick Carter company engaged to play throughout the series. Mr. Broadwell presented them to me, remarking that they "were the nucleus of his organization," and as we looked over this capable cast we could not help but be impressed with the fact, that Mr. Broadwell had carried his theories on organization to a high state of perfection if one could judge the rest of the organization by these players who were portraying the parts of the characters made famous by Nicholas Carter in his widely-known books, the first of which, "The $100,000 Kiss," we were fortunate enough to witness in course of production, due to the courtesy of Mr. Broadwell.—WILLIAM MCCORMACK

Special Service Section on Tom Carrigan in "The $100,000 Kiss"

First of a Series of Two Reel Productions from the Famous Nick Carter Stories

In booking the series of one of the productions from the Nick Carter stories your attention is directed to the author's fame as the one which practically guarantees an audience until such time as the element of curiosity shall have been eliminated and the pictures themselves will have found favor with the individual patron.

In this connection it may be said that the first number of the Nick Carter series under the title of "The $100,000 Kiss" is full of action with a plot based on the capture of diamond smugglers by "Nick" and his assistants. There have been no attempts to take liberties with the story and the production is meritorious in every way. The cast of characters is headed by Tom Carrigan who will be remembered by your patrons for his role of "Checkers" in the picture production of "Checkers." The supporting cast is entirely competent.

The exploitation campaign for "Nick Carter" should be planned on the basis of the series rather than the attempt to put over the first picture alone. In view of this a considerable larger advertising appropriation than you could afford for one picture may be allotted on the assumption that if you put the first number over to big business and to satisfied audiences the series will be then taking care of itself to a large extent.

It is fair to assume that you will not have to explain the meaning of "Nick Carter" to anyone in your city therefore your selling talk and plans should begin with getting the fact that 600 of the Nick Carter stories have been secured for picture production, to your prospective patrons.

The newspapers are the best medium for this purpose. We would suggest that short length stories about the Carter novels,

THESE Special Service Sections are written with the purpose of suggesting to exhibitors how to get the most out of pictures that they have booked. They are prepared after studying the pictures and the best way of exploiting them. Won't you let us know any use that you made of suggestions printed here, and the original ideas that you have used in putting over this picture?

then author, the number of years they have lived as popular fiction with all classes of people from presidents down to newsboys, not forgetting to give concrete examples of some great people who have confessed to liking the exciting adventures of "Nick" and his assistants, the great number of novels that have been published, the fact that they are ideal material for photoplay production, being replete with action, published in the papers forms the best advance medium for advertising. If these stories are written with care and contain the right kind of material you will have no trouble in getting them past your editors as free matter. This is demonstrated by the fact that hardly a magazine is published but that somewhere in it a writer will make reference to "Nick Carter." Only recently Irvin S. Cobb in a Saturday Evening Post story used the famous "Nick" as an important part of a front page article.

With the information that the stories are to be made into pictures planted we would next go into the display space with our exploitation. For the opening number of the "Nick" series "The $100,000 Kiss" we would relegate billing of the multiple reel production which you will probably run on the same bill to second place and concentrate all our energy on the two reelers. In your displays the name of "Nick Carter" is the thing to head line. Follow this by selling talk which will argue the dramatic material contained in each story emphasizing their action with the star, Tom Carrigan mentioned connecting him with the production of "Checkers" which will refresh the memory of those who saw the production and establish Carrigan as a recognized artist. The use of bill boards with "Nick Carter" and the name of your theatre head lined is recommended.

For those who wish to pull something novel or at least a little different the novels themselves suggest much.

Suppose you were to admit every boy to the house free who would bring you a copy of a "Nick Carter" story? Pile the books you get in this manner in the lobby with appropriate signs announcing all about them. Advertise what you are doing well in the newspapers and in other ways. This stunt is surely good for a front page story in the papers if you put it over well and make a showing in the collection of the Carter novels. A prize offered for the oldest copy of a Nick Carter novel to be brought to the theatre would be another sure fire publicity stunt. This could be worked in connection with the collection of novels secured by admitting the boys as described.

A chance for a lot of real feature is contained in the idea of canvassing prominent business men of your city with a request for a short story about how they were "licked" by irate parents back in their youth for being caught reading the veteran "Nick" etc. See that the men make their reminiscences on the humorous order. Any newspaper would jump at the chance of publishing a series of this sort providing you get men interested who are well known locally.

A prize offered to the boy who submits the best essay about the first Nick Carter story he ever read would also get attention.

A decided novelty in the way of a stage prologue is suggested by the first part of the fourth act of a play called "Mother."

Two boys are seated on a bed in their room, pajama clad reading a "Nick Carter." One boy reads a sentence from the exciting tale but gets stuck on a long word. The other boy grabs the book and is also stuck. He then spells it out and pronounces it incorrectly. The boys register that they hear their mother coming. They hide the novel under the mattress grab the bible and as the mother comes into the room, one is reading in a sing song voice, "And the Lord Said unto Noah," etc. The boys are finally tucked into bed and fall asleep. (Note—This portion of the famous play complete with all lines and business referring to a Nick Carter story and the bible and closing with one of the most effective child scenes ever staged was the hit of the play mentioned.)

After the first number of the series is played we would then begin giving the titles of the productions some space.

MAE GASTON

‘The Girl With The Million Dollar Smile’
Portraying “Patsy”
In The Famous Nick Carter Series

Tom Carrigan as "Nick" : : : : :

AT last, a dream of boyhood days is to become a reality, and we are about to see in the life, upon the screen, our old favorite, Nick Carter, impersonated by Thomas J. Carrigan.

In all those real days of life when youth's golden dreams have not yet been shattered by the hard realities of the work-a-day world, and adventure called us with its luring voice, and we made sundry and one plans to desert the old home and stern, but loving parents, to go out west and help Buffalo Bill decimate the buffaloes and the redskins, we were always held back by a sense of loyalty to dear old "Nick" whom we hated to leave behind, for while the West appealed to us strongly, still there were many adventures to be had in the cities, and we always, after a corner council of the "Red-Rats," decided to stick with our favorite Nick Carter, for as Irvin

S. Cobb says: "Nick's motives were ever pure, and he never wasted a golden moment." And now as the memories of youthful days come back to us again, after hearing that Nick Carter was to appear in the "movies" we were ever so pleased to learn that the actor to impersonate him is to be our old favorite Tom Carrigan. Tom is "Nick" and "Nick" is Tom, and from now on "never the twain shall part," for Tom has signed a long time contract with Robert B. Broadwell, organizer of Broadwell Productions, Inc., to portray Nick Carter on the screen, and it is with guilty feelings of delight and anticipation that we look forward to the first showing of Carrigan as Nick Carter in the first picture, "The $100,000 Kiss," which has just been completed at Filmland City, Medford, Mass., the new home of Nick Carter.

No more will we have to wade through page after page of thrills while hiding from our parents' observant eyes. Now we can sit in comfort in upholstered seats in the finest theatres, and in breathless ease, with eyes glued to the moving screen, watch Tom enact for us those wonderful situations that so enthralled us and fed our imagination in youth's happy blissful hours.

"Handsome Tom," as he is known to the "fans" and "Genial Tom" to his fellows of the Friars and the Lambs, first saw the golden streaks of dawning day in the historic town of Lapeer, Mich. His early education was gained in the schools of the town, and he was a good scholar, but he never let business interfere with pleasure, and took every occasion that offered itself to read the Nick Carter stories, then in the height of their fame among the youth of the country, of course, never realizing at the time, that the day would arrive when he himself would have the proud privilege of acting the part of Nick.

When Tom had absorbed all the knowledge that Lapeer could offer him, he listened to the insistent call of the Football Coach, "Bud Thompson," of the University of Michigan, and decided upon a College career, and in between games, managed to pick up a little "Greek" and "Arabic" though at the time he thought he would never have any use for the languages, but judge of his surprise, when years later he was traveling through Egypt as a member of an expedition to excavate the remains of the ancient tombs, to pick up a copy of "Nick Carter" printed in the Arabic language. The title of the book was "The $100,000 Kiss."

Mae Gaston, Leading Lady : : : : :

LEADING lady of Broadwell Productions, Inc., more generally known to the motion picture fans throughout the world as "the girl with the million dollar smile," gained her popularity in the pictures while playing opposite such stars as Fairbanks, Walthall, Lew Stone, Hayakawa, Francis Ford and others. Her work in the serials earned for her the name of "Daredevil Mae," for regardless of the danger involved in the "stunts," she was required to perform, she never once lost her courage and never disappointed a director. The "fans," ever quick to recognize ability and beauty, christened her as above, and so familiar did the name become that thousands of letters addressed only to "Daredevil Mae," Los Angeles, Cal., were delivered to her without any other address.

Miss Gaston was born in the "city of culture," just as the bells were chiming the birth of the year 1900, and even then the penchant for given her a "nickname" existed, for she was referred to by her mother's neighbors as "a new year's baby." She was born an artist and an early development of this was evidenced by the fact that when "Baby Mae" became temperamental, the only way to pacify her was by letting her play with a picture of Edwin Booth. This trait was later developed in the "latin quartier" of Paris, and she became quite a painter, but her love was always for the dramatic, and while still in her teens, she played many parts in dramatic stock companies. She gravitated naturally to motion pictures, as she was an accomplished pantomimist, having learned this valuable art under the tutelage of "Chevalier," the celebrated Frenchman, while studying art in Paris.

Her first engagement was with the famous of the famous," the great D. W. Griffith, during the days of the old Majestic-Reliance, and from then until the present she has been playing prominent parts, has been a star at the head of her own company, contributed to the success of many serial productions and is as well known to the public at large as is "Nick Carter," for which series she has been signed on a long term contract to portray the role of "Patsy," the brilliant assistant to the greatest character in American popular fiction.

Miss Gaston is a winsome blonde with large dark appealing blue eyes, and she is credited with having never "broken a heart—she keeps them intact." Five feet five, she tips the symbol of justice at 125 lbs., her figure is perfectly formed, and if the ancient greek sculptor who shaped the "Venus de Milo" was to come back to earth to look for a model for another masterpiece, there is but one girl whom he would select for the honor, and that would be the charming heroine of the Nick Carter series, and judging from her work in the first picture of the series, you get the impression from her athletic abilities displayed therein that she is a pacesetter for the wirey "Doug" himself.

There is no doubt that in this new characterization of "Patsy" she will bring forth a new host of admirers, for we all love a good detective tale, and when such a lovely creature as Mae goes after the evil-doers for the sake of justice, we are all going to be with her, and revert back again to memories of youthful days, when we used to read of "Patsy's" thrilling exploits between the covers of our geographies while the teacher's back was turned.

Colin Chase, Juvenile : : : : :

AFRICA'S leading juvenile! That's covering some territory, but Colin Chase always has been quite a traveler. It is related of him that at the age of six months he travelled from the cradle to the floor "via" the air route, and never let out a whimper. That's courage! He was born with it, and it's a quality that one has to have if one ever expects to get anywhere in the strenuous life of the motion pictures. Of course pictures at the time Chase made his first trip, were also in their infancy, some say they still are. Maybe so, but actors of the type of Colin Chase, give one the impression that the infant certainly has grown, for it's a man's work to go through one day's activities of the sort that Chase has been doing for the last few years. Endowed with the face and physique of an "Adonis," athletic, and a lover of outdoor sports, he combined these gifts with a natural dramatic talent, that soon won for him a place among the "elect."

Born in Lewiston, Idaho in the year 1895, he received his early education in the public schools of Chicago, and Newport, R. I. An insubstantial talent for drawing sketches that were true satiric art, caused him to become in disfavor with his various teachers whose idiosyncracies he faithfully portrayed upon the blackboard during said teachers' absence, and the consequent smarting of certain parts of his youthful anatomy, created an urge to leave the atmosphere of the three R's behind, and as a result he was forced to earn his living thereafter with the "sweat of his brow" as the author of "Much Ado About Nothing" used to say. But it is not recorded in Chase's biography that he ever "swung a pick" and in those lean early days he did not even "swing a toothpick" for the salary he was paid by one of Chicago's daily newspapers did not permit a humble cartoonist to dine where they used toothpicks as a pleasant reminder of the feast.

He was succeeding fairly well as a cartoonist, but the call of the footlights began its insistent urging and Chase listened to its tempting voice, joining Jay Clement in the latter's first stage production of "Sam Houston," and he continued with the show for several seasons.

He was in Rushville, Indiana, when someone told him that he ought to go into "pictures" that he would with his ability be able to "walk away with any part handed him," for Chase was a great walker. Colin, as we have noted, was a confident pedestrian, and believing in himself, he walked all the way to Chicago and interviewed J. K. Spoor of The Essanay Film Company, who evidently was impressed with Chase's enthusiasm for he gave him an engagement with the company, as juvenile lead.

He has played leads with Eclair, Universal, Morosco, Ince, Paramount, Fox and American. He returned home from the war laden with honors and a fine coat of tan, to accept a stage engagement but he yearned to go back to the screen. He fulfilled the requirements of Robert B. Broadwell, president of Broadwell Production, Inc., who cast him for the important part of "Chick" one of the principal characters made famous by Nicholas Carter.

Harry Keenan, Screen Villain : : : :

WHERE there's a hero there must be a villain to make the hero a hero. So reasoned Harry Keenan during the days when he first studied dramatic art. Checking up on the heroes actively engaged in the art, he found that a great many of the heroes were not always working steady, whereas the villains being fewer, they were always in demand by producers. Therefore he decided to be a villain (professionally), although domestically he is the quietest mannered man in the world. Concentrating all his skill and knowledge on this specialty he became an accomplished villain, so much so, that he was always in demand to do the dirty work.

Time brings many changes and the "villains" are now known as "heavies," although there are some "heavies" who are the "lightest-weights" in the profession. Safe to say Keenan is not one of these, for he has proved by many active years on the legitimate stage and in the motion-pictures that he leads the division of "heavyweights," pugilistically speaking. Keenan has developed the art of playing "heavies" to a finesse that is startlingly realistic and convincing.

When motion pictures first commenced to attract the legitimate actors from the footlights and meagre salaries, Keenan was among the first to be approached with offers for his services, and being a man of sound judgment and good foresight, he lost no time in coming to a decision that the motion pictures offered him greater possibilities than the spoken drama. Most of his picture career was spent with Thos. H. Ince, and the Ince pictures he played in gained for him a popularity that was second to none. He rose in a very short time to be the best "heavy" in the pictures, and enhanced his reputation with every production in which he appeared.

However, like the home call that comes to many a weary wanderer, Harry hearkened to the luring voice of his old friend, the legitimate, and returned to the stage. Gradually he forgot the studios as the footlights dimmed the radiance of the Cooper-

Hewitt's, until he met Robert B. Broadwell, president of Broadwell Productions, Inc., an old friend who directed him in Ince productions out in California, while playing an engagement recently in Boston, where Broadwell is producing the Nick Carter series of detective dramas.

He accepted a contract from Mr. Broadwell to play the "Heavy" leads in the series opposite Tom Carrigan, and thus took his place with the famous trio known as Nick, Chick and Patsy, portrayed respectively by Carrigan, Colin Chase and Mae Gaston. And so we welcome once more to the silver sheet the familiar shadow-self of our old friend Harry Keenan.

Robt. Ross, Soldier and Director : : : :

MAJOR ROBERT ROSS, who is directing the Nick Carter series of two-reel dramas for Broadwell Productions, Inc., was born in the city Henry Ford made famous. He went through the Detroit schools without "stalling," and after leaving high-school, he commenced work with a banking institution as a messenger, facing through the different departments he arrived at the cage of an assistant tellership in three years.

Resigning from the bank, he went West where he joined the Regular Army, gathering many a saddle sore astride the gallant war horses of the old 15th Cavalry during a period of years. No war being at the time in sight, and longing for greater activity to calm his restless soul, he left the army with an honorable discharge, and took to the exciting profession of cow-punching on the Laramie Ranch in Wyoming.

He saw his first motion-picture in the Western town some miles from the ranch, and it happened to be a Western subject played by a cast that had received their Western training, watching Col. Bill Cody's Wild West Ranch Show in Madison Square Garden. Ross full of philanthropic ideas towards the infant industry, quit the wild life of the plains that same night and came east to show the Easterners how to be Westerners. This was in 1908, and the Vitaphone Company after listening to Ross's criticism of "Broadway Cowboy's" put him on the payroll. Unfortunately for Ross's stored-up knowledge of the West, they did not put on any Western pictures, so he quit them in disgust and went over to the Powers studios in Wakefield, where he associated himself with J. Farrell MacDonald and Frank Powell, the latter at the time was directing Florence Barker. When the consolidation of independents took place which created the present-day Universal company, Ross went to the new company and was in charge of the pioneer company that opened up the golden West to Universal productions when the present "Universal City" was a sand lot.

He was appointed assistant to the General Manager A. M. Kennedy, but ambitious to hear the sound of his own voice through a megaphone he gave up the executive position, and became assistant director to the late Otis Turner. When H. O. "Efficiency" Davis took charge of Universal City, Ross quite capable and efficient himself could not understand the efficiency of the Davis regime, and so he hid himself East to enlist under the Fox banner. Theda Bara the Fox star, insisted upon Ross directing her, but her director contented her by making "Bobby" as he is better known, his assistant. Bobby could not endure the sufferings Theda daily inflicted on the susceptible worshippers at her shrine and learning that his old chief Otis Turner was working for Fox on the West Coast, he sought a transfer, which was granted and rejoined Turner in Los Angeles, Cal.

When war was declared with Germany, Ross enlisted. At Camp Funston he was made a sergeant and five months later a first lieutenant. He received his captain's bars before going "across." In France he was assigned to the Division of Laboratories and was later assigned the Meuse-Argonne sector. At the time of the armistice he was serving in the lines with the 79th Division.

In February, 1919, he was made a major. On his return to civilian life in August, 1919, he was engaged by Fox to go to Europe to study post-bellum conditions in the picture industry. He fulfilled this mission creditably. At the time of his engagement by Broadwell to direct the Nick Carter series, he was directing the Muriel Ostriche productions.

John J. Glavey, Representative : : : :

JOHN J. GLAVEY, New York representative for Broadwell Productions, Inc., a Boston Corporation, with Studios at Film-land City, Medford, Mass., where the Nick Carter two reel detective dramas are being produced, has had a long and interesting career in motion picture producing. His first engagement was with the Keystone Film company, as publicity man, scenario writer, then assistant to the manager of production Hampton Del Ruth.

Leaving Keystone, Glavey became production manager of Fox comedies, then Dramatic Editor and Assistant to Abraham Carlos at the Fox West Coast Studios. In New York he was associated with the Hallmark Picture Corporation, as assistant production manager, and wrote the continuities of "High Speed" and "The Veiled Marriage" released as famous directors pictures.

Becoming associated with Robert B. Broadwell, he was instrumental in obtaining the motion-picture rights from Street and Smith, publishers of the famous Nick Carter stories, and for his efforts in this matter, Broadwell signed him on a long term contract to represent Broadwell Productions, Inc. in New York City, and also to write the continuities and publicity for the Nick Carter series.

Glavey was born in Philadelphia, Pa., October 25, 1885, was educated there, and his first position was as a reporter with the Evening Telegraph. Having a love for military life, he joined the Army, and was honorably discharged at Laredo, Texas, where he married into the wealthiest family in the Lone Star State, afterwards going into Mexico where he engaged in newspaper work in Monterey and Mexico City. In the capital of the much disturbed country, he met the President of the National Lines of Mexico, and was induced to give up newspaper work and enter the service of the railroad company as Chief Clerk, which position he left to assume the management of a large mercantile corporation with branches throughout the Republic, and was quite satisfied with his position, until the constant revolutions which commenced in 1910, finally drove him for his health's sake, back to God's country, and he settled in Los Angeles, where he associated himself with Mack Sennet at the time when the King of Comedy was under the Triangle banner.

Mr. Glavey has read every one of the published Nick Carter stories, and can recite them off hand, so it is an easy matter for him to block out a Carter story in one day, make a synopsis and continue the next and prepare the script for immediate production. His first selection from the thousand and more stories to which the rights were obtained, was "The $100,000 Kiss" by Nicholas Carter, which is finished and ready for release. The second now in course of production and slated for a finish July 15 is entitled "Banknote I-A" while the third is in preparation for production July 16th under the working title of "The Mysterious Mail Robbery."

Glavey has established local offices in Suite No. 1115 Brokaw Building, 1457 Broadway, where he is supervising the publicity, advertising and exploitation of the Carter Series.

A New Production Center in East : : :

CREDIT must be given to Frank L. Jones, treasurer and general manager of the Mastercraft Photoplay Corp., whose foresight and careful management are said to have made possible the successful operation of the Mastercraft Studios.

Mastercraft Studios in "Filmland City," the Universal City of the East, is the newest producing center for motion pictures and bids fair to rival California, Florida and New York. Located a few miles from the city of Boston, in the outskirts of the charming city of Medford, Mass., in the heart of the wonderful Massachusetts State Park, it is the Mecca to which all New England lovers of the Gods and Goddesses of Shadowland journey to pay their homage of admiration and awe as they gaze on this newest city of the silent drama, nestling quietly on the banks of Silver Lake in whose sparkling waters many kinds of fish can be seen living a carefree and joyous life in the shadows cast into their haven by the studio buildings which adorn the banks of the stream.

Mastercraft Studios are reached by suburban trolleys from Boston, by auto along an excellent paved boulevard bordered with trees and plants, and if one cared to travel there by aeroplane, landing facilities have been prepared for that purpose.

Timbered with pine and maple trees, with a magnificent view of the surrounding country, the "city" covers about two hundred acres of land, and twenty acres of this property is covered by the studio buildings, consisting of administration buildings, laboratories, carpenter shops, planing mills, paint shops, machine shops, dressing rooms, all nicely equipped to provide comfort, both summer and winter, vaults for the safe storage of films, glass enclosed stages, dark studios, open air stages, and all the thousand and one adjuncts to the perfect manufacture of modern motion pictures. It was an artist who selected this spot in which to build a film city and a finer place cannot be found in all romantic Yankee-land.

Here in this ideal haunt of nature, with the soft zephyrs from the lake caressing the boughs and flowers of the trees and plants, Robert B. Broadwell, journeying from far western California in search of an eastern location wherein to produce a series of pictures calling for distinctly eastern atmosphere, discovered this city of cinemaland, and established here his newly found Broadwell Productions, Inc. And it is here also in this beauty spot of quaint New England that the first picture, "The $100,000 Kiss" of the famous Nick Carter stories, was made with Tom Carrigan as the shining star, assisted by his satellites, Mae Gaston, she of the "million dollar smile," that clever juvenile, Colin Chase, and Harry Keenan, as the heavy, all under the guiding hand of Director Major Robert Ross.

Upon entering the grounds of "Filmland City" attention is called to the administration building which is built a few paces from the gate entrance. In this building we find offices comfortably fitted and neatly arranged with every accessory required to carry on the business of a producer. These offices number eleven in all and include a sun parlor overlooking the lake. In this building the projection room has been provided for, and is not unlike a miniature theatre. The Administration Building being built of stucco work and possessing a large porch conveys the idea of a rich man's home, but on gazing northward the visitor is confronted by the studio with its towering glass peak and immediately the connecting link of studio and administration building becomes vivid.

To the left of the studio is the company's laboratory and it is said that the equipment here is capable of turning out 300,000 feet of film each week.

Following a macadamized road up a slight incline, the studio proper is reached, overlooking the lake and swept by cool breezes. From this point the outlying country can be seen for miles around. Eighteen large dressing rooms equipped with hot and cold water provide accommodation for actors and actresses. Provision has been made for increasing the number of dressing rooms should there be a call for more quarters. The daylight and dark studios are each 80 x 70 feet and capable of accommodating seven sets to each studio. The outdoor stage also has room for seven sets and measures 45 x 80 feet.

A fully equipped carpenter shop is one of the studio's appointments. In this portion of the building planing mills are found, and other necessary accessories for building sets, etc.

A fire proof film vault and cutting rooms fully equipped aid in making the Mastercraft Studios a modern working plant.

A beautiful view of the Mastercraft studios in Medford, Mass., which was taken previous to their completion.

GOLDWYN

AFTER two weeks at the coast studios Samuel Goldwyn left for the east on July 10th. While in the west Mr. Goldwyn viewed fourteen productions completed and ready for release and those have been shipped east for distribution.

The day before Mr. Goldwyn departed for the east the report he came current that Jack Pickford would leave the Goldwyn company upon the completion of the subject he is now working in, the film version of the George Ade play "Just Out of College." No announcement is made at the studios respecting Pickford's leaving but the fact that the report is correct was verified by officers at the producing plant.

Howard Dietz, director of publicity of the Goldwyn company, arrived at the coast studios this week to spend two weeks with J. Stewart Woodhouse, in charge of the studio publicity department, in going over matters preparatory for producing publicity, advertising, exploitation and presentation plans for future productions.

Director Frank Lloyd has completed "The Great Lover" and is now working with the scenario department in the preparation of the scenario for "The Concert" the Herman Bahr play and Director Harry Beaumont will begin filming the Rupert Hughes story "The Canavan" which will star Tom Moore. Clifford Robertson, casting director at Goldwyn, has discovered an ideal giant to play the part of Goliath in a vision scene of the death of Goliath at the hands of David for the sixth of the Biblical series "Edgar's Sunday Courtship" now being made by E. Mason Hopper. The giant is Frank Peter who stands six feet eight inches, weighs 280 pounds, was champion boxer of the navy for 1905-06, athletic director of the navy yards at Norfolk for several years and later sparring partner for Jack Dempsey, Jack Johnson, Jim Jeffries, Gamboat Smith and other notables of the squared ring.

two Mayer stars, Anita Stewart and Mildred Harris Chaplin, changes will be made and sets built at the studio for special productions to be made by Mr. Mayer. At the present time Virginia Norden is in New York getting options on a number of books and plays from which Mayer will make selection. "Old Dad" from the Elinor Howell Abbott story which stars Mrs. Chaplin has been completed and sent to the Rothacker laboratories for prints and the Anita Stewart film "Sowing the Wind" and the latest Mrs. Chaplin film "Habit" are now holding the attention of the Mayer Editing department.

Definite announcement is made by King Vidor that he will not produce the Clare Kummer stage play "A Successful Calamity" as his next contribution to First National. No selection has been made by Vidor.

The coast publicity department of the First National makes the statement that the first Holubar Phillips production for Associated First National will be the most expensive original story feature ever filmed. It is to consist of seven reels or more and producer Al Kaufman expects the subject will cost nearly a quarter of a million. The story is by Olga Linck Scholl and is now in the making at the Jasper Hollywood studios.

Marshall Neilan is making the final scenes for the initial starring vehicle of little Westley Barry, the most famous freckled face kid of the screen. The subject will be released under the title of "Dinty" and besides Barry the principals of the east are Colleen Moore, Marjorie Daw and Pat O'Malley. Neilan recently placed little Westley under a long term contract which is reported to provide that he shall receive $1,000 per week.

UNIVERSAL

THE Universal Company is building a new reinforced concrete electrical station near the big north stage which will make possible almost the doubling of their electrical equipment, thus making possible greater facilities for interior as well as exterior lighting effects. The new station will house four motor generating sets of 1600 kilowatt capacity and other equipment there will include the largest switchboard erected and installed west of Chicago. The switchboard is said to cost $30,000.

The magazine story "The Gilded Dream" by Katherine Robbins has been purchased by Universal and will serve as vehicle for Carmel Myers. Doris Schroeder is preparing continuity for this film play and production will be started shortly. Miss Kolb is the author of "In Folly's Trail" the film play just completed which starred Miss Myers.

A story of circus life is to be made at Universal by Director Reeves Eason and elaborate preparations for the filming of this are now being made. The story as yet untitled is by J. H. Giesy prepared for the screen by Philip Hurn. Gladys Walton, who was one of the leads in Lyons and Moran picture just completed, "La La Lucille," together with Jack Perrin will play leads in this subject and others selected are Dave Dyas, Rose Gore, Dan Crimmons and little Reeves Eason, Jr.

Universal City is daily expecting the arrival of Gertrude Olmstead from La Salle, Illinois, who recently won the Chicago Herald-Examiner Elks beauty contest and was placed under contract to appear in Universal films by Carl Laemmle.

The first work on "Foolish Wives" the next Von Stroheim Universal production was done this week at the exposition grounds at San Diego where replica of famous resorts in Europe were built and used against the natural woodland background found there.

Three companies are at work on short subjects: Jacques Jaccard is still at Little Bear Valley where he is filming "The Law of Average" with Virginia Faire and Leonard Clapham. Hoot Gibson with Leo Maloney as director and Dorothy Woods as leading woman is playing in "Grinning Granger" a comedy thriller and J. P. McGowan is making the final scenes for his first special "Below the Deadline" which has a cast headed by Eileen Sedgwick. Comedies now in the making include "Her Night Out" being directed by Horace Davie, "Uncle Tom's Caboose" being made by James Davis and "Cracked Wedding Bells" being directed by Fred Fishback with a cast including Bud Jamison, Merta Sterling and others.

The Lyons-Moran company have leased the use of one of the most beautiful residences in Los Angeles—that of Arthur Letts, the west coast merchant prince—where scenes for "Once a Plumber" are being taken. The residence and spacious grounds adjoining are said to be valued at $10,000.

BRUNTON

THERE has been a slight exodus from the Robert Brunton studios due to the Selznick Enterprises recalling their producing units to the east. General Manager Harry Rapp was the last to leave, he departing for New York July 4th. Olive Thomas is remaining in Los Angeles for a short vacation and will probably go east within the next ten days.

The Robert Brunton special all star production "The Devil to Pay" from story by Francis Nimmo Green has been completed by Director Ernest C. Warde, the cast being headed by Roy Steward, Robert McKinn, Fritzie Brunette and Joseph J. Dowling.

Director Roy S. Clements of the Dial Film Company has made the last scenes for "The Tiger Coat" with Myrtle Stedman, Lawson Butt and Tina Modatte which is to be released by Hodgkinson, and Clements has now gone to the White Mountains of Arizona to look over locations for the next production.

The first Allan Dwan production for Associated Producers is now being filmed. This is a romantic drama laid in New England with James Kirkwood and Mary Thurnham as principals. To secure proper atmosphere scenes for this drama, Dwan has sent Jack Wagner to Provincetown, Mass., to make a number of scenes.

Joseph Urban, for the past two years scenic artist for Flo Ziegfeld, following a wide experience with Klaw & Erlanger, has arrived at the Robert Brunton studio to design sets for the Marion Davies Cosmopolitan production "Buried Treasure" now being made under the direction of George Baker.

The "Double Adventure" serial company, being directed by W. S. Van Dyke, is spending a week at Daggett, California, securing desert scenes. Charles Hutchinson is featured in this serial together with Josie Sedgwick.

Upon his return he will handle personal publicity accounts. Irwin Lewis, who has been in charge of publicity for the Selznick organizations, following a long engagement at the Ince studios will succeed Chapman with Hampton organization.

Announcement is made in Los Angeles this week of the release of Betty Compton productions through the Goldwyn organization, the first of which will be "Prisoners of Love" about September 15th. This was filmed under the direction of Arthur Rosson who is now at work directing the making of the second Compton production as yet unnamed. Cast for second Compton production includes Emory Johnson, Doris Pawn and Gerald Fring.

VITAGRAPH

THREE companies are ready to begin production at Vitagraph studio. Earle Williams is to work under direction of Chester Bennett in "The Romance Promoters," an original photoplay by Harvey Thew. William Duncan and leading woman Edith Johnson are home from Denver where they were guests of honor at the Rocky Mountain Screen Club ball and are ready to begin work in the next fifteen episode serial, script for which has been received at the west coast studios—and Larry Semon is back from New York and is at work on an aeroplane comedy to follow "The Stage Hand" which was put in production by Norman Taugo co-director.

The Antonio Moreno "Veiled Mystery" serial company have returned from Truckee, California, and are now working at Chatsworth and the "Hidden Danger" serial company is this week having a big rodeo for the 12th and 13th episodes in which more than one hundred cowboys take part. Jesse Robbins, the director of big V serial comedies, has given Jimmy Aubrey a new role by dressing him up in a policeman's uniform for the next comedy which is now in the making.

METRO

COMPLETE cast has now been selected for the Alice Lake subject, "Body and Soul," being directed by Charles Swickard. W. A. Oramond has been cast to play the part of the hypnotist and Carl Gerard has been engaged for an important role. Marc Robbins and Hayden Talbot are authors of the screen version of the William Hurlburt play.

The all-star production of "Someone in the House," being by John E. Ince, will have Viola Vale as the leading woman. Edmund Lowe is playing the opposite lead, and a cast of well known people has been selected. One of the big scenes for this play is a pawnshop setting, and so many valuables have been put in this that an extra force of watchmen have been engaged to serve night and day.

Director Dallas Fitzgerald and members of the Viola Dana company filming "Blackmail" have returned from San Francisco, where yacht scenes were taken. Wyndham Standing is playing the male lead.

The third Jack London story production, "The Star Rover," has been completed by Director Edward Sloman. The leads of this are Courtney Foote and Thelma Percy.

Work of engaging players for "The Four Horsemen" has already been started and is proving one of the biggest tasks ever undertaken by the Metro casting department. The script prepared by June Mathis requires Belgium, German and French soldiers and scores of South American horsemen. Director Rex Ingram has selected Walter Mayo as his chief assistant and John Seites and Tom Storey will be in charge of photography.

SELIG

WILD animals are having their turn in the special feature comedy, "In For the Night." With much of the human action concluded in this famous stage farce, Colonel William N. Schie has turned his special attention to the periods of vivid incidents in which jungle beasts create tomforesy of fun in the production. Bengal and Siberian tigers, lions, leopards, pumas, bears and elephants are being used to cock up added fun to the special comedy.

With all the far-North locations "shot" for the powerful wolf dog story of "Kazan," the company now is doing the closeups and interior stuff of Curwood's most famous story. Thousands of feet of remarkable snow scenes and scenes among the wolf packs are being assembled to match the human story.

The Franklyn Farnum company has finished W. F. Wing's story "Riding the Winds" and is grinding up the second feature, "Andy of the Flying U," by B. M. Bower. This is one of the "Happy Family" stories and has to do with cowboy antics, hated sheep herders and romance. Editor Wing has inserted hundreds of feet of rollicking comedy and fast action in the screen adaptation. Genevieve Bette, the phenomenal rider, is supporting Mr. Farnum. Nate Watt is directing.

were but seven days that he and the company could work, due to the bad lighting and muddy water, to say nothing of the waves destroying his set on two occasions. This film is at present known as "Deep Water," and the lead is taken by Henry Woodward, a former swimming champion. Other subjects in productions at the Fountain studio are that of "The Tiger Lady," starring Hope Hampton, and another subject which has Max Linder as star.

HERE AND THERE

HENRY LEHRMAN, who recently returned from New York with a contract to produce a series of twelve comedies for First National is at work on the first of the series at his studio in Culver City, and it will no doubt be titled "The Kick in High Life." Al Ray, who was co-starred in Fox comedies, is playing the leading role in the first subject being made.

Maurice Tourneur, after eight weeks at Catalina Islands, has returned to Universal City to make interiors for the subject on which he is now working. In Catalina Island waters he made the submarine scenes near a sunken ship by means of building a concrete steel and wood set which was sunk in the bay. Considerable difficulty he felt the producer in making these scenes, for in the eight weeks there

READ STUDIOS

THE Stewart Edward White novel, "The Leopard Woman," has been put in production by J. Parker Reid, with Louise Glamm playing the title role and under the direction of Westley Ruggles. House Peters has been engaged to play opposite Miss Glamm in this subject. Particular attention is given to the atmosphere for this picture, and S. L. Lawrence, an author and world traveler, is serving as advisor for the technical department.

Hobart Bosworth is working with the Reid scenario department in the preparation of script for his next production. Rowland V. Lee has been engaged to direct Mr. Bosworth and J. O. Taylor will be in charge of photography.

Viola Dana, Metro Star, entertains Lieut. Locklear in her dressing room at the Metro studios.

Directors Not Given Credit

Vignola Urges That Exhibitors Realize Their Importance

THE director "the man behind the gun" of every picture has a grievance, according to Robert G. Vignola, whose special production of "The World and His Wife," made for Cosmopolitan, will be released soon by Paramount.

Taking up the cudgels in defense of his craft, Director Vignola asserts that the exhibitors, sufficiently speaking, do not give sufficient thought or credit to the man really responsible for the success or failure of a production—the director—and that ninety nine times out of a hundred the names of the maids, the butlers, the chauffeurs or the mob receive more prominence in the exploitation than the name of the director, which more often than not isn't even mentioned.

"We directors understand that basically the exhibitor is interested in the exploitation of names only as they affect his box office," said Director Vignola, "but where is there any monetary advantage in telling the world that the role of Fanchon, the maid, is played by Dottie Dimples? Admittedly there isn't, and we are, therefore, led to assume that it isn't always a case of money with the exhibitor; sometimes it's a case of giving credit purely for sake of fair play. All very well. But does the director come in for the same line of reasoning? He does not. Mind now, I'm speaking in generalities. I have no fault to find with the isolated exhibitor or two who realizes the value of the director's name in his exploitation and takes due advantage thereof.

"Only the other day I stood in the lobby of a certain big Broadway picture palace reading the displays. They had a big card in a frame giving the names of the cast, including those of the maid and butler characters. But nowhere was there any mention of the director. It would have been a very simple thing to have given him credit. In the past year I have done some traveling throughout the country, and wherever the opportunity afforded I examined theatre lobbies, but crediting the director for his work was a rare thing to find.

"Now this is a situation that works to the disadvantage of the exhibitor as well as the director. Within the past year or more there has arisen a feeling among fan magazines and other publications devoting space to the motion picture—that the director is a responsible factor in the making of pictures. Where he has made a good picture they have been quick to praise him, and where he has made a bad picture they have been as quickly quick to censure him. The result is that within the past year the public has been given a great deal of information about the director and have been told and shown why upon the director depends the success or failure of the picture more than upon any other element—story, star, or cast included.

"Why, then, doesn't the exhibitor take advantage of the exploitation value of the director's name? Why doesn't he take advantage of the publicity given the director in the fan magazines and let his patrons know who directed the picture he is showing? As a matter of business the public is far more interested in who directed the picture than in the fact that Dottie Dimples plays the role of the maid, appearing in three short scenes. Then, as a matter of fair play, the director should be given credit for his work.

"The director is the man behind the picture. He is like the general of the army, only more so. He furnishes the motive power that makes the production wheels go round. He manipulates the strings that make the actors move and the story develop upward towards a smashing climax.

"Give the director credit when he makes a good production. Post his name in your lobbies. Yet your patrons know who makes the pictures they like. The fan magazines do. Why don't you? It's good business, and, besides, it's fair play."

Robert Gordon Makes Personal Appearance

The first photoplay under the producing parentage of the Cayuga Pictures, Inc., which features Robert Gordon, is being filmed. The company is on location near Ithaca, N. Y.

At the Crescent theatre, Mr. Gordon was appearing on the screen in the Vitagraph picture, "Dollars and the Woman," with Alice Joyce, and being recognized by the management when passing the picture house, Mr. Gordon was stopped and requested to make a personal appearance, incidentally making a little talk on motion pictures.

Mr. Gordon complied readily, and scored such success that the Ithaca papers gave the young actor much valuable publicity.

George Sargent on New Vitagraph Picture

George Sargent, the director of the Vitagraph special features, "The Prey," starring Alice Joyce, and "The Whisper Market," with Corinne Griffith, has started a second production in which Miss Griffith plays the lead. The story is entitled "The Broadway Bubble," and in order to get the proper atmosphere Mr. Sargent has staged his big scenes at the corner of Broadway and 47th Street, and in an office in the Times Building.

Mr. Sargent, by arrangement with the Edison Company, succeeded in getting the lights on Broadway turned on an hour earlier one day last week so that he could "shoot" the length of "The Incandescent Lane" at its most crowded hour.

Clara Beranger on Way to Visit Europe

Clara Beranger, continuity writer under contract to Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, sailed for Europe last week on the White Star Liner Olympic. She will combine business and pleasure during her six weeks' sojourn in France and England. Miss Beranger will do some work during her trip abroad on an original story which, it is anticipated, will be completed by fall.

Legitimate Actor Is Best

Edward Hemmer Believes Stage Experience a Benefit to Screen

THE actor of the legitimate stage makes the best screen performer, according to Edward Hemmer, President of Hemmer Superior Productions, Inc. The organization's first play is rapidly nearing completion and will be ready for release very shortly. Mr. Hemmer was Mary Pickford's director and also started Jack Pickford on his road to success.

The director pointed out that picture producing in the past decade has made such rapid strides forward that many radical changes in the business of creating a screen drama have become necessary.

"In the old days," said Mr. Hemmer, "the artists were largely pantomime actors and the spoken word on the screen was not regarded as an advantage. But students of the business soon came to realize that skilful action taken together with dialogue did more to build up an atmosphere of realism than any other two factors. Of course this truism did not make itself manifest overnight. Years of constant study on the part of experts in the silent drama developed this revelation.

"Realization of this, however, was brought about quite by accident. When the motion picture game had been reorganized by big financial interests and had been placed upon a sound business basis it was decided to use stars of the first magnitude of the legitimate stage in productions upon which fortunes were spent. It was then that the director saw what an asset to the screen art the legitimate actor was. Whether the script called for lines or not the star of the spoken drama made up his own lines because that had always been his training and he knew that he could get better results."

Hollywood Welcomes Lulu Warrenton

Upon the conclusion of her work in "The Sin That Was His," in which Lulu Warrenton played an important characterization, the pioneer actress left for the Coast to attend to property and other interests. She found that being among those present on the Coast since motion pictures became an industry, then leaving for several months, very convincing of her popularity, according to the welcome received upon her return to Hollywood.

Mrs. Warrenton is a charter member of the Los Angeles Actors' Association, which, when organized, she was elected upon the Board of Directors, and appointed as one of the executive board. During her absence East, despite her refusal to act, she was re-elected to office unanimously.

Shannon Day to Appear in DeMille Picture

Shannon Day, former Ziegfeld Midnight Frolics' beauty, will appear in the next Cecil B. DeMille special production for Paramount. Miss Day has appeared in a number of screen comedies and quite recently took a "baby vamp" role.

Work on the forthcoming production will start within the week. The scenario is an original story by Jeanie Macpherson, the versatile authoress of many of Cecil B. DeMille's successes. No title has been announced for it yet.

What Makes a Screen Drama?

By Clara Beranger

Clara Beranger, who is to visit England on business for Jesse Lasky (Photo by Bachrach).

THE elements that go to build up a drama are essentially the same that enter into the making of a photoplay. Conflict, either within one person, or between several persons, and suspense as to the outcome of the conflict form the foundation upon which all drama is built. A play or a photoplay is interesting in proportion to the amount of suspense it contains and to the clever or working up of that suspense to a dramatic climax. Oftentimes, in a picture, photographic tricks, comedy bits, or scenic effects are added either for padding or for pictorial beauty; but these should not interfere with the dramatic progress of the story. If the drama is interesting enough these bits, although perhaps retarding the action, will not hurt it fundamentally; but the point to be emphasized is that just as the dramatist follows definite rules of dramatic action, so must the photodramatist. The characters must be planted; the action stated and started as soon in the play as consistent with clarity, and then developed with increasing complications and speed until the climax is reached at the end of the picture. It is not always possible to reserve the climax until the very end; but a cleverly worked-out denouement can be made to carry along the interest of the spectators.

There are some people who seem to be unable to rid themselves of the impression that the photoplay is a new art form—something to be continually experimented with, bounded by no definite rules of construction, all too easily adaptable to the caprices of star, director, or camera man. Fortunately, these people are in a rapidly dwindling minority. The screen is coming into its own; the day of the trick film, the flamboyant serial, the outlandish assortment of pictorial hokum which has so long been identified with the motion picture is slowly, but none the less surely, expiring. Pictures like the Barrymore version of "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde," and "Humoresque," herald the dawn of a new and sane era.

Of course, there will always be stupid, cheap pictures, I suppose, just as there will always be stupid, cheap plays; but as water eventually finds its own level, so will this class of pictures find its own public. The obvious triangle story, the little-child-shall lead-them theme, the innocent-country-girl-city-slicker yarn—all these, having their origin in the dim mists of antiquity, will probably run on forever, just as long as there is a demand for them from an indifferent, mentally sluggish public. On the other hand, we will have screen dramas of genuine dramatic power and sincerity, vivid transcriptions and interpretations of life; and when that time comes, there will be no middle ground between the pictures that amount to artistic achievements and those that are just plain—bunk.

To my mind, producers have not had this fact forcibly brought to their attention. Annually, from a perfect avalanche of mediocrity, we are able to pick out—if we're lucky—a meager dozen and a half productions that appeal to the intelligence. Out of a morass of sickly sentimentality, bromide philosophizing, and downright vulgarity, they shine like scattered stars in a murky sky. The trouble with a great many producers is that they are trying to work in only one medium—to find a common ground where the intelligencia and the low-brow element can congregate and chant paeans of praise to the great goddess Cinema. It simply can't be done. "Jane

First Novel of Newspaperman Filmed

Wilbur Finley Fauley is the author of the novel, "Jenny Be Good," in the screen version of which Miss Mary Miles Minter appeared recently at the Rialto. Mr. Fauley has been on the editorial staff of the New York Times for ten years. This is his first novel, and his second one is about ready to be delivered to his publisher. "Jenny Be Good" made its appearance June 20 in popular edition form, 10,000 copies first edition, which will be called a Mary Miles Minter edition. The McClure Newspaper Syndicate are serializing the story in the United States and Canada, and their agent sailed recently to place the story in serial form in countries girdling the world.

Candidates Are Chosen after Camera Tests

As the result of camera tests, conducted as part of the exploitation campaign of the Paramount-Ince production, "Below the Surface" starring Hobart Bosworth, two new "finds" are to be brought to the screen in Ince production. They are Miss Joey McCrery and William Beebe. Several hundred candidates appeared for the tests at Culver City and several days of camera work were required before any decision could be reached.

INDIANAPOLIS

Motion pictures may be presented as evidence, Judge A. H. Anderson of the Federal Court in Indianapolis has held. In the case of one manufacturer of a shock absorber for light cars, sued against another, charging infringement of patents, Judge Anderson ruled that "movies" showing the operation of the absorbers was admissible evidence, because the film is in reality only a series of stationary pictures, and "still" pictures have long been admitted as evidence. After the "show" the court decided the patents had been infringed.

Announcement of the intention of the United Exhibition Producers Corporation, the $1,000,000 Indiana Theater Holding and Film Producing League, to invade Indianapolis with a new motion picture theatre to equal the capacity of the truck and of the place the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation is to build next year has been made.

Simultaneously it was announced that the corporation has acquired the property of the United Exhibition Company in Indianapolis, which includes the Radio, Broadway and Gayety vaudeville and picture houses and the Foxwood picture house. Six theatres in southern Indiana have been acquired as well as a site for a new one in Bloomington. The Standard Amusement Company, of Crayfordville, which is connected with the new league, has taken over the Sipe, a legitimate house, at Kokomo, and is endeavoring to seat 1,500.

The Citizens Theatre Company has been authorized to raise a capital of $100,000 to erect a picture theatre in Brady, Ind. The directors are William M. Zeller, Sam Simon, Zeller and John A. Morgan.

An unusual demonstration of the fact that the public wants good pictures and will forgive all the shortcomings, even commencing with a regular cooling system and a first-class orchestra, and pay extra prices to see the pictures, is being given week after week at Babylon's theatre in Indianapolis this summer. Eugene Light's is a legitimate house playing Klaw and Erlanger road productions during the winter season. This summer Henry K. Burton, the Indianapolis theatrical agent, has leased the house and is presenting a summer show exclusively of Paramount Aircraft special productions.

DETROIT

Joe Optner has purchased the Lyric theatre in Mt. Clemens, and after alterations are completed will open it on the scheduled date being July 15. The house has 400 seats.

HARRY ROSS, former manager of the Paramount exchange in Detroit, will return to the city on August 1 as division manager.

A new wage scale between the operators and stagehands and all the Detroit theatres has been agreed to, to take effect immediately. The contract with the unions did not expire until September 1, but because of the close of the summer, a more moderate scale was agreed on. The union musicians have asked for such a large percentage of an increase that they and the theatres are at loggerheads, and it is possible that there will be no music in any Detroit theatres this fall.

After two attempts, safe robbers broke open the strong box in the Gladwin Park theatre last Tuesday night and secured $400 in cash. In previous attempts the robbers failed to get the safe open.

OKLAHOMA CITY

The organization of a branch of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, including exchanges and theatres in Oklahoma, Texas and Arkansas has been announced. The Oklahoma branch has been selected Thomas J. Baker, of Oklahoma City, president, Saul Havers, of Little Rock, Ark., first vice president, C. C. Mischelmann, of the Republic, of vice president, and Ross D. Rogers, of Amarillo, Texas, secretary treasurer. The branch has been capitalized at $250,000. Its headquarters is located at Dallas, Texas.

The Lynch-Hulse interests have purchased the Jefferson theatre, situated on Elm street, from the Jefferson Theatre Company, for $175,000. Operation under the new management began July 4. No change of policy is contemplated by the Lynch-Hulse interests.

The new Kozy theatre at 110 East Chicago avenue, McAlester, Okla., opened on July 3 with capacity business. "Polynanna" served as the initial feature. A pipe organ and air cooling system add to the attraction of the new house.

CLEVELAND

P. A. Block, who holds the reins of the Cleveland Goldwyn exchange, has loaned his office duties over to Assistant Manager W. J. Kiner, while he enjoys the vicissitudes of a two weeks' stay in New York.

I. B. Remy, special representative of Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, spent several days in Cleveland the first part of the week, showing the advanced fall styles in Goldwyn pictures to the local office force.

M. H. Horwitz, financial secretary of the Cleveland Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association, but better known as the chairman of the entertainment committee for the Association during the recent Cleveland convention, has added two more theatres to the three he already owns. Horwitz, together with Louis Israel, owns the Halmorth, Fountain and Globe. These are all east side houses. The recent acquisitions are the Amphion and the Southern, both large, modern high class first-run west side houses. Both of them are located on West 25th street. The Amphion and Southern formerly belonged to J. T. Sharp, a prominent local exhibitor, who has interests in several of the larger houses in the city. The deal is said to have involved $100,000. Bill One, salesman for the Standard Film Service for the past two years, will manage the Southern theatre for the new owner. The Amphion will continue under its present management.

C. A. Barbian of the Waldorf theatre, Akron, reports that, all theories about the much maligned war picture to the contrary, he has played "Whom the Gods Destroy"—a picture with a war theme—to big business.

Leon D. Netter, who has been general manager of the Masterpiece Film Attractions of Cleveland in a Rivoli theatre in Broadway, just beyond Fillmore, which he announces will open to the public on August 23. This is a week in advance of the original intended opening date.

Film Shipping Problems

Robert A. Foster, of Inter-Ocean, Talks on Transportation Problems

"TRANSPORTATION has always been an important factor in commerce," said R. A. Foster, office and transportation manager of Inter-Ocean Film Corporation in a recent interview, and will remain an important factor as long as the problems of convenience of raw materials to the source of manufacture, and the distribution of the finished product to the points of consumption are with us. And it seems absurd to say that the day will come when conditions will be such as to warrant the abolition of transportation. To the contrary, as each day passes, the position of transportation is reinforced and strengthened in the world of commerce; and in the recent World War was it not the efficient transportation of troops, food supplies, ammunition and sundry necessities, which spelled victory for the Allied forces?

"The transportation problem on motion pictures is well taken care of in the United States. Twenty-five exchange centers located in as many states are constantly in touch with the exhibitor in this country. In many centers, sub-exchanges have been established to meet the exhibitor's demands for quick and efficient transportation. And this service rendered by American motion-picture distributors is admirably supplemented by express organizations who fulfill their obligations in an efficient and punctual manner.

"But nowhere is the transportation problem so imminently important as in the export branch of the motion-picture business. Pictures purchased by the foreign film buyer and scheduled for release on a certain date in his particular territory must reach their destination in time for exhibition purposes; there is not and must not be any alternative. Failure to do this might probably result in the cancellation of a contract or the abrupt termination of service; and no chances must be taken. In this connection Inter-Ocean always adopts as a precautionary measure the shipment of films before the specified shipping date so as to insure receipt by the buyer in the event of accident or mishap."

dates are some way connected with Sol Lesser, who was also interested in the Masterpiece Film Attractions of Cleveland. George Jacobs takes full management of the Masterpiece offices in Cleveland and Cincinnati, following Mr. Netter's retirement.

BUFFALO

T. W. Brady, who formerly managed Republic in Buffalo and recently was sales manager of that company under the consolidation of the house with Select and National Theatre exchanges, has resigned to accept the Buffalo management of the Associated Producers office. He took up his new duties July 12 and is now seeking suitable quarters for the new exchange. Mr. Brady is well known in the Western New York territory, where he has been in the film business for many years.

The Gardiner Pictures, Inc., exchange of Buffalo, has been reorganized. The new sales manager is Jack Kirsch, former manager of the exchange. Formerly, T. R. Gardiner remains as president and general manager. Paul W. Smith, of Baltimore, is treasurer and assistant general manager. Dave Levy, formerly with Hallmark, Famous-Players and Pictures-Sales, is auditor, and E. J. Hamblit, office manager. The company is planning an aggressive campaign for the fall season.

City Judge Karl A. McCormick has handed down a decision in which he holds that the Loew's Buffalo Theatre corporation is entitled to a warrant for the arrest of the managers of the Loew's shop and other subtenants from the property in Main, between Genesee and Mohawk streets. The property was purchased sometime ago by the theatre corporation as the site for the new theatre. In February, 1916, the Golde Clothes shop leased the theatre for a term of ten years from the Moeller estate, then the owner of the property. A clause in the lease provided that upon sale of the property the tenant would be required to vacate on three months' notice. It was contended by the defendant that the clause in the lease was a personal agreement between the original parties and that when it was not invoked at the time of the first sale of the property it was void. Judge McCormick held that the clause in the lease ran with the land and could be exercised by an owner.

Harry Dixon, formerly manager of several Buffalo neighborhood houses and recently a member of the Realart sales staff, will manage the new Rivoli theatre in Broadway, just beyond Fillmore, which he announces will open to the public on August 23. This is a week in advance of the original intended opening date.

CINCINNATI

Phil Charnas, Standard representative, reports that L. J. Frickie will open a new house in Ironton with a seating capacity of about 500, on August 1.

The Wilson Film Company is handling a new educational feature which is known as the "Times Star Educational Pictures," produced by the Cincinnati Motion Picture Company in conjunction with the Cincinnati Times Star. The new educational depicts the industrial life and scene of the Queen City, the first one, released on July 1, showing Rookwood Pottery. There is no music on these pictures, which makes them excellent for fill-in use.

The local Goldwyn office was moved this week to the third floor of the Film Exchange Building, Pioneer and Broadway.

McMahon and Jackson will hold over "The Mollycoddle" for another week at the Grand. Mr. Jackson stated that the picture plays well with people in six days, the biggest business in the history of the house.

Harry Hunter has under construction a new house in Ironton which will be opened soon to play combined vaudeville and picture. The "big stuff" will be shown at the new theatre.

"Jimmie" and "Edie" Carrier, who the past ten months have been handling Selznick exploitation and publicity in the Cincinnati and Cleveland offices, respectively, have resigned from the Selznick enterprises.

in his supreme achievement

High and Dizzy

A Comedy Special

If this laugh-compelling sensation doesn't make your audience screech with delight then they are hopeless.

When Lloyd follows the sleep-walking lady along the high and dizzy ledge of a lofty building, audiences will alternately gasp with apprehension and thrills, and choke with unrestrainable laughter.

Two reels of constant mirth, amazingly fresh and original.

The exhibitor who shows this comedy will receive a vote of heartfelt thanks from his community.

HAROLD LLOYD

in the comedy special

HIGH AND DIZZY

"High and Dizzy" was directed by Hal E. Roach himself.

Mr. Roach has directed all of Lloyd's great comedies,—“Bumping Into Broadway,” “Captain Kidd's Kids,” “From Hand To Mouth,” “His Royal Slynness,” “Haunted Spooks” and “An Eastern Westerner.” He also produced the earlier one reel Lloyd comedies that are still spoken of as the greatest one reel comedies that have ever been made.

Now Mr. Roach has produced in “High and Dizzy” the best of them all.

A wonderful combination, this; Lloyd, the screen's most illustrious comedian, and Roach its greatest comedy director and producer!

Motiograph Users Are Always Boosters!

READ WHAT J. KISSWETTER SAYS:

Gentlemen:

It gives me pleasure to advise you that the De Luxe Model Motiograph I purchased from your firm two years ago is giving splendid service. It is with pride and pleasure I can state that we have had no shut-downs due to Machine troubles. The wonderful flexibility of the Motiograph enables an exhibitor to finish his show at any time he desires, high speed or low seems to make no difference, and this combined with a minimum expense of upkeep. In fact, there have been practically no repairs during the entire period of two years.

I can unhesitatingly recommend the Motiograph to be one of the best, if not the best machine, on the American market today and any one securing the Motiograph will surely make no mistake.

Wishing you success, I am, sincerely yours,

J. KISSWETTER,

Safety of Patrons Supreme Feature in "New Victory"

But This Is Only One of the Interesting Points About the Theatre

By Scott Leslie

Standing across the street and looking at the beautiful new Victory Theatre, one cannot help but swell his chest with pride in the fact that "his town" has put one over on the entire South, for it is without doubt the finest house in the Southeastern States. You are glad there are citizens here who have so much confidence in the future of the city, and the ability of the people to support such a house, that they will invest their thousands and give Tampa such a handsome and perfect theatre.

Standing there we just have to mentally compare this house with others that we have seen elsewhere. Let's see; there seems to be something lacking. What is it now? Oh; yes, it is the fire escapes. Why; on all the houses we can remember, we saw little metal ladders coming down the sides. There is none on the Victory. My goodness; can it be possible that they have neglected this most important feature?

So; we start right out to investigate, for we must not forget the slogan, "Safety First," in our new house. Yes; we investigate and we find that, like the suits of clothes in the Traveling Salesman's expense account, you can't see them, but they are there. You find that instead of neglecting any safety device, they have added many more than are usual, or required by law.

We step across now and are under the handsome marquee. The tile is beautiful and the color schemes delightful. We find it is all of the famous Rockwood Pottery make. We enter the auditorium which is beautifully lighted. Our glance is forced to the grand proscenium by the brilliancy of its lighting. Across the top is an immense American Eagle, with a spread of ten feet from tip to tip of its wings, and a shield of "Victory" across his breast. The lights fairly blaze at the center and gradually diminish in each direction. All lights in the house are concealed, the cove or indirect system of lighting being used, and it has all been so cleverly worked out that all the beauties of the interior are shown to the best advantage.

We are impressed with the width of the aisle's and see that there is plenty of "leg room" between the rows. There are fifteen hundred seats on the two floors, and every one of them is comfortable, with plenty of space for passing in and out, without disturbing those already seated.

Down here in Florida where we have nine or more months of summer, the greatest problem in theatre construction is the cooling system. The Victory owners have spent a great deal of money on this feature, and have a wonderful combination that will shower the audience with ocean breezes, or exhaust the air quicker than you can tell about it.

In the dome of the theatre is an immense grill. Above the grill are four monster typhoon fans. These can "hit on all four," or, if the mixture is too rich, they can work on one cylinder. These fans alone would be sufficient for any ordinary theatre, but this is not an ordinary theatre you know, so we find another complete cooling system concealed in the basement, as it were.

Directly under the orchestra pit, and running from one side of the house to the other, is a large tunnel. At each end of this tunnel are large fans, that can force the air into the theatre, or exhaust it. The tunnel is connected with two more that run up the two aisles, and all along the aisles are mushroom ducts, which "smear" the air all over the place, so you see there is small chance of a patron of the Victory ever becoming uncomfortable.

Heat is required so little in South Florida that most houses pay little, if any, attention to this feature, but it has not been overlooked in the Victory, and the house can be made comfortable in a very short time should the day be chilly.

I said at the beginning that the safety of its patrons was supreme at the Victory. It has been carried out to such an extent that it would be impossible to tell all about it in this article, for every place you look you find fireproof wall and automatic doors.

Let us start with the booth. This is a little separate building, in the building. It is divided into three rooms, each separated from the other by fireproof walls and automatic doors. You enter the rewinding room, then into the commodious operating room with its battery of projectors and spot lights, and on into the generator room. A complete switchboard is found here, so that all house lights can be controlled from the booth as well as from the stage, and so will not require an electrician on the stage while pictures are being used in the house.

The booth is at the back of the balcony. To the side is the grand stairway, and on down at each side of the house we find several exits. These exits lead to little outside balconies, but you do not have to make your way to the street by means of fire escapes. Instead of having to go down iron ladders you find real stairways have been provided. These are completely separate from the house by fireproof walls, and you pass down the stairway directly to the street.

An asbestos curtain has been provided to separate the stage from the auditorium. The gridiron is of steel. The scenery is all fireproofed. Three tiers of dressing rooms are provided on each side of the stage, and they are separated from the stage by fireproof walls and automatic doors. A fire might rage upon the stage, while the actors, in their dressing-rooms, could quietly dress and pack with no chance of the flames reaching them. The audiences are well protected by the asbestos curtain.

It looks as though no detail has been overlooked for the safety, comfort and convenience of the patrons. A beautiful rest room has been provided for the ladies at one end of the promenade, while at the other end is a smoking room for the men. Back of boxes, on the left side of the house, is a green room where the actors may meet their friends of the outside, without their having to go upon the stage. Bath rooms and showers have been provided in the dressing room sections.

The Victory was built by the Strand Amusement Company, who also own the Strand and the Bonita theatres here. Mr. C. D. Cooley is the general manager of the corporation and has made a remarkable success of the other two houses. The policy of the Victory is announced as "Only the Best."

The firm of Francis J. Kennard are the architects, with Mr. Frank A. Winn, Jr., in complete control of the construction. He deserves great credit for handing over such a perfect theatre, which is, and will be for years to come, the pride of Tampa, Florida.

A Man Who Has Built Up a Unique Business in the Industry

GIVEN a successful exhibitor seasoned by years of experience and wise in a full knowledge of the game, inject a heap-portion of keen analytical ability, stirring it well into a cool and collected mind, and then put the whole in charge of the retail stores of a large organization devoted to exhibitor service and you have Success—and George W. Armstrong.

Mr. Armstrong, blunt and hearty, ready to do his share well in fight or frolic, by temperament preferring the frolic, has just returned from a Western trip, during which he took over for The Argus Enterprises, Inc., of Cleveland, Ohio, the four stores of the Swanson Theatre Equipment Company, located in Denver, Omaha, Salt Lake City and Des Moines.

Mr. Armstrong, or George as you call him, a few moments after his hearty handshake, has the only too rare but happy faculty of combining business with pleasure and getting the utmost out of both. His trip through the West has been a marvel of down-right efficiency and yet he refers to it as a vacation.

The Swanson Theatre Equipment Company had been in business for a long time. In some manner, Mr. Armstrong, who is the General Retail Sales Manager of The Argus Enterprises, Inc., learned that a purchase might be arranged which would add an additional four to The Argus chain of stores. After the usual preliminary negotiations, he headed West to purchase inventory and start off anew under the Argus policy, the entire Swanson aggregation, and he did it, thoroughly, taking just about five days to a store.

Mr. Armstrong's work is rather unique, in that it incorporates education in a decidedly advanced idea of selling. Aside from injecting the Argus spirit into his men, he had to go very thoroughly into the Argus method of handling the Theatre Owners' problems. No one but a Theatre Owner can have any real conception of

BECAUSE we knew, in a way, of the unusual work he was doing and because we thought other theatre managers would be interested to hear about it, we asked a friend of Mr. Armstrong to describe the man and his work. The story isn't complete but it will provide a few thoughts for other supply houses.

Armstrong (left) is illustrating the Argus grip the difficulties, delays and disappointments encountered, to say nothing of unlooked-for expense.

Where a building or remodeling is necessary, the prospective exhibitor's first thoughts are for the Architect. After putting the problem up to the Architect, he finally receives a set of plans and estimates, which call for no little outlay, but determined as he is to get in the game, he lets the contract and as has been noted in a great many instances, very often finds he has neglected to figure on the interior equipment which he must have before he can operate. More expense. Finally, when his theatre is ready for the public, he generally learns that the figure which he originally hoped to spend has been almost doubled.

The Argus works in a different manner. It starts at the inception of the desire to operate a Motion Picture Theatre. Mr. Armstrong and his men commence work with an Architect, of the Builder's choosing, if he so desires, and obtain from him an estimate and plan, based on sound knowledge of the peculiar Architectural requirements necessary. Then to that estimate are added the various specifications needed to completely equip the theatre. These specifications incorporate everything necessary and include those lines of equipment for which the Builder may have expressed a preference and which have proven applicable.

Finally, before the Builder has spent a cent, he is submitted a complete and thorough prospectus which has taken care of everything from the sign over the front door to the knob on the back door. He is shown the cost. If he approves, he may forget the entire business until the day on which he is informed that he may open the doors of his theatre to the public. That day, he will find that not only has the estimate been maintained, but that his theatre is absolutely complete, even to tickets, and exceptionally modern throughout.

That, as outlined by Mr. Armstrong, is the Argus idea of service and solution of the Theatre Owners' problems. Mr. Armstrong declares that the Argus Company owes and assumes a responsibility to each of its customers, which is maintained just as long as that customer's name remains on the books of the Argus Company.

One Exhibitor Says:

"Long before I commenced my new theatre I had been collecting the articles, plans, suggestions and photographs appearing in the Equipment Section of the NEWS. You will find many of your ideas in my new house."

Electro-Magnetic Induction

As has already been stated wherever there is an electric current there is a magnetic field, so that it may be stated that an electric circuit possesses the property of producing and maintaining a magnetic field. This property is called magnetomotive force. The strength of magnetic field depends upon the strength of current and the permeability of the medium in which the magnetic field is set up.

The field about a straight wire in air is comparatively weak while that on the inside of a solenoid containing an iron core makes up the most powerful electromagnets. A solenoid is a long coil of wire the length of which is great as compared to its diameter. The field intensity on the inside of a solenoid is given by the following equation:

$$H = 4 \pi N I$$

where H is the field strength in gauss; N the total number of turns on the solenoid; I the current in amperes, and L the length of solenoid in centimeters.

In cases where it is desired to have an electric circuit without producing a magnetic field this circuit is wound noninductively as shown by the accompanying illustration, Fig. 55. Since the direction of the magnetic field about a wire depends on the direction of the current, the fields of the two currents flowing in opposite directions oppose each other and will neutralize if these wires are wound closely together. The two wires are wound in a single coil being doubled back on each other as shown, such a coil having no perceptible magnetic field and is said to be Non-Inductively wound. This method is made use of in the construction of measuring resistances as used in the Wheatstone bridge.

The magnetomotive force of a coil carrying a current is known as its magnetizing power. When a current passes around a coil several times the magnetizing power is proportional to the strength of current and the number of turns in the coil. The product of the current in the coil and the number of turns composing the coil is called the ampere-turns. The magnetizing power of the current is independent of the size of wire, the area of the coils, or their shape, and is the same regardless of whether the turns are near together or far apart.

A magnetic circuit is similar to an electric circuit in that there is a magnetic resistance in a magnetic circuit which opposes the magnetic flow. This magnetic resistance is called Reluctance. As in an electric circuit the current is equal to the electromotive force divided by the resistance, so in a magnetic circuit the magnetic current Φ is equal to the magnetomotive force divided by the reluctance. This is expressed by the equation:

$$\Phi = M R$$

When Φ equals magnetic lines, M equals magnetic pressure, and R equals magnetic reluctance.

It is impracticable to magnetize a piece of iron beyond a certain flux density, called the Saturation Point. Iron may be magnetized beyond the saturation point but for very small increases in flux density there must be a larger increase in magnetizing force. The magnetization curve for a piece of wrought iron is shown by the sketch, Fig. 56.

The important feature to be considered in the design of an electrical machine is that there is a certain flux density known as the saturation point beyond which it is possible but not practicable to carry the magnetization.

FIG. 56. MAGNETIZATION CURVE OF SOFT IRON

As in the case of the induction coil, it is seen that when an electric conductor cuts a magnetic field an electric pressure is induced in the wire tending to cause a current to flow. The strength of this induced voltage is proportional to the rate of cutting, the direction of it has a definite relation to the direction of the field and to the direction of the motion.

If a coil of wire is connected in series with a galvanometer as illustrated by Fig. 57, a deflection of a galvanometer needle can be produced by thrusting a magnet in and out of the coil. When the magnet is thrust into the coil the needle will be deflected in one direction and when the magnet is withdrawn the needle will be deflected in the opposite direction due to the reversal in the direction of cutting of the lines of force. Also if the magnet be turned end for end the galvanometer needle deflection will be opposite to those of the first case. Should the number of turns of wire which go to make up the coil be increased or decreased there would be an increase or decrease in the E. M. F. induced in the winding and therefore a change in the amount of deflection of the needle.

If a single conductor as shown by Fig. 57 be connected with a galvanometer and moved into the field of a magnet, an E. M. F. will be induced as shown by the galvanometer as a conductor moves into the field. When the conductor is stopped the galvanometer will return

Should the conductor be moved very slowly to zero, showing that no E. M. F. is produced without motion, thus it is always necessary that conductor actually cut magnetic lines of force in order to produce an induced current.

If the conductor which was passed downward through the magnetic field in the first case be passed upward, an opposite deflection will be observed, showing that the direction of induced E. M. F. is dependent upon the direction of motion.

across the magnetic field the needle would not have as great a deflection as when the conductor is moved more rapidly, thus showing that the amount of induced current is dependent upon the rate of motion.

From the above discussion it is seen that the induced E. M. F. in a circuit is dependent upon the following factors:

The direction of current is dependent upon the direction of motion.

The E. M. F. induced is dependent upon the rate of motion, the more rapid the movement the greater the E. M. F.

The E. M. F. induced is dependent upon the strength of the field, namely; the number of lines of force per square centimeter.

The angle of movement through the magnetic field the greater E. M. F. being induced when the direction of motion is perpendicular to the magnetic field.

The length of wire actually in the magnetic field, the greater the length of wire in the field the greater the E. M. F. induced.

(This article completes the preparatory study. The generation of electricity will commence with the next issue.)

POWER'S PROJECTORS

The letters we have received from leaders in the film industry, Producers and Exhibitors, have attracted widespread and highly favorable attention. We shall continue to publish such letters, not in a spirit of boastfulness, but as incontrovertible evidence of the claims we make for Power's Projectors.

In Spite of His 30° Angle of Projection This Man Puts on Excellent Productions

Jacob Schillen Makes Up in Skill What Theatre Architect Lacked in Forethought

It is not the intention of this article to enter into the relations between projections and manager. But it can be said with fair accuracy that as the financial consideration of the latter has been increased both the exhibitor and public have profited thereby. Along this same line of thought it may be noted with considerable satisfaction that as the industry has advanced there is evident a great improvement in the personnel in charge of projection. This personnel, of course, at the present time includes many who have been in the business for a long while. With the altered mental attitude of the whole world regarding the status of films, has also come a change in the projectionists viewpoint regarding the importance of his work. Carelessness and ignorance, of course, are still found in some rooms, but the projectionist who estimates the importance of his job solely from the standpoint of salary increases he can dig out from his manager receives little sympathy. As a body of men, however, the majority of projectionists take a sincere and intelligent interest in their work.

Jacob Schillen, who is in charge of projection at Fox's Theatre, Jamaica, New York City, has been an operator for twelve years and is a good example of that class of operators who have grown with their opportunities. Schillen tells us he "drifted" into operating from the electrical manufacturing industry and took up the work as a "novelty." His experience in the electrical field was a great help to him, but with such training he had not planned to remain an operator.

Fortunately for all concerned the work held him and for ten years he has been sent wherever Fox needed a good, dependable man. He is a member in good standing of that merry band of projectionists which has been gathered by C.

W. Johnson, Chief Projectionist of the Fox circuit.

He was one year at the Studio, six at the Folly, one at the Audubon, one at the Comedy and one year at Jamaica. Twelve years he has been operating Power's and is a Power's enthusiast. He now operates two new Power's 6Bs and says, "I can operate them in the dark." This is not necessary, for if ever there was a well-lighted booth, Schillen has that one.

Architects and managers have also learned that it pays to provide a good, properly located booth. In this instance the architect has given a location which for light and ventilation can hardly be surpassed, but the throw and angle could have been considerably improved. With a throw of 130' and an angle of 30 degrees, we cannot speak in praise of the architect's work, and it looks as if the excellent projection provided in this theatre is a happy combination of Schillen, the projectionist and Power's the projector.

A door of the booth faces the East opening on to the roof and two big windows face South, giving the room ample ventilation and enough light to permit the taking by daylight of the photograph accompanying this article. In addition to these features an open air show in an adjoining lot affords Mr. Schillen and his assistant, Mr. George Henning, a little amusement from time to time.

The pulleys shown in the photograph are attached to fire shutters which can be released by hand with one quick movement, or are released automatically if a fire occurs in the booth. This shutter closes all openings from the booth into the theatre whenever this is necessary. A Martin rotary converter is a part of the equipment in this booth. The Fox Theatre in Jamaica has a seating capacity of about 2,500.

Now Using Arc but Wants Mazda

A LETTER from H. L. T., of Old Forge, N. Y., asks several questions regarding arc incandescent operation:

I am operating a Powers Motion Picture Machine with 110 A. C., 60 Cycle, with rheostat connected, throwing a picture, at present, 60 ft., size 9 ft. x 12 ft. I expect to increase the throw making it about 75 ft. or 80 ft. What advantage will I derive by using a Hallberg Alternating Current Electric Economizer? Can I use two machines with one Economizer, by having a double throw switch? Would this interfere with light on screen at change of reel from one machine to the other?

What carbons and size should I use to get best results with above current? National Special A. C. Carbons $\frac{3}{8}$ in. have been highly recommended to me.

Would a Project-a-Lite outfit, which I could install in present arc lamp house, give me good results at 75 ft. to 80 ft. throw, size 9 ft. x 12 ft. picture? In using a Project-a-Lite outfit would I have to install a transformer for reducing line current? How does this outfit compare with an Excelite Lamp House and would I get a better picture with either of these outfits than by using my old arc lamp outfit on 110 A. C. 60 Cycle with rheostat or Hallberg Economizer?

Reply: You will derive considerable advantage by the installation of an Economizer or Compensarc. Your present combination of alternating current and rheostat is about as unsuitable as you could make it. Assuming that you are now using 45 amps. A. C., at 40 volts you are consuming 1,800 watts at the arc. But you are drawing from the line 4,950 watts. In other words you are dissipating 3,150 watts in your rheostat which means that you are paying for that amount of current and getting nothing from it. With a transformer of some sort you would save 80 per cent of this loss. You can figure for yourself that at this rate it would not take you long to pay for some controlling device.

In addition to the above financial advantage you will get better arc regulation with a transforming device.

You can use one Economizer or Compensarc with two machines but it will be necessary to "steal the arc" at changeover periods. This will interfere slightly with the light on the screen and will be noticeable to the audience. A better way is to have two transformers even though the first cost is a bit more.

The carbons you mention are satisfactory for your use providing you are using about the amperage we have assumed.

Your question regarding the possible use of Mazda cannot be answered with surety without knowing more of your plans and present conditions. The Projectalite equipment has given excellent satisfaction according to all reports but whether it would give you as good results as your arc with your screen and other items to contend with is a problem that must be answered by someone acquainted with your layout. There are a large number of incandescent installations in operation where the size of the screen and the throw are similar to yours. Offhand we believe you could get just as satisfactory results with the incandescent as with your present alternating arc layout.

The firm making the Projectalite equipment supplies a very fine transforming device for the purpose you mention. This device takes the line current and reduces it to the current demanded by the illuminant in use.

A Real Automatic Arc Control

The Peerless Automatic Arc Control is made for use on all projectors having direct current at the arc. The device is so sensitive that less than one sixty-fourth of an inch increase in gap will start the motor and bring the carbon back to the proper position. Operation is so slow and delicate that the carbon movement is not noticeable to the eye.

Practically frees the operator from giving any attention to the arc, and enables him to attend to other duties. Durable made of best materials. Can be adjusted to maintain any desired arc gap.

From Alaska

C. PAULSON who hails from the Northwest extremity of the continent writes from the town of Kotikhan.

Have been reading the News for quite a while now, and am very interested in your department.

I started in to learn operating in Sweden in 1907 and had three theatres to look after. We also had a small film exchange. I had full charge of everything the last two years I was there, when I left Sweden I went sailing for a couple of years and in every place and country I came to I always took in the shows and was always interested in projection. I always butted in to see the operator and believe me I saw many kinds of projections, but on thing I never saw before I came to this country, and especially in Alaska, was punch holes.

It is a shame the way they send films up here, and believe me some films are BAD. Am sending you just a little film to show you what I call bad, but I suppose you are just swamped with chippings, so I won't send much. There is one spite that I get quite often, and say it is lots of fun to unroll every picture before running or even dare to run through a machine. Some pictures are punched both at start and end of each reel, and that sure makes a feller disgusted. We have a new manager here now. It is the third one since I started here last fall (in Sept.). The other two appreciated every little thing I did in the way of improvements, but this one don't.

I would like to join the N. A. M. L. as I think it is a very good thing to keep up. Am sending in the pledge and if you will please let me know the requirements and the price, I will send it by return mail.

Manager Takes Sides With Projectionist

R. S. WENGER, a successful manager of the Victory theatre in Union City, Ind., is interested in something besides the booking of this and that feature. He recognizes that his projectionist is a valuable part of his business and takes an interest in his problems. This is what he says:

Regarding the discussion on poor projection, I don't have any trouble at all with my projectionist, as I get good films. Some time ago I ordered some pictures from First National, and told the salesman to write on the contract, "Must be good films." When I got the first one it came without title and we had to work a long time to get it straightened out. It had no less than ten misframes—otherwise in good condition. The next day I was at the exchange and told the manager of the inspection department that we could not use such films and asked him if they were inspected. He said, "It is your operator's business to cut out the misframes—not ours."

Lapses with the article on Page 4998 of June 19th issue of the News that the exchanges are the cause of most poor projection.

Comment: When, oh when will the time come that more managers will take the same interest in their employees' work. Here is a man who when he found out the condition of the film coming from the exchange did more than merely order the "operator" to "fix it up the best you can." This manager went direct to the seat of the trouble and found out just why the films were in such poor condition.

The Technical Department of MOTION PICTURE NEWS is now working with several exchanges with a view to superseding present identification marks with something more suitable and less destructive. As soon as some tangible progress can be made the readers of the Projection Department will be told about it. Meanwhile more success to Mr. Wenger and his kind.

Motiograph Sales Continue

Proof that the warm weather has not slowed up the sale of projectors, is contained in reports coming in from distributors and representatives of Enterprise Optical Company in all parts of the country, according to General Manager O. F. Spahr. Ira Jackson, representative for the Enterprise Optical Company in the Ohio and Michigan territory, who was visiting in Chicago last week, brought word that on his last trip to Toledo, Ohio, he sold twelve Motiographs de luxe and then stopping off for a couple of hours in Detroit, signed a contract with Bert Williams, manager of the La Salle Garden, which will be one of Detroit's premier houses when completed in August, to install a battery of Motiographs. Three de luxe machines were recently put into the Broadway-Strand in Detroit and are giving very satisfactory service.

A Vague Question

Mr. George H. Robbins, of Keene, N. H., writes as follows:

Why can't I get a better picture than I do get? I am using 52 amperes and about 50 volts D. C. My picture is not as bright as it should be. I have a 73-foot throw.

REPLY:

If in addition you had told us your screen size and kind of screen, the type of converting apparatus used and the carbon set, we might have been able to help you. But with only the facts given there is no use in our attempting to give an answer. It would only be guesswork. Surely with 52 amperes—other things being normal—you should get all the light desired. Send in the rest of the data and we will endeavor to help you out.

New Method of Lens Testing

Volume II, Number of the Journal of the Optical Society of America, just out, describes an interesting method of lens testing in a paper by Mr. L. E. Jewell which appeared originally in a communication from the Eastman Kodak Company's Research Laboratory. The method as described by the author makes use of geometrical figures placed upon a chart in such a manner that the degree of sharpness of the lens at any angle from the axis of the lens is shown when the chart is photographed. Explicit instructions are given for those who may desire to carry out the tests for themselves.

Reviews of Recent Additions to Camera Literature

Two Excellent Books That Will Fill a Long Felt Demand

*CONDENSED COURSE IN
GRAPHY*, by the New York Institute of Photography, edited by Carl
Louis Gregory, F. R. P. S., New Rochelle, N. Y. 382 pp.

RUMORS have been current for some months that Prof. Gregory was at work on "a real book on Motion Picture Photography," and at last the rumors have been substantiated by the actual appearance of his effort. It is not a difficult book to review for the reason that it stands alone, in a class by itself. A review of it simply demands the indiscriminate use of superlatives, for let it be known here that the book is far ahead of any other connected in any way with the industry. It is the book the world of motion picture technical workers have been waiting for—and the result is not disappointing.

In editing the book, Prof. Gregory has been exceedingly wise in not attempting to "bite off the whole chunk," although he is perfectly capable of so doing had he wished. But to give the volume a variety of color and a change of style he has seen fit to call in experts on certain of the subjects. This tends to give the book even more value as an authoritative treatise.

Within its covers practically every subject with which the cameraman—be he amateur or professional—comes in contact has been treated. To enumerate them all here would be folly besides destroying much of the pleasure to be found in reading it.

The book commences with a History of Cinematography—a chapter that goes back to the time of Ptolemy, A. D. 130. When one notes that motion pictures may have been a possibility at that time he is led to wonder that such a valuable and ponderous industry could have progressed up to the present time without a book of the type of the one under discussion. But that is aside from the subject.

Other chapters are The Nature of Light, Cinematographic Lenses and Focusing the Camera. The latter chapter alone is worth the price of the book. Although it may appear rather vague to the outsider, this section contains a hint of invaluable information that the author has collected from experience.

The chapter on "How to Prepare Photographic Solutions" was written by Mr. J. I. Crabtree of the Eastman Kodak Company and covers the subject in a most thorough manner.

Following this come chapters on The Negative, The Positive, Tinting and Toning of Film, Cutting and Editing. Lighting effects are covered by well-written treatises, that of "Interior Lighting" having been prepared by Mr. Wm. Roy Mott, whose article on Studio Lighting appeared serially in the News some time ago.

It would not be fair to bring the review to a close without specific mention of the chapters on Cartoons, Trick Work and Double Exposures, Airplane and Submarine Photography. Many paragraphs could be written on each of these, but space prevents an attempt here. So full of meat, however, is each separate section that a digest would accomplish but little. They must be read to be appreciated.

And in conclusion, evidently with a view to making his remarkable book complete, Prof. Gregory has added a very valuable chapter which he calls "Relationship of the Cameraman to Other Workers," but which might more properly be given the title of "How to place your (the cameraman's) occupation on the plane it deserves." The broad rules and gentle hints found in this chapter form some of the most delightful reading in the volume and if followed out would certainly have an effect on the role of cinematographer.

An Appendix and a Bibliography conclude the book. The former describes the making of direct positives, recovery of silver, composition of various chemical mixtures often used by cameramen, and helps for photography under climatic difficulties. The Bibliography may be dismissed with the simple statement that it is nearer 100 per cent complete than any one heretofore prepared.

The Condensed Course will be a worthwhile addition to the library of any worker in the motion picture industry.

ORGANIC PHOTOGRAPHIC DEVELOPERS, by Samuel Wein,
Forty-second Street Commercial
Studio, New York, N. Y. 128 pp.

IT is no simple task to attempt to correlate all the information regarding a subject such as Organic Photographic Developers, but the author of this book has had the persistence to do it. The book as finally received a few days ago is ample testimony to the amount of work and the diligence required.

Mr. Wein has sought to pick up from stray corners of libraries such information about developers as he could find and to arrange the data thus secured in an orderly manner so that the laboratory worker who may wish to go deeper into the subject may have something as a ground work. In his attempt Mr. Wein has been successful.

There are three main chapters in the volume. The first consists of a resume of German, British and American patents covering developers. In each case, beside the inventor the author of the book has supplied the patent number and the date of issue. In addition he has in many cases given one or more examples of the derivation of the patent under discussion which makes this section of unusual value to the experimenter.

The second chapter is titled "Dye Sensitizers" and the procedure is much the same as in the preceding section. The inventor, patent number and date of issue are supplied in the case of each sensitizer, besides the method or derivation.

Chapter three takes up the Physical and Chemical Characteristics of Developers, and supplies tests by which the laboratory worker may keep tabs on the chemicals supplied for use.

The book also contains an exceptionally fine survey of all developing solutions in common and uncommon use, some twenty-eight in all. Factorial development is explained and a few working examples supplied.

A section is given on Bleaching and Intensification and one on Toning. The correct methods to use in making and developing direct positives are explained and their sources given. Finally, the reader is shown the value of Silver Recovery.

This book will accomplish what its author set out to do, viz., to supply the laboratory technician and chemist with a compact review covering practically all the operations carried out in motion picture laboratories. For this reason it will be invaluable to such workers.

What is a Cameraman?

By FRED W. JACKMAN

What is a cameraman and what part does he play in motion pictures? Is he a personification of the algebraic quantity that is unknown, or is he a cinematographer in flesh and blood and really human?

To judge by his frequent representation in the "spoken drama" a cameraman is a cross between a stevedore and a stew-bum—a belated exhibition of a Caveman's disposition in the form of an uncouth vulgarian. Thus he has been exhibited on the stage threatening the lives of still more stupid heroines and silly heroes, and thus also he has been revealed in certain widely read articles on the activities of motion picture folk.

Of course the public mind is abused by such representations—or rather by such misrepresentations, because the public never sees the cameraman. The players, the producers, the directors and the exploiters of pictures come before the people and are known by all; the cameraman is unseen, unheard—and unsung! He is the victim of a fictitious infamy manufactured by fictionists whose desire for "copy material" exceeds their zeal for truth.

The actor, moreover, plays the part assigned him; the script allows him but limited latitude of personal judgment. He must represent himself to be the kind of a creature the author of the story has assigned him the job of portraying. The director consults the same sources, and is the intermediate agent between the actor and the author—it is the cameraman who gives the product to the public! He is to the picture what the director is to the author—the mouthpiece, the interpreter and the spokesman.

How little is known of the cameraman! Yet he is the key-player in the drama of the screen. It is he who puts the completed work upon the screen, who adjusts the "tempo" of the action to suit the spirit and significance of the scene, who determines the "tone" of the picture so that it shall be in photographic harmony with the story and not contradict its impressions; it is the cameraman who is relied upon in a pinch to deceive the beholders regarding such vital statistics as the age of the heroine and the wrinkles or double chin of the hero, and who handles the most complicated mechanism known to art, to the end that its registrations be at once natural and artificial, true and idealized, real and glorified.

Can it be that such a man is correctly represented in (for example) Raymond Hitchcock's musical melange "Hitchy Coo"? Is he really red-nosed, whiskey-soaked, vilely dressed, and of German characteristics at their worst? Or, is he like the cameraman in Bob Wagner's Saturday Evening Post stories—an illiterate ex-chauffeur of dubious ability, who, because he couldn't serve society acceptably as a chauffeur, considered himself qualified to become a cameraman, and did?

The writer has no intention of standing aloof and throwing posies at his own profession; he does, with all the emphasis at his command, insist that caricatures of the profession be accepted as caricatures and not as portraits, and that the dignity that attaches to an honest, difficult service be attributed to his employment, which is more of an art than a job.

In this age of specializing, the cameraman finds that he too must be a specialist if he is to achieve a notable success. So different are the aims, the methods and the effects of the comedy producer from the producer of drama or spectacle, that the cameraman, to keep pace with his art, must devote himself not to all classes of picture productivity but specialize in one, feeling sure that he will have a life's job ahead of him to master all the technicalities and possibilities attaching to but a single branch of the marvelous business of recording humanity's follies and foibles, passions and sentiments on celluloid films.

The successful cameraman of today must be a highly trained specialist, a photographer plus. Personally, I do not know a single cameraman occupying a position of importance in any studio that has not spent much midnight oil and mental energy to achieve his position. In the activities of Mack Sennett, whose position in the world of motion photography is sufficiently established to warrant my pride in being connected with his studios in the capacity of Chief of his Camera Department, the cameraman is a functionary of genuine importance, standing in the eye of the boss and recording everything for his supervision, constantly alert to the fact that he is specializing in comedy and boisterous farce, and operating accordingly—for the cameraman's sensitiveness to tempo will often be the measure of the success of the picture.

In this connection, I take opportunity to say that the AMERICAN SOCIETY OF CINEMATOGRAPHERS is worthy the notice and respect of the artistic world, and is doing much to elevate the cameraman's estimation of the value and importance of his duties. There is in existence an organization, with a union charter, which seeks to estimate the art of the cameraman at the level of unskilled labor and thus to place a standard wage as the measure, discouraging to individual effort. It is, however, the policy of the American Society of Cinematographers to educate the public in the opinion that a wide range of difference exists in the results of cameramen. There is the beginner, the tyro, the student, the expert, and the indifferent operator, who finds his level—in the union! It is no more possible to regulate the value of cameramen that it is to appraise the works of writers, artists, sculptors or musicians.

By Charles D. Isaacson

(Author, "Face to Face with Great Musicians")

THE News Service is the first definite attempt to provide any motion picture theatre with a plan of operation in music. It is based on the successful experiments which have been made in the recognized houses of the country, and is the result of my daily contact with crowds of people in my concert work in New York City, where over two million people in four years have been brought into crowded halls, eager to hear music.

The News Service is based on the attitude of the publishers of this magazine. They have engaged me, as I pointed out last week, to "go the limit in doing my job" and nothing that's at all reasonable and necessary will be foregone to see it through.

Already my correspondence for the News has become an important element in the daily work. I find that in every section of the country, the exhibitors are eager to take advantage of the opportunity that is put before them.

Some managers who have been running music in a splendid way, have sent me their programs, and have said "Please criticize and show us how we can get more out of our musicians."

Others have said, "We don't know just how to begin. What would you recommend as the starting point?"

One letter said, "I am just about to close with a gentleman who is to become my musical director. How can I tell if he's just the right man for the job? I have no way of testing him."

One man called on the telephone to say, "If you can send me a good musician I will put him to work."

Several letters ask for expert advice on the purchase of instruments. One very interesting letter asked for the right slant in making a musical library.

One gentleman, well known in the West, said, "I want to do this music business up brown—I should like to put on a series of events with big stars. What can you suggest?"

Many have said, "Just what will the News Music Service consist of. Give us the details." Answering this question alone will be the business of this week's installment.

The News Music Service will furnish a multitude of suggestions and useful aids.

WRITE ISAACSON YOUR PROBLEMS

This department is being run for your benefit—to help you make more money!

Mr. Isaacson is here to aid you and invites you to call on him to solve your particular difficulty. He will gladly supply information about instruments, kinds of music, musicians, scores, operas, symphonies, etc., etc.

ADDRESS: CHARLES D. ISAACSON, care of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

Next week Mr. Isaacson's article will be entitled "The Kind of Man to Appoint." It will be of interest to managers and particularly to present or prospective musicians, at theatres.

A correspondence will be fostered between managers and available directors, musicians, artists, acts of all sorts. Theatres seeking certain kinds of musical talent will be put in touch with the right people who are seeking positions. A matter of this kind will not be as flourishing immediately as it will develop in the course of several months. If you are seeking artists and musicians, get your name on the list. If you are a director looking for the right kind of theatre, send along your qualifications.

Furthermore in connection with this division of the service, information whereby the theatre manager may gauge the aptitude and musical ability of his prospective man, will be furnished. The best musician would not be necessarily the most adaptable to your needs. A grand opera man might be a marvel—and again he might be too much of a snob in his point of view to get the most good into his work. A vaudeville expert might be a splendid attraction, but on the other hand, he might be too much common clay in his outlook on music, to bring you the prestige and idealistic atmosphere you would require.

A special guide in the purchase of instruments is being developed—the idea will not be to show you the instrument to buy, but the way to select wisely. Along the same lines as the trading ground for musicians and managers to meet, so it will be the gradual business of the Service to work out a means of making trading easier for the instrument makers and the buyers. Theatres in the market for certain musical products will be bulletined among the concerns selling those products, and vice versa. Just as in the News today the current releases are catalogued, we believe the current musical "releases" can be catalogued, and the "staples" kept on the lists.

The Service will indicate the kinds of programs to use for all occasions, based on the season of the year, the particular holidays, the balance of the film program and the musical activities in town at the time.

The Service will furnish to theatres, program notes for the music—giving interesting side-lights on the composers and the stories which are being told by the music. (All of the most successful showmen of music, have long since taken the point for granted, that the way to get the most out of the program, is to illuminate the music with human interest vignettes of the compositions.) These I will write and furnish to our theatres by mail when they are called for. They will be in the same style as I have adopted in my books, "Face to Face with Great Musicians," "Musical Masterpictures," "Stories of the Operas," "Musical Vignettes," "Capsule Lectures," etc.

The Service will outline a plan of publicity for interesting the local music editors and managing editors of newspapers. Real musical efforts are worthy of encouragement, and I have found that properly approached, the editors are very willing to devote space to the project. Those of the showmen who have used music properly, discover that where their ordinary film news is sidetracked and cut down, the musical feature seems to get more space. This is easily understood. The film editor is deluged with material—while the musical editor has only just begun to receive his stuff from the motion picture theatres. The manager who is the first in his town to strike, will find that channel of publicity wide open to him.

There are ways and ways of winning the confidence of the crowds who are seeking the music-movie house. And it will be one intent to furnish the point of view which should be back of the whole publicity and interest-arousing processes in the campaign. There are some good ways of keeping the musical spirit in your patronage, and the Service will send out to its subscribers, who ask for it, a series of daily, of weekly musical storiettes which could be printed in the bulletin, in the program, or in the daily newspaper, by arrangement with the editors.

The Service will furnish schemes for unusual plans, whereby the local musical folks will be called into cooperation. If every music-teacher once a year had a "day" in your house, in most cities, it would give an all year round method of fostering the house. Instead of the churches side-stepping the theatres, there is a perfectly legitimate way to use the churches as a medium for the development of patronage through music. This part of the Service, will also indicate the ways for turning the present craze for music in factories into a force for theatrical benefits. The Service will act as a clearing house for all the unique musical stunts. For instance, recently, the "musical silhouette" made a sensation in New York City, and in another instance "Old Fashion Songs" as developed was a really important addition to the program. How these and scores of others were developed and staged will be a part of the News Music Service.

One of the most successful ventures musically has been the picturizing of well-known music. Just as the telling of a story to accompany an overture, a symphony, a characteristic number makes it so much more interesting—so the use of a scenic in connection with it, while it is being played is a thriller. I remember recently when Rossini's "William Tell Overture" was played by a movie orchestra, it was accompanied by the showing of an interesting scenic, which began with a sunny afternoon, showed the approach of the storm, its thunder and lightning, the passing of the clouds, the coming of the moon, and the dawn of day. The moods of the picture synchronized beautifully with the moods of the music. In this connection, will it be part of the Service to indicate film-stories which could be used to accompany famous classics.

Personally I cannot begin to tell you how eagerly I watch the development of the News Music Service, and how much of myself I am going to give to it. I feel that through the Service I will be enabled to come into contact with the finest and brainiest theatre executives. More than that, I realize that through the channel of these theatres, good music will be able to meet hundreds of thousands—aye, millions who are hungry for it, and will be happy to be able to get what they see in conjunction with the entertainment of democracy—the films!

The Complete Plan Book

Everything the Showman Needs on Every Picture Released

"High and Dizzy"

(Two-Reel Harold Lloyd Comedy—Released by Pathe)

HAROLD LLOYD has been coming through with real comedies so long that exhibitors and audiences would forgive him if he slipped just once but instead his record for consistency grows like the proverbial mushroom and now in presenting "High and Dizzy," he has given the public two reels of entertainment that for novelty earned laughs and thrills has not been equalled since "Shoulder Arms."

"High and Dizzy" is more than a slap-stick comedy. In fact it is scarcely to be called by that term since there is little of the so-called "custard pie" brand of humor in it and it also boasts of quite a story.

The offering opens with some new gags that lead to the beginning of the plot. Lloyd and a friend attempt to drink some home-made "hootch" which refuses to stay under the cork longer, just to "keep it from wasting" and take on a very nice "bun" as a result.

From this point on the picture is a series of amusing and at times extremely hilarious sequences showing the pair attempting to carry their load and pulling all sorts of new "refined drunk" business until the friend is laid away in a bathtub to sleep off his jag.

Lloyd then begins traveling alone and when a fair somnambulist essays to meander about on a narrow ledge a dozen stories above the street, he follows her. It is here that some of the best thrill stuff to be found in either comedy or drama is pulled. Lloyd reels up and down this narrow pathway just missing the fatal step (apparently) half dozen times. This sequence is not double photography and is therefore all the more effective since many people have been educated to recognize the way they are being tricked by the camera.

The work of the star throughout the picture is entirely legitimate and establishes him firmly as a talented comedian in light comedy. There is nothing "knockout" in his work in "High and Dizzy." Every laugh is earned by clever acting, original incident and truly humorous titles. The picture deserves to be featured in every theatre where it is booked. The exhibitor who doesn't feature it is passing up a money making opportunity.—J. S. DICKERSON

Four Christie Comedies

(One Reel Each)

PROBABLY "Fit to Fight," featuring Bobby Vernon, is the most appealing of quartet of Christie single reels. This comedian is at his best when playing the youthful college lad, as he is here. His sweetheart's father does not approve of him. So he engages a husky prize fighter to "mop the floor" with the young aspirant to his daughter's hand. Bobby gets a tip of what is going on, and is padded with a complete set of football protectors by the college friends. As they bring him to the girl's house they force him to walk under a ladder and chase a black cat across his path. This is a little bit of business that will appeal. He, of course, easily withstands the pugilist's hardest blows and proves his courage to the father. Vera Steadman is the girl.

There is a neat idea behind "Babies for Three." It is simply the idea of an adopted baby, a stolen baby, and a precious first-born getting hopelessly mixed up. The action starts quite quickly for a one-reeler, and some fairly laughable situations are developed before things become straightened out once more, and the three couples each receive their rightful child.

"Pairs and Peaches" features Jimmie Harris and Charlotte Merriam, but Eddie Barry, in a small part, helps to get over the best laughs. The idea of the hero disguising as the girl's chauffeur, and later, when some jewels are stolen, as the detective, is used. Even in polite comedy we look for something more convincing than a man smearing shoe-blackening across his lip for a mustache, and thereby becoming completely disguised.

Eddie Barry injects a goodly amount of pep in his characterization in "The Bashful Bigamist." A young wife, to keep her husband's love warm, cooks up a story about a first husband, who is to be a model for her present one. She shows her uncle's picture to prove it, and when uncle suddenly returns home, she finds herself taken for a bigamist, and the fun starts.

In all four comedies, the action gets under way early, and the tempo is kept up in good fashion. The titles are readable enough, but are never good for a laugh in themselves. They are embellished with appropriate straight-line sketches, but as these are not animated, they do not add very much to the picture. MILTON A. TAYLOR.

"A Trip to Coney Island"

(Hy Mayer Capitol Travelogue—Produced Exclusively for the Capitol Theatre, New York)

A TRIP TO CONEY ISLAND is just what the title implies a photographic record of what one sees on visiting the famous resort interspersed with cartoon bits by Hy Mayer, in which the comedy idea is played up.

The Steeple Chase, Luna Park and its attractions, the "hot dog" man, and all the other features of the resort are given a strip.

For those who have never seen Coney Island, the picture will be extremely interesting, showing them what they have missed, and for those who have made the trip there will be that natural curiosity to see if the camera man is showing the real thing.

The cartoon part of the offering is not as novel or extended as have been its predecessors, but the film is still enough of a novelty to make more than a filler provided it is ever released for use in other theatres.—J. S. DICKERSON.

"Creation's Morning"

(Storyart Scenic One Reel)

STORYART PICTURE CORPORATION has come forward here with a new idea concerning scenes. An effort has been made to achieve some new effects to color Nature's handwork with symbolic thought. Most scenes travel a beaten path and present nothing further than vistas of some picturesque bit of landscape or a waterfall or a colorful sky dotted with fleecy clouds. In "Creation's Morning" a tiny thread of story accompanies the unusual composition. The picture offers an ancient legend that man is born from the sea and woman from the rocks.

By means of poetic excerpts taken from William Cullen Bryant, Shelley, and other famous members of the literati the picture takes on a beauty the appeal of which cannot be denied. These brief translations are brought out artistically. Man meets his mate and sexual attraction lends its force. Together they roam through the fields in an eloquent spirit of tranquility, unmindful of anything but each other's presence. Beauty comes into the setting in the form of a younger girl and Man is cast under her spell. But he returns to his mate when Youth walks down the valley in search of Youth and Beauty.

The picture is excellently timed, the photography being clear and distinct throughout. The vistas of nature are enchanting. The sky effects, the fields of green, the woodlands—these cast a feeling of contentment over the spectator. "Creation's Morning" should find a conspicuous place on any exhibitor's program. It is a worthy effort to create something new and distinctive.—LAURENCE REID.

"The Quack Doctor"

(Paramount-Mack Sennett Comedy—Two Reels)

MACK SENNETT, having exposed the stage and its paraphernalia used for settings and effects, has gone to the side-show, or the medicine show, or whatever you want to call it, for an idea and the result is a most amusing achievement.—LAURENCE REID.

Index to Complete Plan Book and EXHIBITORS BOX OFFICE REPORTS

EDITOR'S NOTE Exhibitors will find here a complete list of all feature pictures for last twenty weeks arranged alphabetically as an index to The Complete Plan Book for this period, naming the picture, the producer, the star, the release date, and designating the issue of MOTION PICTURE NEWS which contained the original review.

The following also contains our reviewer's opinion encompassed in a brief single line and gives the comments of exhibitors who have shown the picture and forwarded their opinions. And we also publish a final line fairly summarizing a consensus of all opinions received on each picture. As many of the exhibitors do not comment on every picture (merely checking it Big, Average or Poor), we arrive at the consensus not only by the actual comments made and published, but are also guided by the reports from exhibitors who have made no actual comments, but have merely checked the box office value of the picture.

All the pictures mentioned are five-reel features, unless marked otherwise. Serials are reviewed also. At the conclusion of this department will be found the "Flash-Backs," being comments on films released prior to March 13, 1920.

"ONE HOUR BEFORE DAWN"

(Jesse D. Hampton—Pathe)

Excellent Mystery Story Very Well Produced

THE mystery story is always ideal material for photoplay purposes and especially so when founded on a probable or at least possible plot into which category "One Hour Before Dawn," an adaptation of "Behind Red Curtains" may be placed.

It is true, however, that casting a star of Mr. Warner's standing in the role of one of those suspected of committing the ubiquitous crime of every mystery story does not add to the suspense. The spectator immediately eliminates him from the possibilities in spite of the well knit skein of circumstantial evidence which is developed. Also in this picture the guilty person is too well planted and the wise ones will have him "doped" before the story is half told.

However, the production is interesting and the individual sequences carry much suspense. The mystery part is not so complicated nor is the audience carried along in the dark to such an extent as in many offerings of its kind, but that the story may be logically developed. There are, however, quite some jumps in continuity especially in the matter of lesser characters of a large cast, but this was unavoidable in condensing the story to feature picture length.

Warner, as the star, has a role which fits him perfectly which is an assurance of a flawless performance. He is surrounded by a good supporting cast, among whom Frank Leigh is deserving of special mention.

The direction is by Henry King and to whom a great deal of the picture's success belongs since it is the nicely gauged tempo and carefully dovetailed scenes of each sequence which provides the real entertainment rather than the work of any individual of the cast.

Settings, camera work, photography and all the mechanical portion of the feature are fully up to standard.—Length, 5 reels.—J. S. Dickerson.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

H. B. Warner, the popular star of screen and stage, comes to the theatre beginning "One Hour Before Dawn" in his first Jesse D. Hampton production for the Pathe program. "One Hour Before Dawn" is the title of the feature, which is an adaptation of Mansfield Scott's novel, "Behind Red Curtains." In his direction of the offering, Henry King has handled the suspense and mystery with great cleverness. The subject is a murder mystery—a subject particularly adaptable to the screen. A murder is committed at one hour before dawn. One is led to believe that Mr. Warner did it because one knows that he has been commanded to do so while under the influence of a hypnotist.

Warner, himself, thinks he might have committed the crime because of certain things that happened in the night that might have been dreamed, or might have been real. Suspicion falls on him, yet he cannot prove himself guilty or innocent. "One Hour Before Dawn" is a most unusual story which unlimbers one by one. Warner gives a wonderful portrayal of the suspected criminal, playing his part with fine poise and dignity. Others in the cast who render capable performances are Anna Q. Nilsson, Augustus Phillips, Adele Farrington, Thomas Guise and Frank Leigh. Fred Myton attended to the adaptation.

PROGRAM READER

H. B. Warner is coming to the theatre next in "One Hour Before Dawn," which is said to be one of the most baffling and thrilling mystery stories that has ever been presented on the screen. This production offers the popular star in the role of a writer who entertains vicars antagonistic to the hypnotism. He is lured into being hypnotized. Morning discloses the murder, and there commences the mystery. The picture certainly baffles solution and offers a deal of incident and suspense. Mr. Warner is a splendid type for the part he portrays and his support is given by the popular and talented Anna Q. Nilsson. The picture is an adaptation by Fred Myton of Mansfield Scott's story, "Behind Red Curtains."

SUGGESTIONS

Bill this as a baffling murder mystery that is quite unusual. State that a crime is committed that is seemingly inspired by hypnotism. Make mention of H. B. Warner's name and his popularity on screen and stage. The title should come in for some special exploitation. Tell that it is the hour when life is at its lowest ebb. Bring out the mystery in your copy and don't give away the plot. Arouse suspense through the title and through appropriate catch lines. Play up the idea of hypnotism—asking your patrons if they believe in it. Tell that they have a chance to see its value. Bill the picture as a mystery melodrama of sensational interest. Send out circular letters. Draw the face of a clock on compo board and have the hands pointed at one hour before dawn. And carry a sign saying: "What took place at that hour? Come to the theatre and see."

CATCH LINES

See "One Hour Before Dawn," with H. B. Warner. This is a baffling play with the throbs of action and the thrill of suspense. A mystery play which will foil the keenest minds.

"At one hour before dawn, you will kill him!" That's what the hypnotist whispered to his patient. What happened? See "One Hour Before Dawn," the greatest mystery play of the year.

"LI TING LANG"

(Haworth—Robertson-Cole)

Hayakawa at His Best as Americanized Chinaman

IT is to the credit of the producers that Sessue Hayakawa is here seen in a role that suits him perfectly, and as a result "Li Ting Lang" leaves a far more satisfying impression than some of his previous productions. The fantastic and mystic appeals are lacking, but in their place is a human interest American story, with a Chinese prince, denied love by the barrier of race prejudice, as the central figure. In the end he waves a sad good-bye as the girl sails down the bay and out of his life. He remains to devote his life to the cause of the youthful Chinese republic. This ending, while not of the happy variety, is consistent with the story, and will not have a deleterious effect upon an audience in this country.

Most of the picture is laid in America. The star is of the ruling house of China, studying in an American college. He falls in love with a rich girl, who, largely because she is exceedingly proud, and resents the attempts made to dictate to her, accepts him. Doris Pawn, who plays this part, has been unusually well cast, and adds considerably to the general good effect of the picture. Finding herself socially ostracized, the girl breaks the engagement. Envoys of the Empress of China, who wishes the return of her nephew, drag Li Ting Lang and carry him back to his native land, leaving the impression that he is dead. Here is the illogical jump in the plot. How the local authorities could be led to believe a man a suicide when he was merely under the influence of a narcotic, is hard to conceive. In China revolution is rife, and the star joins the uprising, becoming a leader in the army. The girl, now the wife of his old college friend, visits China and Li Ting Lang rescues her from kidnapers, and although he has her in his power, returns her to her husband.

The star proves once more his ability and Allan Forrest and Charles Mason are fine supports. Being technically perfect, we believe it the best recent Hayakawa picture, despite the one illogical hitch in the plot. Length, 5 reels.—Matthew A. Taylor.

THE CAST

Li Ting Lang	Sessue Hayakawa
Bob Murray	Allan Forrest
Red Dalton	Charles E. Mason
Marion Halsted	Doris Pawn
Priscilla Mayhew	Frances Raymond
Prince Nu Chang	Marc Robbins

Story by Howard P. Rocky.
Continuity by E. Richard Schayer.
Directed by Charles Swickard.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

The "Li Ting Lang" theatre has a winner in "Li Ting Lang," starring the Japanese actor, Sessue Hayakawa, which is on the bill for this week. This is a picture which departs radically from former productions of this star, and shows him at his best—a Chinese prince, Americanized and educated in a large university. Combining as it does, an interesting college tale with one of Chinese intrigue and romance, it contains all the elements to make it an eminent success with motion-picture lovers.

Realism is the keynote of the film. The romantic atmosphere of college life, with its firm friendships made, and the final handshake at commencement day, is faithfully depicted; and when the story shifts to Hong Kong, as it does in the last reel, there is a truthful version of life in that Oriental city, down to the most minute detail. All this was obtained only after the most thorough research work and great expense of the producers.

Supporting the star is a cast almost as distinguished as himself. Playing opposite him is Doris Pawn, one of the most beautiful blondes now registering before the camera. She has been remembered from having seen in the "Love of Mary," "The Beloved Cheater." In the cast also are Allan Forrest and Charles E. Mason, and Marc Robbins, one of the best known character actors on the screen. The story is from the pen of Howard P. Rocky and was originally published in the Green Book Magazine.

PROGRAM READER

There has always been a lot of talk in this here world of ours about true love conquering all obstacles. Novelists have written of it, artists have depicted and poets have sang of it. But despite all the hub-bub and cry, still there is a burning question today—should there be inter-racial marriages? Should an American girl, loving a Chinese who is both educated and refined, whose ancestors have ruled in Manchuria a thousand years ago, be united in matrimony? It is around this absorbing question that the story of "Li Ting Lang," the motion picture which will be seen at this theatre on —, has been built. Sessue Hayakawa, who is never better than when he is depicting Oriental roles, is the star of this interesting production, and the producers have seen to it, that in addition to the entertaining story, there is elaborate and careful production, and a cast which includes Doris Pawn, Allan Forrest and Charles E. Mason—a trio almost as distinguished as the Oriental actor himself. It is a picture that will thrill and grip you when you see it, and make you think when you have left the theatre.

SUGGESTIONS

Besides appealing to the usual followers of this star, there are two angles that can be boosted to arouse interest in the settings of the story. In lobby decorations and stage settings, you can either use the "College life" theme, or the "Love of Mary" theme, or the "Chinese stuff" theme, by decorating in an Oriental fashion. If in a college town, use the former. Then there is the discussion which can be aroused over the question of inter-racial marriages. If you have a former missionary available, you might be able to get over a special story in the new paper, and once this is done, letters to the editor and other publicity will follow. This must be at its height when you come out with a teaser campaign telling that your picture deals with this question.

"CYNTHIA-OF-THE-MINUTE"

(Gibraltar-Hodkinson)

Novel Crook Story Suffers from Development

THERE is fine plot material behind this picture, but because of the attempts to crowd action and mystery into it, we fear it may pall upon an audience before the end. Its great advantage lies in its original setting. We have had crook stories of the West, of high society, and of the slums, but it is not so often that we see a band of thieves at work on the high seas. Most of the story transpires on a ship bound on a sinister expedition—the audience is not told the exact nature of it until the end.

Leah Baird, playing Cynthia, finds her way among this crowd of evil-doers as the companion for an old lady. A great deal of footage is here devoted to the stealing of the old lady's jewels by the unscrupulous crew. There are, however, two honest men on the ship to aid the heroine in preventing the robbery. One is later found to be a detective and the other is the sweetheart of the girl. The main idea of the sea robbers is paid little attention to, and is revealed as a scheme to collect insurance on a valuable cargo by transferring it to another ship, sending out a fake wireless message that their own ship is sinking and then open the sea-cocks. In this way they will have both the heavily insured cargo and the insurance as well. The plan is frustrated by the heroine's knowledge of wireless. At the point of a gun she forces the operator to send out a message contradicting the false S.O.S. signal.

There are few elaborate water shots, most of the scenes being below or on deck. There are some good scenes on the tropical island whence the hero swims from the anchored ship with the precious jewels. The star is not given many opportunities and dresses over-elaborately under the circumstances. Because of the novel setting of the story and vigorous physical action it should satisfy any audience who place mystery above romance and heart interest.—Length, 6 reels.—Matthew A. Taylor.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Louis Joseph Vance's popular novel, "Cynthia-of-the-Minute," is the latest best seller to find its way to the silver-sheet. Leah Baird, well known to picturegoers, is the star of this thrilling story of the high seas, which will be the attraction at the ——— theatre on ———.

To those who are devoted to the works of this popular author, there need be no explanation of the thrills and stirring climax which will be seen in the picture. To them it need only be stated that they will not be disappointed. All the elements that are responsible for the success of the novel are faithfully depicted on the screen. It is even far more exciting than the printed book, and just as they were not able to tear themselves away from Cynthia in novel form, so will they follow her adventures in the midst of a gang of sea pirates with eyes riveted to the screen.

To those who are unfamiliar with the author's work, there is a guarantee of a happy blending of thrills and romance, mystery and heart interest. If you are weary of "crook" stories of the slums of high society, you will welcome this story of a new kind of thieves, who work on the high seas, and whose victims are the insurance companies. Their scheme is to collect thousands of dollars in cargo from one ship to another in mid-ocean, sink the first vessel, and thus obtain cargo and insurance. How a girl, through her knowledge of wireless and her own daring, is able to frustrate this plan, makes a smashing climax, that you will remember long after you have left the theatre. Supporting Miss Baird are such actors as Burr McIntosh, Hugh Thompson and John Webb Dillon.

PROGRAM READER

Every piece of knowledge that you obtain is bound to help you sometime or another. Cynthia, the leading character in the photoplay, "Cynthia-of-the-Minute," a pictureization of Louis Joseph Vance's popular novel, which will be the attraction at this theatre on ———, was an expert at wireless. She had learned it from her father, when she was a small girl, but never thought it would be of any use to her. However, it was this that saved the wrecking of a vessel and prevented a crowd of unscrupulous crooks from stealing thousands of dollars. Leah Baird is the star of this interesting photoplay, which tells the story of a band of sea pirates who steal, if in a different manner, just as daringly as Captain Kidd did centuries ago. For although this is the twentieth century romance and daring and thievery and dauntless courage are not dead—only they show themselves in a different way. Mystery, action and romance are in every reel of this unusual picture.

SUGGESTIONS

You will have to use your own judgment, whether to boost the star or Vance met in this picture. You should depend upon your patrons' past performances. There is no doubt that the author is a big drawing card in some sections. There is also the appealing setting to be gotten over, and lobby decorations can be easily arranged to let the public know that it is a ship story. An imitation gangplank arranged to lead up to the box office. Arrange a teaser campaign built upon the wireless message. A stage setting of a tropical island could be arranged and should be artistically lighted.

CATCH LINES

If Captain Kidd were alive he would not use the yard-arm and gang-plank. These are not the methods of twentieth-century sea pirates. They have a surer, easier method, which you will see in "Cynthia-of-the-Minute."

"THE SPIRIT OF GOOD"

(FOX)

Wishy-washy, Trite Story, with Star Miscast

YOU can gamble that this picture, starring Madeline Travers, will send the censors into ecstasies. For it goes the extreme in preaching. Everything from jazz music to liquor comes in for a paning. The climax consists of the breaking of a number of bottles of booze, which will seem like an unhappy ending to many despite the usual untold layers in the fade-out.

As for its ability to provide entertainment for the average picturegoer we fear it will sadly miss the mark. The love interest does not start until late, and the whole picture is crowded with degenerates and down-and-outers reforming under the influence of such songs as "Where Is My Wandering Boy To-night?" and other reminders of their innocent youths. The idea is as unconvincing as it was artistic in "The Miracle Man."

Moreover, Madeline Travers is cast as a chorus girl in the early reels, and later, when she has been betrayed by a man, as the popular cabaret queen in a mining town. Here she is sadly lacking in vivacity, animation and girlish sprightliness, and appears to be having a hard time to keep from being emotional even while singing her sappiest jazz music. She is reformed by an itinerant preacher whom she intends to ridicule. The male outcast is reminded of the days he prayed at his mother's knee, and also gives up his evil ways. Together they protect the preacher from the violence of the saloon keeper and other sinners, and the town is reformed even if the star has to break every bottle of liquor herself and burn up the roulette wheels and dance hall to cap the climax. This destruction of private property for no reason whatsoever will hardly be commended by even the most rabid reformers.

Practically every sub-title is hackneyed, out-worn, and as familiar as the "reform" plot itself. There is little good action. And the entertainment of extras is noticeable. It might have been a good propaganda picture for pre-prohibition days, but it has not the romance, action, or heart-interest for a modern audience. Length, 5 reels. Matthew A. Taylor.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"The Spirit of Good," a Fox production starring Madeline Travers, is the attraction scheduled for the ——— theatre on ———. Miss Travers is fast acquiring the reputation of being the most powerful dramatic actress of the screen. Her many recent successes under the Fox standard have enthroned her in the hearts of countless picture fans, and in "The Spirit of Good" she will gain many more admirers.

The story of the picture is laid in New York and in a Western mining town. The star plays the part of a chorus girl, who finds herself tricked by the man whom she has married. Discovering that he has a first wife still living, she becomes hardened and cynical, and seeks to forget the misery that has come to her by returning to the stage. A few years later she has won for herself the place of an idol of a cabaret in a small mining town in the West. A traveling preacher arrives in town and makes an effort to "clean up" and "evangelize" the sinners who are still strong in her and before long she finds her old life repulsive to her and joins the preacher in an effort to reform the town.

How she accomplishes this remarkable feat makes a gripping story, ending with a climax that is unusually thrilling. There is also a love-story which develops rest after raising the devil elsewhere. So it took considerable courage for a journey through the picture. Miss Travers is supported by an unusually strong cast, including Frederick Stanton, Dick La Reno and Charles Smiley.

PROGRAM READER

Gehenna was a mining town described as a "place where people come for a rest after raising the devil elsewhere." So it took considerable courage for a journeying preacher to enter the village and attempt to reform it. But courage and right usually triumph, although only after a long struggle. You will see how in "The Spirit of Good," which will be shown at this theatre on ———. Madeline Travers, the noted emotional actress, is the star, and is bound to add you to the ranks of her many admirers after you see this picture. For she has an unusual report—that of a dancing girl in the wicked city, who gradually yields to the "spirit of good" brought into her life by the traveling evangelist.

SUGGESTIONS

It might not be well to advertise this as a "reform" picture unless you are sure of your audience. If you think they are of that type, then you can boost that angle sky-high, and may even be able to obtain the endorsement of some local clergymen. Dwell in your copy on the scenes are laid in a very wicked town called Gehenna, and that the star is a cabaret singer in a dance hall. Bring out enough of the story to give them the setting, but don't preach too much. You can neglect the cast, but boost the star as "the greatest emotional actress of the screen."

CATCH LINES

They called it "Gehenna" because it was a mining town of wickedness and sin. Madeline Travers is starred in this powerful story of a Broadway chorus and a Western mining town.

"THE CITY OF MASKS"

(Paramount-Artcraft)

Warwick's Latest Is Well Fortified to Please the Most Exacting Patron

THE pictures which have been Robert Warwick's allotment lately, failed to offer good screen material. Which is something that cannot be said of his latest, "The City of Masks," an adaptation of George Barr McCutcheon's story of the same name. Here is a feature which is well fortified from every angle—one carrying an interesting idea, which, while it may be a trifle time-worn on the screen, has been refurbished with exceptionally clever treatment. There is not a weak spot discernible as far as the development is concerned. The very fact that it carries out the spirit of make believe precludes any desire to be analytical for the sake of realities.

It is a story, easy to translate into terms of film drama because of its wealth of adventure, its note and conflict, its contrast of characters, its whimsical charm and its rich vein of humor. The latter element dominates the action and gives it an appeal which is always effective. The author has used the idea that the metropolis is a "city of Masks"—that it harbors people of high estate disguising their identities in the workaday world. And he has manipulated his figures so that they are involved in adventure, intrigue and romance. The hero is a chauffeur, who, in reality, is an English lord, and the girl he loves is also of noble birth, who works as a governess. The drama revolves around their attempt to circumvent the machinations of a wealthy parasite.

The sequences which present this line of action never trespass into the field of melodramatic hokum, for each situation and climax is accompanied by a flash of comedy which keeps it within balance. The author doesn't solve anything with his plot and characterization. The masquerading figures are not exiles, but just temporarily down in their luck. And a time comes when the two important members reveal their identities and ride away on a honeymoon. Space does not permit the detailing of the interesting incident, all of which is sure-fire. The scene where the masqueraders congregate—another when their retreat is raided—these are but samples in a picture carrying a plethora of high lights. The acting is entirely convincing—the lighting and photography satisfying throughout.

"The City of Masks," an adaptation of George Barr McCutcheon's popular novel of the same name will be the feature attraction at the theatre beginning with Robert Warwick as the star. This is a romance picture dealing with a little known phase of New York life. It exploits the fantastic story dealing with one neighbor—that a chauffeur may be an English lord in disguise. Take the case of Lord Eric Temple for instance. He is known as Tommy Trotter, chauffeur for the wealthy Carpenters. He is in love with a Miss Emsdale, who is really Lady Jane Thorne, a governess in the Smith-Parvis family.

From this romance is developed considerable dramatic incident—incident which carries a rich quota of action and suspense. In the end the young people disclose their identities and marry. The story is ideal screen material since it offers so many people in lowly positions who are really members of the nobility. The much adventure and situations which are best told by means of the camera. The star had a similar offering in "Jack Straw" and it is safe to say that he makes star on the other end of the romance. Thomas Heffron directed from a scenario by Walter Woods.

PROGRAM READER

In "The City of Masks," coming to the theatre next—Robert Warwick leads a "double life." Generally this term has an unsavory significance. But in this picture the masquerading results in a story that is refreshingly novel in plot and treatment. New York is "the city of masks" and according to George Barr McCutcheon, the author, the metropolis is crowded with people in lowly positions who are really members of the nobility. Once a week they meet at a certain home and dress and act as they did in the "old days." Mr. Warwick has the role of a chauffeur who is really an English lord. The picture takes him through adventure and romance and considerable intrigue. "The City of Masks" is adapted by Walter Woods and directed by Thomas Heffron.

"THE WHITE MOLL"

(Fox)

Pearl White Makes Debut in Her First Fox Feature

THE time spent in serial work on the screen is comparable to stock experience on the stage. It has enabled Pearl White to flash a finished technique—a skill at pantomime which some, who have reached stardom through the medium of five reels, might well emulate. The Fox star appears in an adaptation of Frank Packard's story, "The White Moll," which may be catalogued as an acceptable crook melodrama. The author has revealed a note of his "Miracle Man" through the spiritual flavor that stands as the framework of the story. But "The White Moll" is far from being a duplication of the above-mentioned masterpiece. In the first place it has no broadness of outline and doesn't contain the beautiful thought—the uplifting message.

It is simply a melodrama of the crook order which is interestingly told against a background of fast-moving action that creates suspense and holds it to the concluding scene. The White Moll is a woman of the underworld who sees the light when in the act of robbing the poor-box of a church. Her father who has brought her up in a life of crime expires before the carved image of Christ and it is her purpose to redeem her associates in general and a lonely mother's criminal son in particular. Pathos is well established in most of the scenes where the two women meet and when the boy comes home from prison. When the White Moll fails to encourage his romantic ardor, he listens to his former associates and would have stooped to crime again but for her timely presence.

The action revolves around her efforts to protect him and offers plenty of incident. This same play of incident makes the continuity slightly uneven in the latter reels. The situations and climaxes are mostly executed at night. Which makes the photography a trifle too shadowy to be always effective. While this plan creates suspense it often robs interest in the figures for one can't identify them at times. Mr. Millard's direction is capable except for certain details which he has glossed over. For instance, the heroine's hand is bandaged in one scene and entirely free the next. The backgrounds and atmosphere are suggestive, and the array of characters are well interpreted. Miss White won't lose any of her following here. She should gain many new admirers since the picture is well suited to her vital personality.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Pearl White, the popular star, who made the serial one of the favorite forms of screen entertainment, will appear at the theatre next—in her first Fox feature entitled, "The White Moll." This is an adaptation of Frank L. Packard's story of the same name and offers the star plenty of opportunity to display her skill. That she is versatile is proven here, and the fact that she has attained her years on the screen in serial work stands her in good stead. "The White Moll" is a fast-moving crook melodrama which offers her plenty of situations and climaxes. The heroine is gifted in this type of story. The same idea he used in "The Miracle Man" is adopted here—the regeneration of crooks. Miss White appears as the White Moll, a reformed woman of the underworld. It is she who is robbing the poor-box of a church that she sees the Light. The figure of Christ looks down upon her and straightaway she decides to redeem her associates by the giving up of her life. The picture is a heart appeal and pathos. Miss White is supported by an adequate company. Harry Millard directed from a scenario by E. Lloyd Sheldon.

PROGRAM READER

Patrons of the theatre will have the opportunity in the near future to see one of the most popular actresses of the screen appear in her first Fox feature. Pearl White, who has been absent from the silver screen for some time, is returning in "The White Moll," which is said to be one of the most exciting and returning in the theatre. This was ever translated into a photoplay. Frank L. Packard is the author—the name Mr. Packard who wrote "The Miracle Man." He has fashioned a story here which for compact action, breath-taking suspense, intrigue, adventure, and the moral which it teaches, should rank as one of the treats of the season. Harry Millard directed the picture which is capably acted by a sterling company. Watch for the date.

SUGGESTIONS

The point to bring out here is the fact that Pearl White makes her debut as a Fox star, appearing in one of the few features of her career. Long identified with serials she will show the audience her versatility as an emotional actress. Make much of this angle. Then you have the name of the author. Tell that he wrote "The Miracle Man," and that "The White Moll" is fashioned on the same idea—the redemption of criminals. Bring out the big question which finds the heroine seeing the Light. Bring out in appropriate catch lines the idea of redemption. Make much of the spiritual note. Tell of the star's career and use demotion. Make much of the spiritual note. Tell of the star's career and use demotion. Make much of the spiritual note. Tell of the star's career and use demotion. Make much of the spiritual note. Tell of the star's career and use demotion.

"THE GREEN FLAME"

(Brunton-Hodkinson)

Kerrigan Has Interesting Detective Story Here

J WARREN KERRIGAN, who has been appearing in mystery plays of late, has come forward again in a similar type of offering and it may be safely put down as a creditable achievement of its kind. This picture surely carries out its purpose which is to unlimber one's deductive powers without taxing the brain to the point of indifference. Ernest C. Warde, the director, has created just a sufficient amount of suspense and has kept the sequences within bounds. The mystery is well maintained and this element is admirably emphasized through one's inability to identify the character enacted by the star.

Playing the part of a detective who is protecting a valuable jewel, he is able to keep the spectator guessing as to whether he is a crook or a country "boob." One almost suspects him of being the ringleader in the plot to steal the gem from the jewelry store in which he is employed. The scenes are cleverly handled so that there is no evidence of padding. No attempt is made to stretch the plot with uncalculated incident. One can see daylight ahead and yet be completely baffled. Such development is quite rare in a mystery melodrama, for the usual plan is to treat it as a Sam Lloyd puzzle. The picture works up to an effective climax when the country yokel reveals his identity. By playing the "boob" he is able to worm his way into the confidence of the crooks.

For the sake of romantic conflict another detective, of the bona-fide type, attempts to discredit him in the eyes of the girl reporter who is assigned to the task of covering the famous jewel. The romance is mostly a negligible factor and the fact that it appears to be conveniently arranged is the only flaw in a story compact with action and suspense. Of complicated incident there is none. Mr. Warde seeing to it that flash-backs are unnecessary. The climaxes are heightened by the introduction of clever lighting. Mr. Kerrigan seems to have found his forte in this type of subject since it enables him to appear natural without resorting to mannerisms to score his personality. He is considerate of the others in his company, all of whom are effective with the exception of Fritz Brunette, who is too obviously coy to make her characterization convincing. Jack Cunningham has provided a well-arranged scenario.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

J. Warren Kerrigan, the popular Hodkinson star, who has been interpreting mystery melodramas of late has in "The Green Flame" by Raymond G. Hill, another example of this type of play, and it is scheduled to appear at the theatre for three days beginning ———. The story combines swift action, with dramatic suspense, and tells a tale of adventure in a plausible manner. The plot is based on the struggle of a crook ring for the possession of a mysterious emerald, once the glory of the Russian Czar, and since smuggled into New York, and which is in the vaults of a jewelry concern. The manager of the store, Roger Imlay, is the brains of the crooked ring.

Fearful of the safety of the valuable gem, the head of the firm employs secretly Frank Markham, the character played by Mr. Kerrigan, to protect the jewel, since he is a detective. He enters the store as a country yokel and worms his way into Imlay's confidence. Bit by bit, important pieces together, he thoroughly establishes the fact that Imlay is a crook. His work throws him into contact with Ruth Gardner, a newspaper reporter, and a romance is born. The picture, adapted by Jack Cunningham and directed by Ernest C. Warde, is of the same high entertaining calibre as "Live Sparks" and "30,000," and gives the star and his competent company an excellent opportunity to display their skill.

PROGRAM READER

Every one likes a good detective story; every one at some time in his life has longed to be an amateur detective and solve crime. A picture based upon intrigue, action and suspense as is concerned the solving of mystery is always certain of appealing to one's imagination. And so "The Green Flame" comes to the theatre next ——— and ——— as a highly colorful mystery melodrama which has to do with a detective and his ingenuities here. J. Warren Kerrigan is the star and he again has sufficient opportunity to display his ability in an adventurous role. The story baffles solution and offers a series of situations calculated to create the utmost suspense.

SUGGESTIONS

You can exploit the fact that Kerrigan is seen again in a mystery melodrama— one similar to "30,000" in its dramatic possibilities. Make mention that the star is most adaptable for the type of role which he interprets here. The title is attractive and should be the star of his advertising possibilities. You can create suspense by having your artist draw a green flame against a white background or painting an emerald. Exploit the fact that the picture is a detective story which baffles solution and one which carries a full quota of action and suspense-carrying situations. Mention the star's previous pictures, for he has had some good ones of late, and tell that this feature is of the same high calibre. Mention the director, scenarist, author, and members of the cast.

CATCH LINES

He was a detective who wormed his way into the confidence of the crooks. What happened? See J. Warren Kerrigan in "The Green Flame."

His duty was to protect a huge and valuable emerald. Romance, intrigue and adventure came to him. See "The Green Flame," one of the screen's best detective stories.

"THE PRINCE CHAP"

(Paramount-Artcraft)

Sentimental Story Has Few Interesting Moments

IT strikes us that the adaptation of Edward Peple's charming study in sentiment is not entirely successful, if one remembers the whimsicalities and humor of the original play. While William De Mille has shown pain-taking direction in regard to backgrounds and the manner in which he has brought out the idea, he has neglected to provide shading and contrast. "The Prince Chap" never leaves its groove from inception to conclusion and the sentiment is over-emphasized. In fact it becomes exceedingly sticky. One searches in vain for a flash of humor, not even finding it in the subtleties. It is a pretty little story, one full of delicate charm, a note of pathos and heart interest and there is no denying that its wholesomeness will captivate the sentimentalists.

A number of years ago when it was presented on the stage, the central idea was more or less novel. But bachelors and their adopted babies have become too conventional to provide interesting screen figures. If one looks for suspense, one will look in vain. From the moment that the bachelor bids adieu to his fiancée and sails for England to the day he adopts a four year old child and eventually marries her, the action is easily anticipated. Romantic conflict must be presented and a misunderstanding occurs when the heroine suspects the fiancé of being the father of the youngster. Because of its lack of incident, and humor, and spontaneity, the situations and characters appear as if they might have been planted.

Fourteen years elapse between the adoption of the child and the day she reaches maturity, yet the bachelor-father and his elderly valet, and his friends and his erstwhile fiancée show no sign of having aged. Of course the child couldn't help growing up, because the action depicts three different periods in her life. The picture has been padded, which is natural since in its original shape it was decidedly frail. The characters, seemingly, take life in dreadful seriousness, there being scarcely a scene in which they radiate happiness. A sparkling subtitle or a flash of humor interspersed here and there would have given it a much needed spontaneity. Thomas Meighan doesn't strike us as the ideal type for the bachelor. The others are more in character. Laurence Reid.

"LA LA LUCILLE"

(Universal)

Lyons and Moran Produce a Good Comedy

LYONS AND MORAN have produced a very pleasing comedy in "La La Lucille." It is bright, vivacious and at times borders upon the uproarious. But there is one thing above all others which the writer wishes to praise, and that is the elimination entirely of slap-stick comedy which is so often introduced into farces.

Although the picture has its slow moments, it runs along in a smooth way and there is not a scene in it which is not understandable.

The story, which might be called very fair, is a little slow in getting started, but when once it "gets going," it is handled by the stars in a convincing manner and not once have they overacted their parts or allowed the members of the cast to do so.

The comedy situations reach their highest points in the last two reels when a hotel detective, in an effort to arrest one of the young men for eloping with a young girl, finds himself unable to cope with the many situations arising and gives up in despair.

To make the scenes more uproarious, a janitor's wife is induced to go to a hotel and act as the wife of the other young man, that he may have grounds to secure a divorce. The janitor hears of this, goes to the hotel, and the result is a series of complications which involve all concerned.

These last scenes are very funny, indeed, and should provoke laughter from any audience.

The supporting cast is a strong one and includes Anne Cornwall and Glady's Walton, two good types for this sort of entertainment.—Length, 5 reels.—Frank Leonard.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Lyons and Moran in their latest Universal production, "La La Lucille," will be the attraction at the theatre on—of—week.

The comedy was written by Fred Jackson, author of such stage successes as "A Full House" and "The Naughty Wife," and was the hit of Broadway last season as a musical comedy.

Lyons and Moran, who are also the directors of this production, have not failed in any way to inject the right spirit into the scenes, which are filled with bright, vivacious and at times uproarious situations.

The story concerns a little vaudeville juggler whose marriage to a young man named Smith causes his aunt to disinherit him. Later he is informed of her death and that her will stipulates he must divorce his bride in order to obtain her fortune. The young couple agree to a temporary divorce in order to secure the money and induce a janitor's wife to accompany the young man to a hotel in order to have the just grounds. Here they are involved with a young couple who are being followed by an irate father, the result being a complication of amusing and uproarious scenes in which all are concerned and which should prove a treat to those who witness them.

The cast is a strong one and includes such well known players as Anne Cornwall, Glady's Walton, Rose Gore, Fred Gamble and Charles McHugh.

PROGRAM READER

Lyons and Moran, Universal's favorite comedians, will appear at this theatre on—next in their comedy success, "La La Lucille."

This comedy is considered by many who have witnessed it to be the best produced by these comedians to date. It is pure farce and does not resort to the horse-play which is so often introduced in pictures of this type.

The feature bubbles over with bright, vivacious situations which should keep an audience in good humor, especially during the hot weather and has an uproarious finish.

The story shows the complications which may arise when a young man marries a girl who is in disfavor with a rich relative. In this case the rich relative is an aunt who threatens disinheritance unless the young man divorces his bride. To offset this the couple agree on a temporary divorce and induce a janitor's wife to act as co-respondent.

Scenes in a hotel follow in which they become involved with another young couple who are fleeing from an irate father, the result being a complication of extremely funny situations in which all are concerned.

SUGGESTIONS

This comedy should amuse your patrons and give them pleasing entertainment. Bill Lyons and Moran as strongly as you can for it is their work which has made the farce a success.

But do not forget that the story has many funny situations which should be played on and brought out by catch lines, some of which could read: "What would you do if you had an aunt who threatened to disinherit you if you did not divorce your pretty wife?" "What happened when the young man induced a janitor's wife to act as co-respondent in his divorce suit?"

It would not be a bad idea to tie up with some of the stores in your neighborhood, running as many stunts as you can in order to exploit the many comedy situations.

CATCH LINES

"They were young, had just been married, and yet they agreed to a temporary divorce. Why?" See "La La Lucille," it will tell you.

REMINISCENCES of the nickelodeon days will come floating back to the spectators who happen to witness "Man and His Woman." J. Stuart Blackton's latest contribution to the screen. Whether the author, or the scenarist, or the director, or all three, are responsible is difficult to determine. Perhaps one has attempted to enlarge upon the others' ideas. The result is too much incident of an exceedingly hectic and arbitrary kind. It is the eternal triangle boiled over in its most conventional recipe, to the tune of old-fashioned acting. Aside from Miss McAvoy, the players never appear mutual and so their performances are robbed of sincerity.

Every ingredient known to melodrama has been utilized. One gazes upon the lover who returns to find his sweetheart faithless, and therefore takes to drink and sinks to degradation. The action shifts to the other woman, who is as virtuous as her rival is wicked. One sees the same villain transferring his affections to her and attempting to compromise her. A flash and she has come to consciousness, saving her honor by jumping from the window. She is a nurse in a hospital where the embittered hero, now a derelict, turns up, after a siege with the "hop" in an opium joint. The situations are conveniently arranged and planted and they are so easily anticipated that the jumpy continuity takes care of itself.

Occasionally a flash of spirituality is attempted by presenting a Stranger passing among the derelicts in the underworld and blessing them. Which seems out of place. The action maintains its hectic pace right through the scene where the hero is taken to the mountains to convalesce. With the villain and his paramour in hot pursuit the former to blackmail the nurse, the latter to disillusion her in the eyes of the doctor. The complications are cleared away abruptly when the adventuress sees the light of purity shining in the younger woman's eyes. And the villain and his fatal packet of letters are swept away in the plunging rapids. Two features stand out: May McAvoy's acting and the photography. Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"Man and His Woman" in which Herbert Rawlinson is the stellar figure at the theatre next week, is said to be one of the most powerful and convincing photoplays that has come to the screen in some time. To Shannon Fife, an experienced film writer belongs the credit for this splendid story and to J. Stuart Blackton for its excellent direction and production. It is a highly dramatic romance which tells the tale of one man's love for women and the difference between the love of each woman for the man. One's love is selfish and the other's is born from self-sacrifice. One woman takes all—the other gives all.

Mr. Rawlinson portrays a doctor who has discovered a valuable serum which will benefit humanity. The woman he loves wrecks his life and he sinks to the depths. Yet such a man owes something to the world, if not to himself. A woman who has devoted her service to others inspires him through her faith and he eventually reaches the heights. The star's performance shows a deep understanding of his role which is a sympathetic one throughout. May McAvoy leaves a good impression as the woman who inspires. Eulalie Jensen handles the role of the untrue woman with true dramatic instinct. Others in the cast are capable. Stanley Olmsted scenarized the story which has been given a thoroughly artistic production.

PROGRAM READER

"Man and His Woman," which brings Herbert Rawlinson to the next—does more than entertain. It also inspires and uplifts. In theme, it is tremendous, noble and gripping. The story by Shannon Fife, a talented writer for the silverstage, depicts the weakness of a strong man when he is down; the power of one woman's degradation, and the strength of another woman's faith and purity. A man is marred or made by "his woman." One woman builds up here what the other's sin destroyed. The dramatic incidents are woven together carefully so that the spectator's interest is always held. J. Stuart Blackton, than whom there is no better artistic director on the screen, has given it a splendid production. Mr. Rawlinson gives a finished performance and his support is always competent.

SUGGESTIONS

The title of this picture should be exploited fully. Make much of the theme and detailing it will not harm the interest and suspense. It has a beautiful moral—one that is truly noble and gripping. Feature it as a dramatic study of the conflict of the sexes. Feature the star and his supporting players. Also play up the director. Mention his other productions. You can feature special stories for publicity recounting the plot and the characters. Tell in catch lines that woman places value on man's life. Tell that it features the love of two women for one man—one who attempts to wreck his life and the other who inspires him to the heights. Send out circular letters based upon the theme. Feature the artistic production which is the last word in sumptuousness.

CATCH LINES

See "Man and His Woman," a powerful picture showing a cross-examination of a man's mind and a woman's heart. Herbert Rawlinson is the star.

"The Fighting Chance"

"LET'S have one last dive together"

They flashed downward together, shoulder to shoulder under the water; and opening their eyes, they turned toward each other with a swift outstretch of hands, an uncontrollable touch of lips—

That's one of the many unusual and thrilling scenes in "The Fighting Chance," an elaborately staged and wonderfully directed production of Chambers' greatest novel.

And he was just her Daddy.

And then the little girl grew up.
Men loved her, begged her to marry.
But her heart was already full.

One day her "Daddy", broken-

Ready Made Audiences

THOUSANDS and thousands of men and women in this country today have established the habit of going regularly to one particular theatre week in and week out to see moving pictures.

In 99 34/100 per cent of the cases, the theatre they have picked out as their theatre is the one that shows Paramount Pictures.

It used to be "Let's go to the movies." Folks then weren't so particular about the name of the photoplay or the name of the star, when they put their money down on the box office till.

All that has changed.

Now it's "Let's go to The Rialto, Or The Bijou. Or The Gem. Or The Ideal. Or whatever the name of the particular theatre is—if it's the theatre that shows Paramount Pictures.

National advertising of Paramount Pictures has accomplished that change in the public mind.

National advertising—backed by the consistent, week-in-and-week-out, never-failing quality of the goods advertised—Paramount Pictures.

And that's why the theatres that are associated in the public mind with Paramount Pictures are the theatres that have the consistent, week-in-and-week-out, never-failing line of ticket purchasers leading to the box office.

And so with the new season—the greatest motion picture season in the history of the screen—

The theatres that are going to chalk up the biggest cold cash, weekly profits during the year and the theatres that are going to build and build their clientele, their prestige and their sure future success are the theatres that show Paramount Pictures——and Say so—in newspapers, on the screen, on billboards, and in the lobby.

This is because the film backs up everything you can say about it and the people who first see it will boost it for you to the skies. The day after its first showing at the ASTOR Theatre in New York every New York paper said: "See 'SHIPWRECKED AMONG CANNIBALS.'" JUSTINE JOHNSTONE

The critics have acclaimed Miss Johnstone the most beautiful girl on the American stage and their judgment is endorsed by metropolitan theatre-goers. Her talent as an actress has been amply proven in lighter comedy roles. Now Realart welcomes with confidence a new and broader test of her ability in plays depicting American womanhood. Her first production calls for dramatic artistry of a thorough type—artistry that Realart earnestly believes Miss Johnstone possesses to a remarkable degree. And Realart is backing this faith with a lot of money.

"BLACK

By Harry James Smith

Directed by

HERE is a story possessing every essential for standing 'em in line at the box office. The heroine, Leonie Sobatsky, has the part of a woman crook, morally unaroused, who is redeemed through her love for a man whom she discovers to be also a crook. Leonie has been brought up in an atmosphere of Doing-the-Other-Fellow. Her father was a counterfeiter, her tutor a smuggler and fence. Laws, she had been taught from infancy, were made to be broken—to be treated as subjects for mirth. It is this creature of circumstances who, through her one great LOVE, comes to have a respect for the Law! Here is the dramatic transformation that will make this production the sensation of your theatre and city.

"Blackbirds" is a brilliant example of the great genius of that promising young playwright, Harry James Smith; whose tragic death by an accident, not long ago, made thousands mourn. It was produced by Henry Miller at the New York Lyceum Theatre and enjoyed a long run with Laura Hope Crews in the leading female part. The screen adaptation was made by Clara Beranger who wrote scenarios for "Judy of Rogues' Harbor," "The Fear Market" and many other notable successes.

The vital task of directing the production has been entrusted to Jack Dillon—and here again Realart and motion picture fans are to be congratulated. Mr. Dillon's stage training has covered every step from usher and property boy to leading man with foremost actors. As a screen director, he has taken rank as one of the very best. Mary Pickford's current success, "Suds," was made under his direction.

He it was who directed "The Right of Way," starring Bert Lytell; "Out of the Frying Pan" with Jack Pickford; "A Heiress for a Day;" "Wanted—A Husband;" "The Silk Lined Burglar," and many others. Mr. Dillon's sense of dramatic values is really uncanny and all his productions have the stamp of thoroughness and logical continuity.

EXHIBITORS will have, in JUSTINE JOHNSTONE the much-desired "new face" they have been demanding. And they will have her in a story that will set their patrons buzzing with delighted comment. The exhibitor's problem in the past has been to secure new faces, but too often they came in plays that were obviously light and pointless — in the producer's effort to make them, as nearly as possible, fool-proof for the star. An easy-as-pie story and a good assistant director was the old formula for Miss New-Star's First-Release. Miss Johnstone's formula is "Blackbirds"—with every available ounce of Realart production cooperation back of it. Director, scenario, cast, settings—all will be in harmony with Realart standards and each factor will be strongly in evidence in your box office receipts. There's a branch office in your territory. A Word to the Wise From the Greatest of Eyes

I am the eyes of the world, seeing all, knowing all; I am the composite vision of yesterday, today and tomorrow.

I have suspended time, annihilated space, assassinated ignorance, and brought light to the masses.

I have assured the accuracy of history; I have given to the future the key to the past.

Because of me plain men know that Kings are human and that in poor humans are found instincts most noble.

I have recorded the first fanfare of the trumpets of war; I have pictured it in all of its misery.

I have seen men turn to the ways of peace, to the charm of art, to the glory of science, to the happiness of industry.

I have seen all of these things and I have given them to the knowledge and inspiration of men.

Because of me the learning of the few has come to the many, and the world is better.

I delve the Ocean depths, I scale the mountain tops, I reach to the recesses of palace and hovel.

I sweep from the fields of history when others are striving to reach them. The aeroplane is my ally.

I am first to the laboratory, first to the theatre, and first in the minds of the people.

Because of me the motion picture theatre has become the Mecca of the millions and the hope of the future.

THE GREEN FLAME

HERE AGAIN KERRIGAN!

Tremendous business during the hot weather is the test of a star and the screen dramas he lives in.

On the strength of a Kerrigan week at the Regent Theatre, and a week at the Orpheum, Detroit, the Hodkinson Corporation booked the Miles Circuit for all their Kerrigan releases up to 1921.

Robert Brunton productions of Kerrigan pictures are jumping in quality, in value, in popularity. Director Ernest C. Warde believes that "The Green Flame" is the best Kerrigan picture he has yet made—a mystery drama of wide appeal, swift, clear and clean—for all the family.

THE GREEN FLAME

Run of "Riders of the Dawn" extended to two weeks at Tally's Broadway Theatre in Los Angeles where All Critics Proclaim Triumph of Benj. B. Hampton

By May Markson.

"Vivid photodrama, spectacular fires, tenseness, excitement."

From The Los Angeles Record.

By Maud Cheatham.

"Action spelled with capital letters, Romance and stirring adventure."

From The Los Angeles Examiner.

By Guy Price.

Breath-taking in interest from beginning to end, throbbing with the primal and everlasting emotions, redolent of the essence of romance, heart-string tugging, haunting—superlatives that merely approximate the wallop of "Riders of the Dawn," a Benjamin B. Hampton production from a novel by Zane Grey, showing this week at Tally's Broadway.

This great out-of-door story of the wheatfields, of life frequently in the raw, kindles the imagination to a pitch as delightful as amazing. Strong in "story" quality first and last—as was expected of Zane Grey—the acting itself displays rare ability. In it Roy Stewart is quite in the best of form, while the film undoubtedly heralds great things for Claire Adams. And then there are other stars, Robert McKim, Joseph J. Dowling, Marc Robbins, Violet Schram. "Riders of the Dawn" is big, spectacular, thrilling.

From The Los Angeles Herald.

By Grace Kingsley.

"Smashing photoplay, triumph for actors, producer, director."

From The Los Angeles Times.

By Pearl Roll.

"Spectacular scenes taken advantage to an extent that makes the picture one of the best entertainments of the year."

From The Los Angeles Express.

A. Benj. B. Hampton Production Riders of the Dawn by ZANE GREY

"Riders of the Dawn" rode the heat wave in Atlanta with capacity business at the Tudor Theatre. It has played to big business at the Strand, New York, the Strand, Washington, and the Strand in San Francisco. The Clemmer, Seattle, played "Riders of the Dawn" and the Liberty at Portland, at Fresno, at San Jose. Barbee's Loop Theatre at Chicago played it, and Fox's Washington at Detroit, the Royal at Des Moines. "Riders of the Dawn" was a clean up at the Capitol in Springfield, Mass. It is a great picture to exploit, a triumph for the producer and a clean up for the exhibitor.

A Review Versus

Motion Picture News Readers may have read only the News review which is printed herewith:

"Norma Talmadge has succumbed to the epidemic of dual roles and the result is 'Yes or No,' practically two distinct pictures in one in which the versatile and talented star appears as young wives who are objects of attention by philanderers.

"As the wife of the business man she listens to the tempter and when finally he casts her off commits suicide. As the working man's better half she repulses the villain's advances and lives happy ever after, husband inventing a washing machine which brings wealth.

"The moral is, of course, that 'the wages of sin is death' and 'he good if you would be happy.' Both stories are commonplace in plot and incident and only the work of a very good cast, good direction and a careful production make the offering at all interesting, unless the spectator expects that in the latter sequences the two stories will be merged by some unexpected twist and waits with curiosity for this to happen, which however doesn't. The only connection the two stories have is that a maid for the well to do wife is a sister of the other wife.

"Miss Talmadge wears a wig and some fine clothes in the one character, and her own tresses and calves in the other role, with equal grace. Sister Natalie plays the maid we have mentioned, but doesn't make much of an impression either as to looks or ability. The direction is by R. William Nell, who has carried both stories along by cutting from one to the other in sequences. The picture is an adaptation of a play which had a limited run on Broadway a few seasons past.

"At best the offering is a vehicle to display Miss Talmadge's talents and if it succeeds it will be because of her personal popularity and undoubted ability.—Length, 6 reels.—J. S. Dickerson."

HER WORK COLORFUL

Virginia Dale, in the Chicago Daily Journal, says in part:

"Norma Talmadge, supported by what amounts to almost an all star cast in 'Yes or No,' appears in another of her dramatic roles, and appears well. The star conducts herself with great humanness. The colorful and emphatic work which has made Norma Talmadge the popular screen actress she is, is much in evidence in the dual role she plays here. The other players go about their parts with splendid earnestness."

SUSTAINED HUMAN INTEREST

Opinion of the Exhibitor's Trade Review, printed in full:

"This melodrama offers a striking contrast between the lives of two women in diverse surroundings of riches and poverty, both of whom are confronted with the problem of saying 'yes or no' to insistent lovers. The story of the faithful and unfaithful wives, with the former reaping virtue's reward and the latter punishment, is ancient enough. But the material is here so skillfully handled that the fortunes of rich and poor are followed with breathless interest by the spectators and even the conventional 'happy climax' seems eminently satisfactory. The result is a thoroughly entertaining picture of considerable value to exhibitors.

Points of Appeal—Sympathy and suspense are present in generous quantities and the quality of sustained human interest reigns supreme.

Star—Norma Talmadge is versatile and convincing in the dual role, which calls for exceptional dramatic ability in depicting two widely different types of womanhood.

Supporting Cast—Natalie, youngest of the Talmadge sister trio, does excellent work in the role of Emma Martin. Rockcliffe Fellows adds fresh lustre to his already brilliant screen laurels by his clean-cut impersonation of Jack Berry, and adequate support is rendered by the remainder of the company.

Photography and Lighting—Handsome interiors, effective views of the slum districts are in evidence and faultless lighting prevails.

Direction—Unbroken continuity is preserved and Director Nell deserves congratulation for his good taste in merely indicating, instead of showing in greswome detail the suicide of Margaret Vane.

Exploitation—Bill this as a special six-part feature that received very high praise from both press and public when it played at the Strand theatre, New York, recently. Boost heavily the fact that Norma Talmadge plays a dual role in it. Follow suggestions in First National Exhibitors' press sheets for this release."

MISS TALMADGE LOVELY

Excerpt from Mae Tinee's review in the Chicago Daily Tribune:

"Besides the moral, 'Yes or No,' starring Norma Talmadge, has some stunning sets and is well photographed and cast. Miss Talmadge is lovely as both blonde and brunette."

PLAY IT TO LIMIT

Review by the Exhibitors Herald, printed in full:

"Norma Talmadge has a very cleverly arranged vehicle for her latest appearance before the public. It is dramatic and entertaining in itself and it gives the star an excellent opportunity to display those talents which have made her the favorite she is.

"The picture presents Miss Talmadge in two roles. There are two distinct stories, portrayed almost simultaneously. They concern two wives, one rich, one poor. The stories are very similar, though one takes place in a palace and one in a tenement. Each wife thinks herself neglected by her husband. In each case the husband is overworking in order to provide for his family. Each of the wives has an admirer who urges her to go away with him. The endings are different, for one wife says 'Yes' to her tempter and the other says 'No.' 'This idea has been developed with great skill. The characters are realistically portrayed, and the incidents are all true to life and very vivid. The picture is filled with heart interest. The star has never been more appealing and beautiful. Her acting is very good.

"The production has been richly staged and the tinting of the print is exquisite throughout. Miss Talmadge wears some beautiful gowns in the role of the rich man's wife, while her appearance in the humbler estate is a contrast which shows her skill in make-up and characterization.

"The entire cast is well selected. Natalie Talmadge is attractive in a fairly important part, the connecting link between the stories, for she is the maid of the rich woman and the sister of the other.

"You can confidently play up this attraction to the limit. It is sure to please all who see it. Miss Talmadge's admirers will be delighted with her. The unusual features of the story and the puzzling title can be made use of in the advertising."

INTELLIGENT AND ARTISTIC

Observer, in the Chicago Herald and Examiner, says in part:

"Norma Talmadge in 'Yes or No' comes nearer justifying her extraordinary popularity than ever before from sheer good acting, intelligent by-play, artistic suggestions of thought, put over by subtle knowing action. With what art she shows you what she thinks. Miss Talmadge has gone ahead swiftly in the last few months. It is a 'big' picture."

Some Reviews

Other reviews are reprinted for the benefit of Motion Picture News readers whose bookings are influenced by reviews, and without in any manner criticizing the judgment of the News reviewer or wishing to affect its freedom or influence.

EXCELLENT IN DUAL ROLE

Criticism by W. K. Hollander in the Chicago Daily News, printed in full:

"'Yes or No,' being a popular discussion and having the services of Norma Talmadge in two distinctive and widely different portraiture, will be welcomed by the actress' friends and cinema devotees generally."

Herein the spectator again observes the temptations that beset neglected wives whose husbands are pre-occupied with their industrial affairs. The preachment is familiar and perhaps lengthy but none the less impressive and sustains the observer's interests until the lesson it touches has been thoroughly learned.

The dramatist makes known the information that the same danger lurks in the home of the poor as steals inside the mansion of the rich. The social parasite plies his trade everywhere. In the slums he is an uncouth and unprincipled weakling, while in the upper social sphere, he is suave and debonair, a clubman usually and generally respected. Each deals with his prey in a manner born of his breeding. The former is coarse and even brutal when his urgings fall on deaf ears, while the latter is polished in his cunning and seemingly polite and gentlemanly.

Miss Talmadge has the responsibilities of both neglected wives. She drudges along over the washtub and her mending without enjoying the slightest entertainment as her ambitious husband labors diligently at his trade. And she is the aristocratic Mrs. Vane, a social leader, who enjoys all the comforts and luxuries a woman could desire save the attentions of her husband. Miss Talmadge sustains both roles expertly. Her versatility never came to the surface more potently than in her current offering. And she has excellent support. The play is at the Randolph.

"YES OR NO" A TRIUMPH

Excerpt from the New York Globe:

"Norma Talmadge in 'Yes or No' at the Strand is a triumph. From the first reel to the last it is primarily Norma Talmadge with all her screen magnetism and imaginative power. She has also the rare quality of sincerity. It is an excellent cast, skillfully directed."

FULL OF HUMAN INTEREST

P. S. Harrison's reports, as printed in full, says:

"'Yes or No' with Norma Talmadge is an excellent picture. It is full of human interest."

"It is a dual role subject, the heroine assuming both roles. In the one, she is the wife of a wealthy man; in the other, that of a poor workman. The wealthy woman, though possessing everything that money can buy, is unhappy, because her husband is too engrossed in his business; the poor wife is happy and contented in a love of her husband and two children."

"The wealthy woman leaves her husband and follows a young man, who professes love to her. He does not keep his promise to marry her, but soon casts her off. She commits suicide. The poor wife turns a deaf ear to the advances of a young man. She fights him, and her husband, hero, throws him out of the house. In time, the family becomes wealthy through an invention of the hero's."

"The picture is really a contrast between the characters of two women. The picture has been handled so delicately, that it nowhere gives offense."

Rob Reel, in the Chicago American, says in part:

"The latest Norma Talmadge offering 'Yes or No' is truly one of her best. She has plenty to do, for she plays a dual role."

DOES FINE WORK

Excerpt from the New York News:

"Norma Talmadge does fine work in 'Yes or No'—fine, honest playing. She has an assured screen presence, a cameo-like loveliness of profile, and a trick of making you believe in the character she plays."

PLEASING TO LOOK UPON

Excerpt from the New York Times:

"Norma Talmadge in each of her roles in 'Yes or No' is as pleasing to look upon and as definite in pantomime as she always is."

ALL WILL ENJOY IT

Review by Genevieve Harris, in the Chicago Evening Post, printed in full:

"Norma Talmadge admirers and others are going to enjoy 'Yes or No' because of the good work of the star and because of the cleverness of the drama."

"In it there are two distinct stories, or rather one plot worked out in two settings. Miss Talmadge has a double role, a rich man's wife and a poor man's wife. Into the lives of the two women, who have no connection with each other except that the sister of one is the maid of the other, there comes the same problem. Each believes herself neglected by her husband. Each has an admirer, who wishes to take her away from her husband."

"The stories of the two women's lives are shown in parallel scenes, and form therefore a most interesting contrast. Also this gives Miss Talmadge a rare opportunity for demonstrating her skill in characterization and make up. As the situations are developed, the story shifts from one setting to another, and shows the similarity and contrasts. The endings are different, for one of the women says 'Yes' to the tempter, and the other says 'No.' One encounters tragedy and one goes on to a happy future."

"The picture has been handled with rare skill. The stories are very real and the characterizations vivid. Each member of the cast seems just the right person for his or her role and each plays with great sincerity. Miss Talmadge is at her best in acting and appearance. Her role of the rich man's wife gives her an opportunity to wear lovely clothes, while as the other woman she proves that her charm is not dependent on pretty costumes."

"Natalie Talmadge as the quick tempered sister of Mrs. Berry and Mrs. Vane's maid, further impresses one with her real histrionic talent as well as charm. Rockcliffe Follows is more at home in the role of the serious young mechanic than he was in the comely roles he has played recently. Likewise, Gladden James makes a better villain than a hero."

"The tinting of the picture, especially the closing scenes, is worth comment. The garden scene at the end is unusually beautiful in these days of beautiful screen pictures."

"You are quite sure to enjoy 'Yes or No.' It is one of the best Norma Talmadge has appeared in, and it is above the average of the photoplays we have been offered recently."

Selling the Public

IT isn't the hook that a fish tries to swallow,—it's the bait, and what bait is to a fish hook are RITCHEY posters to a photoplay.

The exhibitor who would get the money of the public has need for a tempting poster,—an attractive poster,—a powerful poster with the maximum of advertising value,—in a word, a RITCHEY poster. For after all is said and done, the one method for selling the most motion picture tickets is through the poster. Therefore the one aim of the RITCHEY LITHO. CORP. is to sell the maximum number of tickets for the exhibitor at all times, and upon every occasion. Further, it is the one poster producing concern that can do that because it has developed and built into its organization practically every great poster advertising expert in the world. Their efforts, perfectly guided and directed, are entirely devoted to the production of ticket selling posters. As a result the poster with the RITCHEY trademark is the poster that attains the maximum of box-office receipts.

The exhibitor pays for the best poster attainable. There is only one such poster,—the RITCHEY poster. When he doesn't get that he doesn't get what he is paying for. The one thing he does get after using an ordinary poster is a good reason for demanding RITCHEY posters!

No Politics on the Screen

THE exhibitor has been aptly described as a local publisher. His screen is the town's photographic newspaper.

Just as the newspaper receives from the Associated Press or some other agency the news of the day, so the exhibitor gets through his news weekly the illustrations of the world's current happenings. His drama and comedy may be compared with the newspaper's syndicated stories; his scenics and novelties in general with the newspaper's syndicated features.

This comparison has thus far been made chiefly in connection with the subject of screen advertising—to bring out these points: that the exhibitor, like the newspaper, should be paid for any screen advertising; that the exhibitor, like the newspaper, must be watchful not to be fooled by any concealed advertising in his films; that the exhibitor, like the newspaper, must hold the confidence and goodwill of his audience by labeling clearly that which is advertising and by not forcing it or making it overbalance his program.

The analogy is a good one; and it answers equally well when we bring into consideration that very important subject: the screen and politics.

* * *

AS a local publisher, the exhibitor can, like the newspaper, run a Republican, Democratic, Socialist—or what not screen. This is within his choice and power. He can, for instance, write his own editorials, partisan or independent in tone, and run them on slides. But he must do this of his own free will, with his eyes open, and, as in the case of advertising, he must take all the consequences, pocket all the profit or loss of this experiment with the tastes and minds of his audience.

What he does not want, what he will not tolerate, what he cannot endure, is to have any political advertising "slipped over" on him—to have, in other words, his dramas, comedies, novelties, above all his news reels, tampered with at their source.

The power of the screen is great—too obviously great to be overlooked by the political managers. The power of the press has been coveted by them. The power of the screen is even greater. There may be some political managers who believe the screen can be subsidized; there may be some within this industry ignorant enough and dishonest enough to assure the politician that so glittering an opportunity exists.

To all such we wish to say that the scheme is as false as it is glittering.

Individual theatres may be purchased outright, just as newspapers have been bought by the political parties—though we wouldn't like the job of running a partisan picture theatre.

But as for "slipping over" political propaganda—it can't be done. The attempt might make a dent in the good name of the motion picture—but nothing like the dent of the recoil upon the perpetrators of the scheme.

* * *

TAKE the news reel. It bears to the screen exactly the same relation the Associated Press bears to the newspaper. It is a neutral news agency. If it isn't honest it isn't anything.

To be specific, if any news reel entered into a campaign of political propaganda the fact would be eagerly proclaimed to the public by a sufficient number of newspapers. It would be told to the trade by this publication, for one, in as large a type as we could use. Any exhibitor would be a fool to run such a news reel unless he charged for it a price equal to the value he put on his theatre lease, fixtures and goodwill.

The same is true of any out and out campaign through slides, film trailers and the like.

As for dramas and comedies, any political propaganda, however cleverly dressed, is out of the question just as it is on even the cheapest speaking stage. It is impracticable.

President Brady of the National Association was 100% right when he stated, recently, that the "screen cannot enter politics." We believe it equally correct to say that politics cannot enter the screen with the emphasis upon "cannot."

W. A. Johnston

"The Year's Big Problem" What Exhibitors Think of William A. Johnston's Editorial

July 7, 1920.

Wm. A. Johnston,
MOTION PICTURE NEWS,
New York City, N. Y.

Dear Mr. Johnston:

WHEN I read your editorial in issue of July 3, I laid the NEWS down and said to myself, "Well, God bless that man."

I have been "hollering" my head off to the film pirates who call on me about just that very thing. Of course I realize that the traveling salesman isn't at fault when the company sends him out with a schedule of prices on various subjects and tells him such-and-such is the minimum. I also realize that a letter of protest from an exhibitor in a town of this size would get a fellow just about as far.

The NEWS has always posed as the paper which would fight the exhibitor's battles, and believe me, you've certainly hit a point now that I agree with you is vital with the small-town man. With an organization like yours to wake up some of the producers and jolt some sense into their methods of price-setting, we should be able to get some consideration.

I am not deeply versed in the ways employed in setting these scales of prices for a picture, but it looks to me like some fellow at a desk in New York who is an adept at figures must have a system and scale whereby he can say, "Cost of production and distribution —. Podunk has a population of —." Then he puts a few figures on a piece of paper, and he sends his list of prices to the various exchanges with Podunk listed to pay what New York thinks or guesses is right.

This man does not know any more about my town than I do about his, and I claim that he doesn't know what I can afford to pay for a picture any more than I would know about trying to set a price for New York. He doesn't know the per cent of foreigners who live here and do not come to my place. He does not know my people at all. He may have some "dope" on a piece of paper, but I am here to tell you that the old adage which says one must live with a person to know them is true, and it is true in the game of exhibition of motion pictures. Let some of those fellows come out here, live with our folks and learn their likes and dislikes.

Mr. Traveling-Salesman says, "Why, that picture jammed them in at the Capitol for seventeen weeks, and it took the police hours to clear the sidewalks in front of the so-and-so theatre in Denver." Maybe so. New York supports Grand Opera a certain number of months out of the year, too, but I would hate to try to finance a grand opera company in this burg at New York prices. (I mean admission prices.) There are not enough who can afford it, and furthermore there are not enough people here who will appreciate it. Take "Broken Blossoms." A wonderful thing! Everything about it was wonderful for those who could see to the depths of it and were not horrified at the magnificent portrayal of characters. In New York there were enough of those who appreciated it, enough of those who went through curiosity; enough who went because someone else boosted it, and those who went to be fashionable—enough of all of these to put it over. Come out to some of these little towns, and you will find that we do not have our proportion of those classes of people. Figures on paper are not a just method of setting prices.

I heard a nation-wide famous star say that people were alike the world over and what one district liked, another would like. There is too much of that belief prevalent in film circles. It's wrong!

Communities differ just as individuals differ. The Southerner likes certain things to eat and drink; the Northerner eats differently and mixes his drinks differently. Jones lives on the eastern slope in Colorado and says it is the ideal climate, etc., while Smith says the same thing about the western slope. A certain number of Joneses get together and form a community with certain likes; a bunch of Smiths do the same, and we have communities of different likes and dislikes. And so, I contend that it does not follow that a picture will go over in all communities because it does in some. Therefore it is not worth the same pro-rated rental price in all communities according to population.

Many a big feature plays Denver which I would like to bring to my town just for the purpose of satisfying the wants of some of my people, because I know they are craving that sort of thing. If I could give this certain class what they want now and then, I would have a stronger hold on them for the balance of the time; but I cannot book some classes of pictures if I have to pay a tabulated, population-scheduled price because I do not have my allotted proportion of that class of people as compared with some other community.

Why not hire men for exchange managers who can be relied upon to get the best possible for the company, and give them a reasonably free rein in the matter of price setting. By coming in closer contact with the individual exhibitors he will be in a better position to regulate the rental price than some fellow in New York.

Producers do not seem to realize to what end they are driving the small-town exhibitor. He cannot pay these terrific prices for pictures on this prearranged schedule system and thereby loses out on many of the biggest and best productions. He plays the cheaper pictures which are within his reach and cheapens his business and himself in the eyes of his patrons and fellow citizens who do not understand the conditions.

I sure hope to goodness that some influential force like yourself will open the eyes of these price-setters, make them give the exchange-manager a little freedom and provide a chance for him to display a little individuality instead of being a mere machine, controlled by some distant master-wheel. They will get just as much money in the long run, and the industry as a whole will show in a better light with the public.

Let me say again, you have hit on an important matter in regard to the "eighty per centers," and I trust that you will continue to pound on this and not let it drop with a mere mention.

Yours truly,

OLE M. NELSON.

Gentlemen:

PERMIT us to congratulate you on your editorial, "The Year's Big Problem," by Mr. William A. Johnston, concerning the exhibitors in small towns. We operate a 240-seat house two nights a week in a town of 865 population at 10 and 20 cents, and the price we have to pay for five-reel pictures prohibits us from using them for the patrons in the rural districts have their limits as to what they will pay to see a picture show. We always have our advertising matter up one week in advance of showing. We use photos, one's and three's, and run weekly ads in the local paper. We use the latest type Simplex machine, motor driven, and make a picture 94x126, and many nights our gross would be under seven dollars. Our pictures are as plain and sharp as in any theatre, but the five-reel program pictures we get generally have a footage of 3,800 to 4,000 feet. We have tried using some of the higher-priced pictures and advertised them in the surrounding towns, but the price of admission asked keeps them away, for the simple reason that they can go to the larger towns from fifteen to twenty-five miles away and see the same picture at 17 and 28 cents, tax included, when we would have to have 20 and 35 cents if we could see our way out.

It has always been our argument that the small exhibitor is the goat in the motion-picture industry. He pays the highest rental of any exhibitor in the business, and he does it in this way. The man with the house which seats from 700 to 1,200, pays $100 for a picture. He runs it two days. The picture will be put through the machine from four to six times each day, which makes the film cost him from $12.50 to $15.00 each time it is run. If the small exhibitor wants to run it, the distributor wants from $25 to $50 for it, and the little fellow would put it through his machine one time. Is it right?

P. S. We appreciate the reviews in the News, and it would not be worth half as much to us if they were omitted.

CARESS BROS.

W. A. Johnston,
MOTION PICTURE NEWS,
New York, N. Y.

Y OUR editorial, "The Year's Big Problem," is indeed timely right now, when many of the small-town houses are being operated at a loss and many are preparing to quit the business.

In a town of 1,100 people, we own our own property and by keeping operating expenses down to the lowest point, we are still able to realize a profit; and the moment the balance is on the left-hand side of the ledger for the month, then we will quit the business and either rent or sell our house for other purposes.

We are paying today over thirty per cent of receipts for rentals, and today from one of the larger production companies who are just now making a drive for next year's business, we have the information that careful estimates and budgets were compiled by the New York office during the managers' conference held in that city, with the result that a fifty per cent advance was considered equitable under present conditions, and of course the long line of argument explaining the why thereof.

Will we pay it? No, we will not. We shall seek service elsewhere, and if it cannot be found at a rental price whereby we can make a dollar, then it will be us for the tall timber as far as exhibiting pictures goes.

Production costs, exchange operation costs, and New York managers' decisions are not to be considered by the small-town manager. He can only pay according to what the box-office returns are to him. And today that fellow who depends on a picture-business for a livelihood in communities of 1,500 or less is looking for something else to give his time and energy to for making his money.

It seems that no consideration is given a small-town house in the fact that many of the managers are now showing but one show an evening, meaning that the film is run through the machine but the once, thereby saving the wear that constant usage gives to it. We will make the assertion that we are paying much more in proportion to the times run than any house in the state of Illinois, in cities of 40,000 population or over.

The question of high admission-prices in the small towns has been tried out time and again with what result! He, the exhibitor, cannot make a dollar on the big specials; his regular business is crippled for a week, and he has lost money.

We have never seen figures from a New York office to show how the small-town manager can increase his attendance or how he expects to have larger box-office receipts by raising admission prices.

There is only one decision for the small exhibitor to make, and that is to say, I will not show unless I can make a reasonable amount of money for the time expended; and if service cannot be had for a living price, bid the business good-by and make your money in other lines.

Respectfully yours,

CARSON T. METCALF, Manager.

The Test:

¶ About a year ago we published the complete returns in a test of motion picture trade paper strength conducted by one large film company. The voting in that test found Motion Picture News a THREE to ONE leader over its nearest competitor.

Two weeks ago another large film company completed an exhaustive direct-to-the-exhibitor test. The plain, straightforward question was asked: "What trade paper do you find most useful to you in your work?"

¶ The result? Naturally, Motion Picture News in the lead. And, of course, in the lead by a wide margin. But the big, outstanding fact:

"It takes the votes cast for the four nearest trade papers combined to equal the number cast for Motion Picture News."

The "Four to One" paper of the field—Motion Picture News!

¶ The exact figures as to each trade paper are interesting. Eliminating the scattered votes and narrowing it down to the four leading trade papers, we find Motion Picture News a three-and-one-third to one preference over the trade paper now carrying the nearest number of advertising pages.

The figures give it slightly better than a three-and-one-third to one lead over the trade paper carrying the next nearest number of advertising pages.

And two-and-two-thirds times as strong as the paper ranking second in the test.

¶ A total of 1779 exhibitors expressed their preference. Of these votes, 1525 were divided among the first four trade papers. And here are the figures:

Motion Picture News.....	777
Second paper.....	287
Third paper.....	231
Fourth paper.....	230

The total cast for the three nearest papers falls shy of meeting the Motion Picture News vote by twenty-nine votes!

¶ The remaining 254 votes were scattered among twenty-eight papers. One sectional publication received three times as many votes as were given to one national medium.

Out of the total votes cast Motion Picture News alone received practically as many votes as were cast for thirty-one other publications put together.

The film company conducting this test has requested that we withhold its identity

Some Conclusions:

¶ More theatres read and prefer MOTION PICTURE NEWS than all the other trade papers combined.

¶ Every dollar spent in advertising in MOTION PICTURE NEWS is worth just 34 cents in another trade paper, 26 cents in another and 24 cents in another.

¶ When advertising is rotated or duplicated the advertiser only gets in other trade papers from 1-4 to 1-3 the pulling power of MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

You cannot reach the majority of the exhibitors of the country with any other trade paper than MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

Why?

Because the majority, by their own testimony in this test, say they prefer—and that means they only read—the MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

¶ According to this showing the "NEWS" advertising rate should be at least four times that of any other paper—either that, or in the advertiser's own best interests, the "NEWS" should carry all of his announcements all the time and most of his selling campaign.

¶ Exhibitors prefer MOTION PICTURE NEWS to any other trade paper upwards of four to one. They say so.

If your pictures, Mr. Advertiser, were preferred 4 to 1 would you ask a price as low as the other fellow's?

We simply ask that you—in your own interests—put your advertising where it pulls 4 to 1.

The company conducting this test has kindly given us permission to make the figures public, but requests that its own identity be withheld

Strike of Laboratory Workers Hits New York

2,000 Employees Walk Out When Producers Fail to Meet Demands

THE film industry in New York and vicinity was startled on Tuesday, July 20th, to learn that more than 2,000 laboratory workers in the large studios and independent concerns in the city had gone out on strike. The walk-out is the result of a series of demands issued by the Motion Picture Craftsmen, which is local No. 614 of the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees and Motion Picture Machine Operators of the United States and Canada.

These demands were first presented on June 5th to the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry and all manufacturers of film. Perhaps the most important feature is the section which states that all manufacturers of film shall be obliged to charge not less than four and a half cents per foot for all film produced in their laboratories. In addition the workers insist that the official seal of the Local Union be used on all film; that there be a shop steward, appointed by the union, in each laboratory, who will act upon the employer's right to discharge a man, and, in case of such discharge, to fill the vacancy with another member of the union.

Complete recognition of their organization is demanded by the workers. Increase in wages, graded from $125 per week for an assistant superintendent to $50 a week for foremen of the various laboratory departments, are also demanded. Laboratory assistants are to receive from $40 to $20 a week. These increases, it is said, amount to approximately 35 per cent more than the present schedule.

Ten legal holidays a year; time and a half for overtime; and double time for overtime between midnight and eight in the morning; and a forty-four-hour week complete the more important items upon the list of demands.

The opposing forces differ greatly in their claims as to the actual extent and effect of the strike. The Motion Picture Craftsmen stated on Wednesday that seven independent laboratories had already met their demands. The larger companies were still holding out. The only communication received by them from the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry stated that the producers would be willing to meet representatives of the workers to discuss the matter fully, provided the union would suspend the strike and send its members back to the laboratories. This communication was acted upon on Tuesday evening, July 20th, when a mass meeting, said to be attended by 2,000, was held at Bryant Hall, in New York City. The meeting voted unanimously to reject the suggestions, as the National Association gave no assurance

Politicians Are Warned Against Seeking Screen

PRESIDENT SYDNEY S. COHEN, of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, has addressed a letter to the candidates for president and vice-president on both the Republican and Democratic tickets and to the chairmen of each National Committee, warning them against unauthorized individuals who go up and down the political world offering the screens of the country for the benefit of certain parties and causes, or certain candidates.

He states that the motion picture screens of the country belong entirely to the theatre owners and that no manufacturer, distributor, or press agent has any right to pledge them. Any person so offering the screen is said to be doing so without the consent, knowledge, and against the vigorous protest of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America.

as to when the matter would be settled.

At the headquarters of the National Association reports had been received showing that the second day of the strike found most of the laboratories still able to do business. The Pathe Bound Brook and Jersey City laboratories were running as usual, according to E. R. Pearson, of Pathe, and the forces were still intact on Wednesday afternoon. At the Robertson-Cole Corporation, it was stated that the strike could last thirty days without affecting them, as they were far ahead in their prints.

The Republic studio was another laboratory that was running one hundred per cent on the second day of the strike. The Erbograp and Evans studios reported half of their forces working. Vitagraph stated that it had more men at work on Wednesday than on the first day of the walkout. Universal was also active, according to reports of the National Association, and the Kessel laboratory, after closing the first day, opened on Wednesday afternoon. Although the Fox News Weekly experienced difficulty, Mr. Kaufman, of Fox, reports that it was successfully managed with only a negligible delay. Famous Players-Lasky's Long Island City laboratory was closed entirely during the first two days of the strike. The Dobbs laboratory was working twenty-five per cent and the Biograph only ten per cent. The Film Developing Company reported fifteen per cent of its employees in the laboratory, and stated that it would start to replace the strikers as rapidly as possible. According to the statement of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, strikers were planning to return to work at the Paragon studios.

In the statement issued to the daily press, the local union stated that laboratory workers had not received an increase of more than two per cent in the past four years. In answer to this Thomas Evans, laboratory man, is quoted as saying that he is willing to open his books to show that in many cases workers had received an increase of one hundred per cent during that time.

The National Association stated their willingness to discuss all the mooted points, provided the men returned to work, but refused emphatically to be dictated as to the price at which they should sell their product. In addition, they stated that it was almost an impossibility to accede to the union on the question of placing the seal on all film, in view of the fact that the Eastman Kodak Company is an open shop and employs little or no union labor in its manufacture of film. As this company manufactures the greatest amount of film footage consumed it is said to be impossible to use the union label, even if the laboratories were willing to do so.

Among the laboratory owners who are said to have agreed to the thirty-five per cent raise are D. W. Griffith, the Rex Laboratories, the Tremont, the Dietz, and Democracy. Kinograms, Selznick News and Gaumont experienced no difficulty in reaching the screen on time, but the union leaders prophesy that the other news weeklies will not appear unless their demands are met.

Different claims are also made by both factions regarding the actual number of men on strike. The first claim of the Motion Picture Craftsmen was that fully 2,700 of its members had walked out. At the National Association office it was said that this report was exaggerated.

An interesting question arising from the strike is the possibility of it becoming nation-wide in scope. The New York union threatens that it will not be kept local if their demands are not met. The larger producing companies will be able to shift their developing centers from New York to the West in case the strike continues for any great length of time. It was stated at the National Association that there appeared little possibility of it extending beyond New York, but at the strikers' headquarters, on the other hand, the belief was just as emphatically expressed that the walkout would soon assume large proportions. Both factions seemed confident of success—the National Association that the strike would end in smoke, and the union that there would not be a foot of film being developed in New York in a short time. Complete satisfaction with the condition of affairs as they stood Wednesday afternoon was expressed by both parties.

Adolph Zukor Issues Statement on Theatre-Acquisition

"Has No Desire to Destroy Any Exhibitor," He Says in Defending Policy

IN an interview given last week to the MOTION PICTURE NEWS, Adolph Zukor, president of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, said:

"The sole aim of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation is now, and has been since the beginning, the production of the best motion-pictures that brains and money can make. To this end we are concentrating all our thought, all our resources. That has been our policy in the past; that will be our policy in the future.

"Since the beginning of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation we at all times have been prepared to sell our product to any and every exhibitor who is willing to buy it at prices equitable to the exhibitor and producer alike. I cannot make that too strong.

"Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has no desire to destroy any exhibitor. Our business, as I said before, is to make and distribute pictures. But, in order that the present high standard of our productions be maintained, it is necessary that our pictures shall get the widest possible distribution, and we are acquiring theatres only in towns where we feel that our productions will not, otherwise, have a fair show.

"I have never authorized, nor has any other official of this corporation, to my knowledge, authorized any salesman, agent or representative to threaten any exhibitor that if he does not buy our pictures we will buy him out or build a theatre to compete with his. I want you to remember that; you cannot make it too strong.

"If it is ever brought to my attention that a salesman or representative made a statement of that kind, he will be discharged instantly. And if it is proved that any employee of this company makes such a threat in the future that employee will be discharged.

"The truth is that we control only a few theatres, anyway. The number is surprisingly small.

"As I said, it is not our purpose to menace the exhibitor, nor are we attempting to put him out of business by the acquisition of theatres. I know perfectly well that the producer cannot exist without the exhibitor. I also know that the exhibitor is better able to run a theatre in his own community than is a producer whose headquarters are in New York, for the reason that the exhibitor is on the ground and knows the town and the methods to be employed in conducting the theatre—better than the producer possibly can know.

"At the same time there are a number of towns in the country which are controlled to such an extent that it is impossible for us to obtain fair prices—prices consistent with the merit and cost of our pictures. Under such conditions we are forced to seek an opportunity to properly present our pictures in that locality.

"A month ago I stated that Famous Players-Lasky Corporation was ready at all times to confer with a committee representing all exhibitors, these to include those exhibitors who are producing and distributing pictures. I proposed a full discussion of the whole matter of a conference between representatives of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation and those opposing our policy. I suggest that several men be chosen from each side—

English Authors Write Original Scenarios

AN announcement of unusual interest was made by Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, following his arrival on last Saturday in New York after a six-weeks' sojourn in London and Paris. Mr. Lasky stated that a large number of the leading British novelists and dramatists had been engaged to write directly for the screen through Paramount Pictures. Several of them will come to America this fall to study the technique of the motion-picture in the Lasky studios in Hollywood and also in the East.

"Sir James M. Barrie, author of 'Peter Pan,' 'What Everywoman Knows,' 'The Little Minister' and a number of other of the leading plays in modern English literature will come to New York in the fall," Mr. Lasky said, "to assist in the production of 'Peter Pan' as a Paramount Picture in the new $2,000,000 Famous Players-Lasky studio in Long Island City."

Sir James also has written a play especially for Paramount Pictures. This scenario, which was finished while Mr. Lasky was in London, Mr. Lasky brought back with him.

Arnold Bennett is now writing an original play for Paramount. Edward Knoblock, who also has begun on a play especially for Paramount, is coming to America next season to supervise the filming of the production and to study screen technique.

Compton Mackenzie is another British author who will come to this country soon to learn more about how motion pictures are made.

H. G. Wells, Mr. Lasky stated, has agreed to adapt a number of his own works for Paramount, rewriting the stories, if necessary, so that they will be more suitable for the requirements of the screen.

Henry Arthur Jones, the well-known British playwright, is finishing a play especially for Paramount. George Bernard Shaw, with whom Mr. Lasky engaged in an exchange of letters to the London newspapers, has evinced a deep interest in motion pictures, but has not yet decided to write directly for the screen.

say seven—and that the discussion be held in the presence of representatives of the trade press.

"I propose this for the purpose of bringing about harmony and understanding in all branches of the industry for the benefit of all.

"That is the proposition I made a month ago. It still stands. I have nothing to conceal. All my cards are on the table."

In a supplementary statement issued Thursday by Mr. Zukor, he laid emphasis on the fact that he has taken personal charge of the theatre-owning controversy.

The gist of his statement follows:

"I have taken personal charge of this end of our business and I will consider it a personal favor if any exhibitor having a grievance against us shall make his complaint to me personally, or by wire or letter. I promise that I shall myself investigate all such complaints, and I guarantee that I shall see that absolute justice is done. I cannot say this too strongly, for the good will of the people we serve is the keystone of our business structure. I value the respect of every exhibitor far above the business he may give me.

"I am now collecting from all the exchange zones of the country data bearing on the controversy that developed at the Convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America at Cleveland.

"At the earliest possible moment with this data on hand I will present the facts so that the exhibitors of the country, can clearly understand the position of myself and my associates, and so that they will be fully apprised of the fact that our institution desires to maintain friendly and amicable business relations with the exhibitors of the United States. It will be in the future as it has been in the past my policy to cater to the good will of the exhibitor first, last and all the time.

"Let me reiterate: Our position has always been open and above board. That's our position now. I am in my office every day. The door is always open. I am in charge, and any exhibitor having a complaint to make has my promise that I, personally, will investigate his grievance and see that any cause for complaint which may exist is corrected immediately."

Proctor Resigns Post

Ralph Proctor has resigned as assistant general manager of Associated Exhibitors, Inc., effective August 1st. Mr. Proctor states that his future plans are not as yet clearly defined and an announcement of them would not be made for a few days.

Joseph Klein to Manage Schwab Productions

Joseph Klein, for the past year manager of the New York Exchange, First National Exchange, Incorporated, has resigned his position, effective July 24th, to join the D. N. Schwab Productions, Incorporated, of which organization he is a stockholder.

Mr. Klein takes up his duties as general manager and a member of the board of directors, supervising the distribution end of all D. N. Schwab Productions, in which David Butler is starred.

Their first production, entitled "Fickle Women," is being sold on State right basis.

Famous Players Theatres in St. Louis Robbed

With the aid of dynamite safeblowers obtained currency amounting to $2,054 from the vaults of the Kings theatre in St. Louis, Mo., early on the morning of Sunday, July 18th. The loot represented the Saturday receipts of the Kings, at 800 Kings Highway, and the Mozart Airdome, at Delmar and Bayard Boulevards. Both theatres are operated by the Famous Players-Lasky Missouri Corporation.

Frederick Shipman

A "Baby First National" Is Formed in India

Frederic Shipman, who arrived in New York several days ago, brings with him the news of the formation of what he describes as a "baby First National" in India. It is a co-operative association which Mr. Shipman himself organized, and which is known as the Frederic Shipman Pictures, Ltd., of India. It is, according to Mr. Shipman, a new condition of affairs in the East that will undoubtedly have a far-reaching effect upon the film business in India.

The premier pictures theatres of Calcutta and Bombay and other cities of India, comprising altogether the leading houses in twenty-two of India's largest centers, are now members. It took Shipman less than one month to organize the association, of which the stock is owned by managers of theatres in the cities represented. He states that the theatres yet to be acquired and those arranged for construction will bring the membership of the circuit up to fifty first class houses. Mr. Shipman is managing director of the company.

The organizer has long been in the show business, but this is his first large venture into the motion picture field. Before the formation of the circuit each theatre was buying independently. He states that the time was ripe for the organization of such a circuit, and that his efforts met with enthusiastic response.

Mr. Shipman is now on a flying visit to the United States. He will remain in New York for only ten days, in which time he will arrange to buy pictures for his circuit, and then will leave for California. He will return to India via Japan, inspecting, as he goes, the motion picture conditions in that country.

Tom Hamlin Addresses Meeting of A.M.P.A.

That Regional Trade Publications in no wise contend or conflict with the larger Motion Picture Trade Journals of national scope, but function strictly as purveyors of topical and local interest, was the opinion expressed by Tom Hamlin, president of the Regional Trade Paper Association, in an address on "The Doctrine of the Regional Trade Paper," delivered before the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers at their meeting this week. Mr. Hamlin, founder of Amusements, Minneapolis, laid stress on the usefulness of the local trade journal to the exhibitor, by whom, he remarked, it was regarded in the light of the "home town" paper and provided an effective means of contact with the special district of its publication.

The position of regional papers being notably of interest to the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers, a number of the members took occasion to put questions on his subject to the speaker.

Booklet Sells Well as Publicity Measure

The Broadwest Films, Ltd., London, England, is testing out a new angle in publicity by the publication and sale of a pamphlet which sets forth in an interesting style the history, purpose and studio facilities of this London picture company. The pamphlet, which is titled "A Real Romance of the Films," is written strictly from the "movie fan" angle. It sells for the sum of one shilling, post free. Postcard photographs of popular players are inserted in the booklet.

The text is given a pleasant touch of variety by the insertion, at frequent intervals, of half-tone reproductions of studio-views, play settings and actors. Artistically arranged from the typographical end, and couched in a pure and unaffected mode of language from the literary viewpoint, the information included in the pages of this little book is just of the character to appeal to the sight and mind of the average picture enthusiast.

Realart Branch Manager Is Promoted

John MacMeekin, Realart's Kansas City manager, has been promoted to the post of special representative for the company, and will come East to assume his new duties as soon as his successor has been installed, perhaps early in August.

Diaz Callahan, manager of Realart's Dallas office, has been named to succeed Mr. MacMeekin in Kansas City, and is now on the ground becoming familiar with his new territory.

Chilean Showman Studies Conditions on Coast

George Meranda, owner of a circuit of eight theatres in and near Rancagua, Chile, South America, is in Los Angeles to study theatre conditions and film production work with the view of building a number of additional theatres in Chile on the style of American houses and probably engaging in production work at a later period. Mr. Meranda represents the Guggenheim interests in Chile.

Officers Are Elected by S. Rankin Drew Post

At a regular meeting of the S. Rankin Drew Post, American Legion, of New York, held on Tuesday, July 13, the following officers were elected for the year beginning August 1:

Commander, Wells Hawks; first vice-commander, James M. Loughborough; second vice-commander, Floyd W. Stoker; third vice-commander, George F. Hinton; adjutant, Leo A. Pollock; finance officer, S. G. Gumpertz; historian, Joseph P. Reddy; chaplain, Rev. Peter E. Hoey.

The executive committee consists of Victor Shapiro, Gordon H. Standing, William G. Newman, Eugene J. Zukor, Arthur Rankin and Paul McAllister.

Paul Cromelin Reviews Conditions in Foreign Film Fields

PAUL H. CROMELIN, president and general manager of the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation, arrived in New York on last Saturday, July 17, after a nine-months' tour of Continental Europe. During this time, Mr. Cromelin has been able to observe film conditions abroad at close quarters, and some interesting details are incorporated in the following statement which he has authorized for publication.

"Conditions in the various countries are so different at the present time that it is difficult to generalize. In England the recovery since the war has been remarkably rapid, and things are assuming the normal much more quickly than in most of the continental countries. The adverse exchange conditions naturally makes it more difficult for the British buyer to invest in American films, but this does not stand in the way of business if the films are good and are the kind that are wanted.

"The principal problem confronting the film business in England is the very great length of time between the first trade showing of a new production and its release date in the theatres. It is not at all uncommon for bookings to be made from 16 to 18 months ahead, and this, as can readily be understood, is not a healthful condition. The theatres are well patronized and the prices obtained average higher than prevails in the United States. The shows generally speaking, are not up to American standards.

"There is room for several thousand additional motion picture houses in the United Kingdom, but on account of the lack of building materials, shortage and high price of labor and the necessity for providing homes first, the authorities are withholding permits and the construction of new motion picture theatres is not looked upon with favor for the time being. In England, as in all the rest of the world at the present time, there seems to be a very great shortage of ordinary housing facilities. The word has gone out that the people must be provided with suitable homes before permits will be given to erect picture theatres.

"In France there is a general complaint because of the very low prices which are being paid by the theatres for the use of the films, and the present condition of business in France is not at all healthful. There are entirely too many pictures available for the number of theatres to be served and remedial legislation has been under consideration with a view to reducing the number of productions brought into the French market, limiting the quantity of raw stock for which permission to import may be obtained. This tends to encourage the manufacture of French raw stock and the printing of positive films from foreign negatives in France, and discouraging if not entirely debarring the shipment of positive prints in quantities into that market.

"Belgium gives an air of great hustle and prosperity, and seems to be recovering more quickly than any of the other continental countries. Brussels in particular has an air of liveliness which is lacking in most of the continental cities today. The Belgians are buckling down to their problems and are making the most of the aid and assistance which has been gladly extended from all sides.

"On account of the complete embargo against the importation of motion pictures into Germany, that market for the time being is not of immediate interest to the American manufacturer. It is a highly organized market, however, and the German people by reason of the manufacture within their country of a high-grade raw stock and the kind of pictures which they believe their public at the present requires, is in a large measure independent of the rest of the world, and will doubtless eventually become one of the most important exporting countries with whom we may have to compete. Most of the pictures made there until now are utterly unsuited for American audiences, but the German people are so clever at adapting themselves to the needs of the markets which they are seeking to enter, I have no doubt that later on, with the aid of the American directors, they will be turning out pictures in Germany which will have to be reckoned with seriously by the American manufacturer in competing for world markets.

"There is a very lively interest in motion pictures in the countries which I visited, notably the Austria-Hungarian monarchy, and there will be a big market there eventually for American productions. In all probability the American picture will displace in a large measure the German and Italian productions which now dominate that market.

"There is altogether a feeling of unsettlement and uncertainty on the continent. The idea seems pretty prevalent that the peace which has been made is not a permanent peace and that the conditions which have been imposed by the victors on the vanquished will never be fulfilled. The changing exchange situation and uncertainty as to the future makes it impossible for traders to look ahead long enough to warrant their entering into long-time commitment contracts, which may prove disastrous through no fault of their own, but only due to changing or to varying exchange conditions. This problem is the greatest bar today to an immediate and healthful re-establishment of trade conditions in many of the countries.

"I would like to be able, as an American returning from an extended trip through the various European countries, to say, that a friendly attitude exists toward America, but the general impression which I bring home with me is that to a large extent the very reverse is the fact. In England, while I don't believe it is warranted, I have heard from many sources the feeling expressed that America has let us down and that the Americans have not played the game. I always tried to combat this by explaining the American system, and have been rather surprised at the lack of knowledge on the part of the average Englishman.

"There is a feeling of bitterness in France that we should do our best to put an end to as quickly as possible. It is difficult to explain to the ordinary Frenchman that the President of the United States had not the power to take on the commitments which our representatives assumed in Paris, except, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

"In Germany and Austria the feeling is prevalent that they have been 'done.' When we talk about them tearing up a treaty as a scrap of paper they come back and refer to our tearing up the armistice and requiring them to sign a peace treaty which to their way of thinking is entirely outside of the terms and conditions under which they laid down their arms.

Walter Prichard Eaton vs. Jesse L. Lasky

THE motion-picture is once more brought to trial, this time in the July number of the North American Review. Walter Prichard Eaton assumes the office of prosecutor, while the side of the defense is presented by Jesse L. Lasky, vice-president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. Mr. Eaton alleges that the "Movies" are proving a menace to the standards and patronage of the stage-production. The more salient arguments of this case against the motion-picture are submitted, as selected from the pages of the North American Review, in the first of the two columns below. In answering Mr. Eaton's allegations, Mr. Lasky champions the cause of the motion-picture in general and the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in particular. The principal points of Mr. Lasky's defence are given in the column opposite that devoted to Mr. Eaton's remarks.

"A PERSON of taste and intelligence who frequents the theatre in New York with discrimination, finds much to interest and stimulate him, and would be hard put, perhaps, to realize how utterly barren of solid dramatic fare the smaller cities of the country are. To these smaller cities a generation ago came most of the well-known 'stars' and most of the successful plays, stopping for a night and passing on. Sometimes there would be one visitor a week, sometimes two or three, or even more if the city was large enough to support so many. Since the development of the motion pictures, however, there has been an astonishing change. Shown at first in small, cheap houses down a side street, the movies progressed rapidly into the main thoroughfares, and then took possession of the playhouses themselves. The managers for a while looked upon them as a gap-filler, something to keep the doors open and the pennies coming in, after Sothern and Marlowe left on Tuesday, until John Drew came on Friday. But it was not long before the managers discovered that the profits from the films were more than the profits from the plays; a film is rented for a comparatively small fee, and no part of the receipts has to be shared, nor paid out to stage hands. Besides, it was not long before the small city public, by and large, developed a preference for the 'silent drama,' in part because it was cheaper, in part because it was less of a tax on the attention. Pittsfield, Massachusetts, a city of over 40,000 people (I cite it because it is near my home), had one theatre devoted to legitimate drama. Even within a decade, this theatre has housed for two seasons an excellent stock company, and all on its stage have appeared players like Mrs. Fiske, Ethel Barrymore, and John Drew. During the past winter, barring a musical comedy or two advertised on its salacious appeal, there have been, as I recall, a scant half dozen dramas of the so-called first class presented in the city, and one of them was a new play being tuned up for an opening in New York. The theatre is now, in reality, only a movie house. There are not less than four other movie theatres in the city—and one small book store! So far as Pittsfield is concerned, the spoken drama might not exist, even on the printed page. Does any critic complain that our dramatists write only for Broadway? Good Graciously, it is that, or nothing!

"But now the movies are invading Broadway itself, in a new and startling form. Backed by enormous capital, real or potential—the product of their prosperity, and the good-will of Wall Street looking for fresh investment fields—certain movie companies, notably one called 'The Famous Players-Lasky Corporation,' are actually controlling the production of spoken dramas. Why should they trouble to do this? Because they are desperate for material, and they have discovered that a popular play, especially if it is acted by a popular player, starts its subsequent career as a movie with the great advantage of prestige and aroused expectancy.

"It has further transpired that it was a movie company which financed the production of Eugene O'Neill's grim naturalistic tragedy, Beyond the Horizon (which might seem, at first glance, to give the lie to the conclusion of the last paragraph), and the production of Arnold Bennett's Sacred and Profane Love, with Elsie Ferguson as the star. Furthermore, a movie company has publicly announced that it will back any producer who wishes to put on a play, provided it seems to them a play ultimately adaptable to the screen."

That film interests should wield such a measure of control over stage-productions is a situation distasteful to Mr. Eaton. That stage-plays should be produced with an eye to their fitness for the screen is to be abhorred, especially when one considers screen standards, about which Mr. Eaton expresses himself as follows:

"Probably no digression is needed in this place to show what those standards are. Any thoughtful person who has attended a half-dozen ordinary motion picture programmes knows the fatal restrictions of the medium, knows the complete absence from the average screen drama of intellectual body and balance, the complete absence, in fact, of everything which makes the spoken drama, at its best, so noble a thing, except the quick emotional appeal which can be roused by physical action, by pantomime and the expression of the human face—in short, by those elements of drama which can be photographed. Since a profound weakness of our native drama has always been its dependence on physical action, and it has only in comparatively recent years been physically winning its way to higher things, the imposition upon it of motion-picture standards is most decidedly a step

"I HAVE been asked by The North American Review to answer Mr. Walter Prichard Eaton's article, 'The Latest Menace of the Movies,' in which he mentions particularly the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation as the force 'backed by enormous capital . . . actually controlling the production of spoken drama.' He believes that this 'control' is a menace to the stage.

"Mr. Eaton tells in one paragraph of the low standards of the motion picture, and in another points out that we produced on the stage Beyond the Horizon, Déclassée, and Arnold Bennett's Sacred and Profane Love, which have been favorably mentioned in magazines of high ideals and low circulation. He speaks as if we had only recently been interested in the production of plays on the stage, when as a matter of fact we have owned Charles Frohman, Inc., for nearly a year, and all the details for the production of Beyond the Horizon, Déclassée, and Sacred and Profane Love were made by our organization.

"He admits that we have done rather well by the spoken drama thus far, but for some reason fears that we cannot keep it up. He believes that we will produce only plays fit for the screen, and that plays fit for the screen are of a low standard. He gives us no credit for the steady advance in the quality of motion picture productions in the last few years. He does not grant that we are trying to improve motion pictures. All he does say is that we are trying to drag down the stage.

"A year ago we found ourselves in this condition as regards motion pictures: we had talented directors, actors, photographers and scenic artists. But many of the stories we were receiving, even though we paid as high as $75,000 for them, were not so good as they should have been. We could not get the genuinely original, entertaining, and wholesome stories that we knew the motion picture needed if it was to continue to advance or even hold its place as the most interesting part of our American life.

"We decided to go to the stage for help in getting better stories. We had found that no matter what price we paid, we could not get the best work from the best dramatists for original screen production. They thought that anything would do for the movies. They would spend a year writing a play that might live only a month and draw only 100,000 persons, but they would not give more than a week to writing a scenario for motion pictures that might live for years and play to millions.

"We felt that the way to interest these writers in motion pictures was to produce their plays, to go into the realm of the speaking stage to see if we could not find there material suited to our needs. There was no thought of dragging dramatists to the level of the average motion picture plot. We wanted to lift the movies up to the level of the best stories on the speaking stage.

"The motion picture is a part of the people. They are the ones who have given it its strength, and they are the ones who are demanding from it better things than the stage has ever given. It is because the motion picture has filled a place that the stage cannot, that the drama is dying, while the motion picture is growing greater.

"We must serve the public, and we do not serve it by producing as motion pictures plays like John Ferguson and Jane Clegg or The Jest, which appeal to ten thousand, where the motion-picture appeals to ten millions. We can produce plays like Beyond the Horizon, and we shall continue to do so—mostly for our satisfaction—but we shall be happier when we put on the stage and on the screen wholesome, happy, inspiring plays for the multitudes.

"The stage has failed because it has not helped the public. In the small towns the drama killed itself with second, third and fourth companies advertised as 'The Original Broadway Production' at Broadway prices. The motion-picture can give Broadway casts at motion-picture prices.

"Perhaps the motion-picture is a menace to the drama. But it is the sort of menace that the drama needs. It will make the speaking stage clean up; it will make it impossible for Number 4 companies to get two dollars a seat in Keokuk; it will kill the profit in the road companies that played Broadway features in one-night stands and got away with the money because nobody knew how bad the show was until after it had gone.

"The drama has not anything to boast about. Its average is disgracefully low. It has failed the public which has turned to the

Many Changes in Booking Policies and Programs Reported

First National Survey Reveals Big Changes in Management of Theatres

MANY important changes in booking policies, frequency with which programs will be varied, methods of management, exploitation tactics and general plans of house operation for the coming fall season, all having material effect on the production and sales problems of the entire industry, are announced in a survey just completed by Associated First National Pictures among its franchise owners and other independent exhibitors in every territory, and of which the first installment is made public this week.

Among the most interesting of these is the program change days which have just come in vogue with the Jensen and Von Herberg chain of theatres in Oregon. Changes of program in all the theatres take place on Saturday night, and in the smaller ones which do not hold pictures for a full week, the mid-week change takes place on Wednesday. The Portland houses of this company, which will continue this policy during the coming year, are the Columbia, booking first runs for one or two weeks; the Majestic and Liberty, first runs for a week each; and the Peoples' and Star, with changes of programs on Saturdays and Wednesdays. The managers of the individual theatres agree that this policy is preferable to a Sunday and Thursday change because of the greater word-of-mouth advertising possible from a Saturday and Sunday attendance on the same feature to carry it over the first of the week.

At Everett, Washington, the fall season will see the consummation of an exhibitors combination for the lowering of rentals. The five theatres there entered into one company in 1919 with the idea of eliminating senseless competition and a general plan of lengthening runs. All the theatres have been making tri-weekly changes but beginning in the fall the Apollo will book features for seven day runs, while the Orpheum and New Everett will change twice a week and the Star and Broadway continue the old policy. A change has been forced in Yakima, Washington, through the completion of the New Liberty, a Jensen and Von Herberg house, with a tri-weekly change of pictures. Frederick Mercy has re-arranged the bookings of his three theatres so that in the future the Mercy will be exclusively a picture house.

William Jacobs, manager of Loew's Garden theatre, Kansas City, says that while there will be no change in length of runs, light comedy dramas will be given the preference over heavier stuff. Dave Harding, manager of the Liberty in the same city, announces that special attention will be given to prologues and spe-

Musicians to Be Given Special Service

WITH the purpose of bringing musicians who are seeking to connect with motion-picture theatres seeking good music, the Motion Picture News has inaugurated a Music Service. It is planned to list all musicians who are seeking places and to list all theatres where musicians are wanted.

Charles D. Isaacson, who is editing the Motion Picture News' music department, says that the kind of musicians who ought to go in for picture work is a special brand of individual. The best musician might not succeed, if he hasn't the sense of crowds and an eagerness to break traditions and forget dignity, where necessary. He also says that purely ragtime musicians are useless because they don't realize the need for using mainly the best music.

Musicians are invited without charge to send their names, and capabilities to the Motion Picture News Musical Service.

cial stage settings during the coming season and that pictures giving such opportunities will have a preference.

The "season" opens in Denver in the spring, owing to the large number of tourists who visit the city during the summer. Five of the seven first-run houses—The Princess, Rialto, America, Fox, Rivoli and Tabor—are doing big business on week runs, while the other two, the Fix Isis and the Fox Strand, are changing twice a week. Three representative downtown second run houses—the Iris, Colonial and Fox Plaza—change daily, while four of the principal second run houses out of the business district—the Webber, Ogden, Thompson and Queen, are also making daily changes. Some of the first run houses announce that special features will be held over for a second week, but otherwise there will be no change from the present policies.

Tucson, Ariz., has so willingly paid a scale of prices running from 50 cents to $1.25 at the Opera House that the manager is arranging for a larger orchestra, more pretentious presentations and a higher scale of prices for the coming season. The same booking policy will continue with changes on Sunday, Monday, Wednesday and Friday. The Pima will continue first runs for daily changes, and the Lyric will continue a policy of a daily change of the best second runs that a low scale of admission prices makes feasible.

Wichita Falls, Texas, also likes frequent changes and the Olympia, Majestic and Gem will continue to give four changes a week. The Park Airdrome and the Plaza will give bi-weekly changes of pictures and vaudeville, and the Wichita, which gives housing to road attractions, announces that feature pictures will be frequently offered throughout the season.

Exclusive picture programs have proved so successful at the Trenton and Academy of Music in Lynchburg, Va., that the vaudeville policy which has been in vogue in both theatres during the season may be abandoned and feature pictures continued with bi-weekly or tri-weekly changes. The Isis, Belvedere and Gayety will continue the usual policies.

Ollan, N. Y., will be the scene of a battle royal for patronage when the season opens, with a new theatre and a church showing regularly every Sunday night and some week day nights as competitors. The new theatre will be given over to feature pictures of romantic sort. The Havens will continue a bi-weekly change of big features, the Palace will use features in addition to a vaudeville program, and the Gem will continue serving the melodramatic features and serials.

The Lyric theatre at Plainfield, N. J., will make a special feature of longer runs on worth-while productions during the coming year. Last year daily changes of program was the rule, but during the coming season pictures will be booked for two, three and in some cases seven days. The Plainfield theatre will continue to make changes twice a week, featuring high class productions.

The effort to break the policy of including two features and a short reel on all programs in Lynn, Mass., has failed, due to the refusal of one exhibitor to shorten his program, and during the coming year this policy will be pursued by the Capitol, the Theatre Comique and the Strand, with three changes of program a week and 17 cents the average admission price. The Lynn Olympic and the Waldorf, both of which are vaudeville houses, have announced that more attention will be given to a feature picture and that specials will be a part of every week's program.

The Morgan and Universal are the only theatres in Auburn, N. Y., that have announced their fall policy. They will both continue tri-weekly changes of bills. There is a rumor that the Curtis-Grand, now a picture house, will book vaudeville and pictures, and if this policy is adopted the Jefferson, now showing vaudeville, or the Auditorium, now booking road attractions, will become exclusively a picture house.

Buffalo theatres generally will make no change in policy. Rumors that Shea's Hippodrome and the Strand would abandon bi-weekly changes for week runs have been officially denied. The Elmwood will vary its policy of four changes a week to an occasional tri-weekly change, and the Central Park and Premier theatres

Stanley Purchases Large Atlantic City Theatre

One of the biggest deals in Atlantic City (N. J.) real estate was consummated on July 14th in the sale of the City Square theatre on Atlantic avenue, opposite the City Hall. The property was purchased by the Stanley Company of America, in conjunction with Edward J. O'Keefe, present manager of the house, from Dr. J. B. Thompson, the owner. The consideration is said to be over $200,000.

The property is situated in the heart of Atlantic City's business section and is one of the most prominent sites on Atlantic avenue. It has a frontage on the latter thoroughfare running back 150 feet to Central avenue.

"Mr. E. J. O'Keefe will continue to direct the destiny of the City Square theatre," said Jules E. Mastbaum, president of the Stanley Company of America, in commenting on the purchase. "It is our intention to make extensive improvements both to the exterior and the interior of the building and these will involve the installation of the latest modern equipment inside the house, including one of the finest organs ever placed in a motion picture theatre."

Tax Readjustment Helps Coast Companies

Readjustment has been made by the tax officers of Los Angeles City and county respecting assessments on motion picture producing companies which will prove a saving of many thousand dollars to the film organizations. The assessments were made on the actual expenditure of the company for settings, buildings and equipment on the basis that these were permanent improvements to the company while in reality the expenditures were for so much merchandise which lost its value to the film company after being used.

This condition is arbitrary to other manufacturing concerns and the Los Angeles assessing department placed film companies in the same class with other manufacturing companies. The settlement of the differences was brought about by the Motion Picture Producers Association and the members of the Chamber of Commerce after several conferences with the tax officials.

Exhibitors' Association Expels 16 Members

Sixteen members of the Theatre Owners' Association, Inc., of Los Angeles, were expelled at the meeting on July 7th, for violating the resolution passed last March regarding the United Artists branch manager. The association voted several months ago to discontinue all business relations with the United Artists Corporation. It was passed, according to a statement of the association, only after six complaints of the most flagrant nature were registered and after protests to Hiram Abrams, president of United Artists, were ignored.

LETTERS FROM READERS

Editor of Motion Picture News,

Dear Sir: The Admission Tax works quite a hardship on the majority of small town exhibitors and it seems to me that because of the fact that the war is over and we have numerous other taxes to contend with, that now is the time for all exhibitors to sound the Congressional Candidates as to their attitude toward a repeal of the admission tax.

We have State Tax, Film Tax and Seat Tax, etc., therefore it seems with these taxes the Picture Theatres are certainly burdened enough. It is all very well to say the Public pays. They don't as a rule, in a small town. Small town exhibitors usually get the same patrons right along and the average patron figures on so much a week for picture shows and it cuts no figure with the majority as to disposition of allotted spending money. If the exhibitors are interested in having their representatives take up the repeal of Admission Tax, NOW IS THE TIME.

H. E. Cane, Mgr.,
West Street Theatre Coudersport, Pa.

Erie, Pa., July 16th, 1920.

Dear Mr. Johnston: As editor of the NEWS, this information may interest a good many of your readers and probably save money to some of them. Here is my story:

On December 19, 1919, Mr. Bonistall, the manager of the Pittsburg Branch of the National Picture Theatres, Inc., called on me with a proposition to buy a franchise in the above company; after explaining how cheap the pictures will stand to me and the dividends I will receive on the stock purchased. I bought the franchise for $300.00. The contract accepted in New York and signed by Mr. Lewis Selznick, Pres. I also received three shares each of preferred and common stock. I was made to believe by the manager, Mr. Bonistall, that I should be happy at getting this franchise and I was congratulated by him on my good luck of becoming a franchise holder in the National Picture Theatres, Inc.

My contract calls for second run in Erie, first run on Parade Street. After the first run houses used up the first two pictures produced by the above company I sent in dates to the Pittsburg branch, but received no answer. I wrote again asking why I did not get the two pictures, and no answer. Finally on June 26th I received a registered letter from the New York office in which they pointed out a clause of the contract which reads, "That either party may cancel such franchise upon 60 days' notice to the other, etc." On the end of the letter it said: "If you desire to exercise the option contained in this clause please notify us to that effect and forward your preferred and common stock to this office, upon receipt of which we will return to you the money paid for same."

I immediately wrote to Mr. Selznick that I made the above investment with the sole object of getting pictures and that I do not intend to cancel the franchise. In answer to my letter I received from the manager of the franchise sales on July 3rd a reply stating: "We deeply regret that it was necessary to cancel your franchise, but owing to the fact that your classification was not a fair one to the National we were obliged to exercise the cancellation clause of your contract." He also says in his letter that if I desire to hold the stock I will receive 7% on the preferred and a fortune on the common. Can you beat it?

Please insert this in the NEWS. Thanking you in advance,

Yours truly,
The Olympic Theatre. M. Slotkin.

Booking Policies Changing

both will keep big pictures in longer than the usual two-day booking.

In Lowell, Mass., where two feature programs have been the policy for both first and second run houses, the experiment of a one feature program at the Merrimack Square theatre has been proved unsuccessful, and the two feature policy will be resumed in the fall and continued as long as the Owl and Strand, the other first run houses, continue this style of program.

The Columbia and Majestic theatres in Athens, Ohio, will book lower priced pictures than in the past, and make daily changes. Neither of the exhibitors have been successful with the higher priced features for longer periods.

Five of the theatres—the Jefferson, Palace, Grand, Jewel and Strand—in Hamilton, Ohio, will continue changing programs every two days, while the Eagle will try out the policy of two pictures a week for two days and a daily change on the other days.

The doubling of the capacity of the Majestic theatre at Kenosha, Wis., will result in a more frequent change of program, although special features will be kept in for two or three days. The other theatres in the city, including the Butterfly, under the same management as the Majestic, will have four changes of program a week.

The Liberty, the largest theatre in Youngstown, Ohio, will experiment during the coming season with seven day bookings. The usual policy will be two changes a week, but efforts will be made to develop a week's patronage on the strongest picture offered. The Dome and Strand will continue their usual policies.

The Majestic, Fairbanks and Alhambra theatres are typical of the show houses in Springfield, Ohio. The managers feel that the numerous changes in policy by all the theatres during the last year resulted in the most suitable arrangements for the city and no further changes are contemplated. The Paris Theatre Company, owning the Majestic and Shofa's Opera House, the only two picture theatres in Paris, Ill., announces after experiments with longer runs on feature productions, that both houses will make daily changes and that only "star" pictures will be booked. The same decision has been reached by the managers of the Princess and Strand theatres in Kendallville, Ind.

Fond du Lac, Wis., has taken kindly to longer runs of pictures and the Orpheum, Idea, Henry, Boyle and Bijou are all planning extending runs on big features during the coming season.

Sidney S. Cohen Addresses Open Letter to Hiram Abrams

Reviews Astor Hotel Interview and Reiterates Stand on Rental Question

THE following letter has been addressed by Sidney S. Cohen, president of the Motion-Picture Theatre Owners of America, to Hiram Abrams, general manager of the United Artists Corporation. In this communication, Mr. Cohen reiterates the demands presented by the Motion-Picture Theatre Owners of America against the mode of payment exacted by United Artists in the renting of films. He also reviews the conversation between himself and the United Artists' executive at the Hotel Astor on July 6. Mr. Cohen's letter follows:

"I note in the trade-papers generally, your comments following the conversation I had with you at the Hotel Astor on the evening of July 6th, which was arranged through the correspondence exchanged between us relative to the mandate of the national convention at Cleveland of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America relative to the methods of your organization exacting the entire amount of the film rental at the time of the signing of the rental contracts by exhibitors, at times months in advance of payment dates.

"It cannot be possible that you are an utterly irresponsible person and hold the important position you occupy in the United Artists Corporation. So that I cannot avoid the determination, if the exigencies ever again require my conversing with you, that I cannot afford to do so without the presence of a stenographer. Of course, I assume that you have been quoted correctly.

"This is not written with a view to protracting any discussion which may have been had with you, for neither my time nor my taste will permit it.

"It may be it is your memory that is faulty, your heart may be in the right place. So let me review for you exactly what happened.

"I asked you to modify the provisions of the contract issued by the United Artists Corporation for the playing of their productions, which, exacted the entire amount of the rental price in advance on the signing of the contracts by the exhibitor. I advised you that if you were to do this, it would (in my opinion) be of great help and assistance to the organization you represent, because the opportunity is presented at this time of some producer or distributor mobilizing the goodwill of the exhibitor, particularly so in view of the resentment and antagonism that has developed amongst exhibitors against certain producers and distributors.

"Your intimation that I was seeking a personal advantage is entirely unwarranted as well as barefaced misrepresentation. Our correspondence will show that I personally notified you in writing in advance of our conference, that I would refuse to do business with your organization as long as you persisted in exacting the entire amount of the film rental more than seven days in advance of the actual play dates, at my theatres.

"As far as the State of New York is concerned, I beg to assure you that the New York State Organization will make you live up to both the letter and the spirit of the law. It imposes on you the duty of keeping the advance payment moneys separate and distinct from your other assets, and imposes a trust upon these moneys.

"If you had attended the national convention at Cleveland, you would have been struck with the determination of the exhibitors from other states in attendance, to compel the example of New York and to put all advance payments under the supervision of each state authority.

"You, no doubt, realize that the legislation which is now on the statute books of every other state (and this Union) has met with general approval in and out of the industry, because it does two things: it secures the exhibitor against misappropriation of his money and it has a wholesome tendency to stamp out the wildcat promoter from this industry, which has suffered altogether too long.

"You may look upon explanations of the law as superfluous, because, doubtless, no man knows the limitations of the law better than you do, but this is an age of mutual helpfulness and I would not want to be responsible for any trouble that might arise through a casual oversight on your part.

"In conclusion, let me say that your attitude towards the exhibitor is in striking contrast with the courteous consideration shown to us by Mr. D. W. Griffith in a personal conference had with him. It is more accurate to designate a difference too long and too mildly endured—the difference between the creator and the promoter.

"The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America,

Wire Briefs From Coast

A WIRE just received at the News office informs of the death of Herman Bosley on July 17 in Los Angeles. Mr. Bosley suffered from heart failure brought on, it is thought, by the earthquake tremors that occurred in Los Angeles on the previous day. He had been manager of the Alhambra Theatre in Los Angeles for three years and was formerly president of the Southern California Theatre Owners Association. He had been prominent in exhibitor activities for a long time. No successor to the managership of the Alhambra has been named as yet.

The work of perfecting the new organization of the Screen-Writers Guild of the Authors' League is going forward satisfactorily. At a meeting held on July 16th, the following officers were elected: Thompson Buchanan, president; Mary H. O'Connor, vice-president; Jack Cunningham, secretary; Waldemar Young, treasurer. The following comprise the executive committee: Bayard Veillers, June Mathis, Frank E. Woods, Tom Geraghty, Doris Schroeder, Eugene Presby, and Marion Fairfax. The members now number one hundred and seventeen.

C. L. Chester has severed his connection as business supervisor of the Henry Lehrman comedies for First National. The reason given for this action is that his theatre productions are requiring all his time.

regardless of any other controversies they may have with the exhibitors, will always have time to meet problems such as you present, and as their leader I assure you that no slurs will ever in the slightest degree turn me from this firm purpose.

"I do not by any means give up the hope that you will see the injury which you are causing to the company in whose employ you are.

Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America,
(Signed) Sidney S. Cohen,
President.

"P. S.—In view of your statement in reply to my letter to Mr. D. W. Griffith, that the correspondence between your organization and Mr. Tom Boland of Oklahoma City speaks for itself and the statement that your hands are clean, carrying the intimation that Mr. Boland's are not, I am herewith enclosing copy of letter sent by Mr. Boland to Mr. Ralph Talbot, Member of the Executive Committee of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, and I want you to know that I enclose the intimation on your part relative to Mr. Boland."

Following is a copy of the letter referred to by Mr. Cohen in his postscript. It bears the date of July 3rd, 1920, and was sent from Oklahoma City, Okla. Mr. Boland writes:

"Mr. Ralph Talbot, Pres.,
"Oklahoma Theatre Owners & Managers Assn.,
"Tulsa, Okla.

"Dear Mr. Talbot:
"As a member of the executive board I wish to call your attention to a recent act of the United Artists in this territory.

"I, as you know, have always used their service, and price has never been entered into, as they have always been fair to me, and it was just a question of dates.

"Four weeks ago while in Dallas their manager, Mr. Luckett, called me to his office and booked me 'Mollycoddle' and 'Suds,' giving me dates and forwarding me all paper.

"He advised me that he would forward me contracts at a later date, which he has done on other occasions.

"As you know, I was called East and when I returned, three days before showing of picture, I learned that contracts had not arrived, but that all paper had been put out and advertising man had billed it heavily. I called up the Dallas office and they informed me they had contracts from New York that were signed by another man that was building in Oklahoma City.

"Now, Ralph, my point is this. The fact of losing a picture is a second consideration, as the party they sold it to cannot get open this year, but I felt that someone should have advised me that I was not going to get the picture, and not allow me to go on and advertise it and never say a word. The fact is, if we hadn't called up about it, they would never mention it, and allowed me to have a dark house on July Fourth.

"Fox, as you know, tried this same thing on one of our boys three years ago and you know the results.

"I am asking that you call a meeting as soon as possible that we may take some action, as I expect to see this through.

"Again, I have some legislative matters to take up with the Board.

"Hoping your business is good and with best wishes, I am,

Very truly yours,
(Signed) Tom M. Boland."

Exhibitors to Convene in Two States

Two important state conventions of exhibitors will be held in the near future. Ex-Senator C. H. Bean, who in the past has been actively identified with exhibitor organization in New Hampshire, has issued a call for a meeting of all motion picture theatre owners in the State of New Hampshire, to be held at the Hotel Arlington, Boston, Mass., on Tuesday, July 27, at 1:30 P. M. The meeting will be preceded by a social gathering in the same hotel.

The Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association of Wisconsin has sent out a call for a state convention to be held at the Hotel Wisconsin in the City of Milwaukee on August 3 and 4. It is expected that both these conventions will follow the example of North Carolina, Georgia and Texas in affirming their formal affiliation with the Motion Picture Theatre Owners' of America, and contributing their quotas toward the permanent organization fund.

The general manager of the newly formed District of Columbia Exhibitors' Association, William C. Murphy, in a letter to President Sidney S. Cohen, advises that the following officers of the organization have been elected for the current year: Harry M. Crandall, of Crandall theatres, president; Dr. William Herbst, of the Circle theatre, vice president; William C. Murphy, of the Home Amusement Co., general manager, and A. Brylawsky, of the Cosmos theatre, treasurer.

Mullen with Washburn Productions

BRYANT WASHBURN and Lee A. Ochs have obtained the services of Eugene Mullen to prepare the scenarios and direct the photodramas to be produced by Bryant Washburn Productions.

He joined the Vitagraph company in 1912 as a special staff writer and while there wrote the first three-reel picture ever produced. He also adapted many of the English classics.

He later was appointed scenario editor of Vitagraph. During the next two years he had active supervision over one hundred pictures in which were included the famous O. Henry stories.

Resigning the editorship at Vitagraph to accept an attractive offer from the Universal Film Corporation, Mr. Mullen was sent to the Coast as production editor. Then the Goldwyn interests appointed him managing editor of their productions, from which position he only recently resigned to become associated with Bryant Washburn in the production of the star's independent features.

"Down Home" Is Title of Willat Picture

"Down Home" has been selected out of a hundred and fifty titles as the best name for Irvin V. Willat's first independent production which will be his first release through the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation.

"Down Home" is based on Frank M. Wescott's book, "Dabney Todd." The scenes are laid in rural New York, and the Hodkinson Corporation confidently expects from Irvin V. Willat, the rural drama of the screen for which the public has long been waiting. "Down Home" is more than half completed.

backward, even if all screen dramas strove for the utmost advance in artistic suggestion of which they are capable. Alas, however, very few of them do this. The vast majority are content with the trite, the obvious, the trashy and lurid, with slapstick farce and ridiculous melodrama; they are false to life, turgid, sentimental, the twentieth century substitute for dime novels and nickel shockers. When once our theatres begin to produce dramas not with an eye single to dramatic effectiveness, but rather to subsequent screen popularity, the serious dramatist, the ambitious actor, the artist in stagecraft, will be out of a job."

motion picture. Motion pictures have been stupid, many still are stupid, but there are more good motion-pictures to be had than there are good plays.

"Critics often raise their voices in condemnation because in translating a drama or novel for the screen we make changes in the original story. The screen is a medium of expression entirely different from the spoken drama, and changes are invariably necessary. Even plays, the saying goes, are 'rewritten rather than written.'

"The authors whose work we changed have made no complaint. We produced Maeterlinck's The Blue Bird, and he is going to write original scripts for the screen. We produced The Admirable Crichton, and Barrie is now writing a screen play for us. We produced several plays written by Henry Arthur Jones, and Mr. Jones has completed a drama that will be produced by us in motion pictures before it is put on the stage.

"This is the sort of coöperation the motion picture is seeking, the sort of thing that is going to take good plays into thousands of towns, instead of into the hundred that Mr. Eaton would honor with stock companies."

Holabird & Roche are the architects who have charge of the new hotel annex and theatre.

Those neat exchangemen who have offices in the Film Exchange Building, 207 S. Wabash ave. are getting very much annoyed as the dust and waste paper continues to pile up in their sanctums and neither the scrub women, who are striking for a three cent an hour raise, or the building management seems to have any regard for the film men's outraged feelings. One exchange manager told the building agent he was going to complain to the health department and the only reply he got was "go to it." In the meantime the strike goes on its merry way and dirt continues to accumulate.

Exploitation Stunt Gets Columns of Free Newspaper Space

Publicity Idea in Interest of "Below the Surface" Stirs all St. Louis

IT took a stenographer—a well-meaning stenographer whose name is Madge Kennedy, at that—to let the cat out of the bag at a most undesirable time during the progress of a publicity stunt which promised to be the greatest ever attempted in St. Louis in exploitation of a motion-picture production. Despite the fact that inadvertent action exposed the hands of the manipulators, the momentum the stunt had already attained was successful in holding the intense interest of the St. Louis reading public and opening the columns of the daily newspapers to the extent of several columns of space at weekly intervals. The perpetrators of the plan were J. Reeves Espy, publicity agent, and William Goldman, general manager of the Famous Players-Lasky Missouri Corporation. The object was to gain widespread interest in the Thomas Ince production "Below the Surface," which was at the Kings theatre.

Now for the story:

One month ago two automobilists, riding over the Municipal Bridge spanning the Mississippi River at St. Louis, discovered a suit of clothing and a hat at the middle of the bridge. They notified a policeman, who, after inspecting the vicinity, carried the clothes to the Central Police Station. The automobilists were Espy and Goldman.

A search of the pockets revealed a slip of stationery of the Hotel Statler, on which was inscribed a poem and the supposed name and address of the suicide. The man's name on the paper was Edward F. Freudiger, 25 years old, of 70 West One Hundred and Second street, New York City. The poem was entitled "Below the Surface," and read as follows:

Have you ever felt yourself sinking
To the point where you didn't care?
Were you ever started thinking
About Hell and the prices there?

A Woman is to blame in my case.
Say, don't think yourself ever smart.
A two-faced hag, whose pretty face
Hid the poison that filled her heart.
Below the surface.

I gave her the best that I had
In trying to deliver.
But she finally drove me mad
And plunged me in the river.
Below the surface.

The supposed suicide occurred on Saturday evening and the Sunday morning newspapers "fell" for the story. The Globe-Democrat wrote a lengthy sob-story

Strand Overture Week's Best Novelty

QUITE the novelty of all the specialties on the various Broadway picture bills this week is the overture at the Strand theatre, "William Tell."

While the Strand orchestra renders Rossini's famous classic, a film depicting the story and so synchronized as to fit perfectly with the various movements is projected.

During the introductory strains by the orchestra, the film by titles tells the story of "William Tell" and gives a brief history of the composer, etc., much as has been the custom of the New York houses in preparing the printed programs.

At the second movement, "The Storm," scenic views of clouds and scenery during a rain and wind storm are shown. The third movement, "The Pastoral," begins and the film changes with the music to an enactment of the story told in this portion of the opera, that of the shooting of the apple from his son's head by William Tell and the subsequent events leading up to the killing of the tyrant and the freedom of Switzerland.

The production is by C. Sharpe Minor and one of the most interesting examples of artistic combining of music and the photoplay yet to be presented in New York.

on the man's leap to a watery grave and the woman—"the two-faced hag." The Post-Dispatch, with a circulation on Sunday of over 400,000, spread broadcast the news of the dupe "who died for a vampire's mundane wiles."

Hardly a fireside in St. Louis was unaware of the sad affair and conversation and debate over the relative merits of the characters of the man and woman involved were heated. The Globe's story had started out with the braxton sentence "Below the surface—" and in discussing the event gossips referred to it by that phrase.

Three days later a column was printed in all the local dailies to the effect that Joseph Freudiger of New York, father of the suicide and a wealthy retired merchant, had offered a reward of $5,000 for the recovery of his son's body. He stated that his son had been a sergeant in the 302nd Ammunition Train of the Seventy-seventh U. S. Division and seen fighting in the Meuse-Argonne offensive. He said that the writer of the poem had often related the terrible experiences of the war and had at time appeared sad and morose. It was believed that this depression had been the cause of his killing himself. The elder Freudiger also stated that his son had come to St. Louis but a week before to obtain employment here as an auditor with a manufacturing concern and that he had received no word from him since.

On this angle of the story the afternoon papers followed the morning editions and St. Louis again was talking in blatant tones of the misfortune of the young suicide. But here is where the scheme met its ill-fate. Freudiger, as a matter of fact, is an auditor for the Famous Players and has been in St. Louis for some time. His relatives in New York were informed of the ruse and advised to offer the reward to make the whole thing stand up. They followed instructions and everything was running according to schedule.

The next thing in the course planned was for Freudiger to turn up in some small Missouri town, deny that he had ever attempted suicide, and threaten suit against Espy and Goldman for using his name in a stunt which was obviously executed for the sake of publicity. Of course the whole thing was for the sake of publicity, but the public need never know that Freudiger was inside of the ropes. That part of the stunt was only for the intensification of the public interest and to get the newspapers sore at themselves for ever falling for the ruse. In turn they would expose the plan and give considerable space to Freudiger's threatened suit.

Everything was going fine until—

Detectives who were desirous of finding the body and identifying it were hard on the trail. One afternoon when both Goldman and Espy were out of the office at 3414 Lindell boulevard, a plain-clothes man made his appearance at their sanctum and inquired of Madge Kennedy (the stenographer) for the head of the office.

As Espy and Goldman were absent, the patronizing young woman, who was unaware of the mission of the stranger, called in a bland and high-pitched voice, "Oh, Mr. Freudiger, there's some one in front here to see you."

"Who was that you called?" the stranger asked.

"Mr. Freudiger, our auditor. You see, Mr. Espy and Goldman are not in and Mr. Freudiger is in charge of the office when they are gone," she explained.

By this time Freudiger had appeared and the stranger remarked, "So you are still living, are you?"

"Oh, yes, I guess the stunt is boomed, but it went great as far as it did, don't you think?" Freudiger said.

The detective smiled a detectively smile and about-facing departed to report to his chief that Freudiger's body had been found but in no condition to wrap up in a wooden box for deportation to New York.

Today Espy and Goldman have created a new slogan: "When in doubt, ask Madge Kennedy, she knows."

Ring Stunt Gets Results for Young Picture

"RING, Ring, Who's Got the Ring?" was the slogan of Grand Rapids, Wis., during the week's run "For the Soul of Rafael." The stunt worked by the live-wire manager of the Ideal theatre was one of the most effective and genuinely novel ever achieved by Mr. Stark, and the town is still buzzing from the aftermath of excitement and mystery that surrounded the search for the beautiful wearer of the magic charm on the index finger of her left hand.

The idea originated in the mind of this manager after he had seen the first reel of "For the Soul of Rafael." A ring of curious shape and design, set with precious stones and with a peculiar symbol engraved on its face, plays a prominent part in the action of the story. It brings the bearer good fortune and acts as a protector from harm.

Mr. Stark immediately notified his patrons, and advertised in the local press that on July 4th, and for a full week thereafter, a beautiful young girl would traverse the main streets of Grand Rapids during the hours of 12 to 1 and 5 to 7, while the rest of her time would be spent in department stores (the department stores advertising this fact in their full-page inserts in the local papers). The girl would wear a ring of the same design as that worn by Clara Kimball Young in "For the Soul of Rafael," on the index finger of her left hand. No other description was given of her appearance.

Anyone coming across the girl and noticing the ring on her finger, and addressing her with the mysterious letters F. T. S. O. R. (For the Soul of Rafael), would receive a card entitling the owner to a $10 gold piece.

The interest aroused in the hunt for the girl with the ring, and the mystery element attached to the procedure—it was stated in the announcements that the ring was worth more than money and bore a peculiar charm for its owner—and the added appeal to the men in the good looks of the girl wearing the ring, set Grand Rapids out in anxious pursuit of girls with rings on their index fingers. Many humorous situations occurred as a result, as mistakes of identity were frequent. Mr. Stark had his two daughters put rings something like those described, but not the genuine article, on their fingers so as to confuse the hunters, and there were many girls who purposely donned their rings to attract interest. Of course, Mr. Stark made the contest bona fide. One girl of particularly good appearance was selected and a ring of unusual shape, obtained at a jeweler's, was given to her. The first two days she made no appearance on the streets, but on the last day of the showing she walked the main thoroughfares, as stated in the announcement. This was done so that she should not be discovered too soon.

Scenic Film Used With Violin Solo at Rialto

A VIOLIN solo, "Meditation," from "THAIS" is the third number on the bill at the Rialto and during its earlier strains a scenic reel under the same title is screened with the house dark and the musician in a small spot.

Later when the film has run its length the spot is widened and increased in intensity for the balance of the solo.

Sascha Fidelman of the Rialto orchestra is the soloist and the rendition is being received with more acclaim than anything on the bill including the feature picture.

Apologizing for Dispossessing Mr. Guck-enheimer

In the issue for July 17th, the NEWS carried a story concerning the Blackstone theatre of Pittsburgh. It was a good story written by a Pittsburgh newspaper man, and only one fault can be found with it. The article stated that one Elmer H. Harris is manager of the Blackstone when as a matter of fact Mr. Harris' job of managing consists in being captain for the corps of ushers the Blackstone employs.

Since the publication of this article we have learned that Isaac Guckenheimer is proprietor of the Blackstone, has been for quite some time and intends to remain as such so long as the Blackstone continues to pay the net profits it does. All of which is an apology for dispossessing Mr. Guckenheimer from his theatre in print and causing his many theatrical friends and acquaintances to wonder when he had departed from the Blackstone.

Also we are writing the Pittsburgh scribe to pay a little more attention to names in the future.

Chicago Newspaper Gives Pictures Special Attention

Metropolitan daily newspapers gradually are awakening to the important part the moving picture industry plays in the communities they serve and are taking a fairer attitude in the amount of space devoted to moving pictures in their columns, which as a rule has been entirely out of proportion to the amount of paid advertising placed with them by theatres and producers.

The Chicago Evening Post during Elks' Week, however, set a mark for other dailies to shoot at, giving an entire page a day to the movies for five days, the ratio of advertising to news stories and cuts being three and one-half columns of advertising to four and one-half columns of free space, which exhibitors agreed was a fair and generous division.

The layout of the pages also received very favorable comment, the page heading in particular, "Best Photoplays on Exhibition," with the capital letters played in large block type, so that no Elk would fail to get their significance.

Liberty Pulls "Princess" Stunt with Success

FROM way out west in Sacramento comes a story of how the Liberty theatre of that city, managed by J. W. Di Stasio, put over "The Virgin of Stamboul" in a way that proved the best business getter of anything ever attempted in that section.

An attractive lobby, sparring no expense, was first arranged. The box office and entrance were draped to represent a large tent, while to the right a large cut out of Priscilla Dean on horseback stood out in relief against a desert scene in which a band of horses and Turkish riders were pictured coming "head on" at full speed. To the left of the box office was a setting suggesting a harem entrance, an attendant garbed in Turkish costume, with Turkish pipe, rugs, etc., to give the necessary atmosphere.

Mr. Di Stasio's most important bit of exploitation, however, was an adaptation of Harry Reichenback's stunt in New York.

On the Friday night before the opening of the picture, which ran a week, arrangements were made with one of San Francisco's leading hotels, the Palace, to reserve by long distance at the leading hotel, the Sacramento, rooms for Princess Sari and escort.

Upon her arrival in Sacramento, the Princess, veiled and garbed in Oriental dress, was conducted to the hotel in a limousine where she registered as "Princess Sari and attendant."

At dinner time, quite a furore was created in the hotel dining room by the appearance of a strikingly beautiful woman being escorted to a private table where her attendant held back her veil during the progress of the meal, which was served by two waiters.

Through the night, the Princess' attendant slept in the hallway immediately in front of the door of the Princess, and as far as could be learned, the hotel management and guests were under the impression that their presence was being graced by a genuine Princess.

The following morning (Saturday), the Princess visited every store of importance in the city, and in some instances it was noted that clerks would leave customers waiting, to follow her from one department to another, in curiosity.

At this time, the city editor of one of the afternoon papers was "tipped off," and declaring that it was the best stunt of the kind that had ever come to his attention, proceeded to give the story to his readers, with full details of the fact that it was a press agent's stunt in connection with the showing of "The Virgin of Stamboul" at the Liberty.

After her identity had become known the "princess" appeared on the streets and distributed cards which announced that she was the "Virgin of Stamboul," and requested that Sacramento people meet her at the Liberty.

Schuhmann Solves His Display Advertising Problem

THE Florence theatre of Pasadena, Cal., next door to Los Angeles almost and a long way from New York, where the press books and accessories are apt to be gathering dust long after a picture has been booked and played in California, has solved the advertising problem in this connection so far as displays are concerned by enlisting the cooperation of his newspapers.

D. H. Schuhmann, manager of the Florence, does not have an opportunity to avail himself of good art work for advertising, so whenever the press sheet fails to show up, or doesn't contain something that suits, Mr. Schuhmann hires himself to the newspaper plants and helps himself to the commercial mat service to which the publishers of Pasadena subscribe.

These mats he adapts for use in framing his display advertising at the Florence. For instance, when he played "Sahara" he found some mats intended for the advertising of oriental rugs and they formed the basis of some corking good ads for the Glaum picture. For "The Love Expert" Schuhmann hunted up some mats

Special Reel From Boat Race Views Can Be Compiled

EXHIBITORS who think that the Resolute-Shamrock races are of timely interest in their cities have an opportunity of compiling a reel of views of the contest from the current events strips now released of the first and second races, especially those obtained by the Pathe and Fox camera men. From these two latter news weeklies can be obtained some remarkably good shots of the boats in action, many of which have a considerable scenic value. To such a reel as suggested may be added a strip from International which shows the last International cup race.

Ever Marry." This mat was originally intended for the use of a jeweler but instead it proved a jewel for advertising "Don't Ever Marry."

Even simple border mats Mr. Schuhmann finds can be used to good advantage, and many are the unique and highly original displays he turns out with the aid of his newspaper friends.

It would look to us that Mr. Schuhmann's discovery had opened up a new angle in exploitation and one which goes a long way toward solving the newspaper display problem, which is not met by the producer's cut even when available, nor which can not be otherwise overcome by the hand drawn display or original artwork.

Brandenburg Uses "Bear Tracks" with Success

"Bear tracks" for advertising "Back to God's Country" are not so new, it having been one of the favorite methods of attracting the public to this picture whenever it played a live wire manager's house, but its use in the smaller towns has been somewhat restricted not by rules or ordinances but because too many of the smaller cities do not seem to be aware of the value of exploitation.

Therefore just to reaffirm once more what we are always preaching, we relate the experience of W. L. Brandenburg, operating the Orpheum theatre of Waycross, Ga., one of two houses owned by the Amusement Company, Inc., in the matter of "bear tracks" for the Curwood feature.

Mr. Brandenburg writes that he marked the sidewalks leading in four directions from the Orpheum and in consequence during a spell of extra hot weather, which in Georgia is next door to Hades, the picture held up for a two-days' run when ordinarily one day is the booking.

From now on Mr. Brandenburg is a disciple of exploitation and relates his experience in the hope that some of his brother small-town showmen may see the light and be converted to what to him has become a devotion—exploitation.

Franklin Provides Attractive Settings for Musical Numbers

As backgrounds for orchestral numbers and vocal selections, Harold B. Franklin has started to stage a series of silhouette settings in black and white, attractively lighted. The scenes are in black and white and many striking effects are obtainable.

Marine subjects especially are adaptable for this style of stage picture, because with the use of an electric fan, some white linen and lights, Mr. Franklin is able to produce an unusually realistic flowing water effect. By cutting out vessels and mounting them on thin wire, he is also able to get a moving ship effect which is also attractive.

Usually when these settings are unveiled, the orchestra played a number that is especially fitting for the subject. The silhouette as a background for song numbers is also ideal. During the summer months these black and white stage pictures, especially the marines, give a delightfully cooling effect.

Horace N. Smith, of the Hippodrome art staff, designed the settings and Mr. Franklin stages them.

Clippings of "Jiggs" Prove Good Exploitation Medium

As an exploitation aid in connection with his showing of the "Bringing Up Father" comedies, Manager Coll of the Campbell theatre, Hazleton, Pa., interested the school children and secured their cooperation by awarding prizes, seven in number, for the greatest number of "Jiggs" clipped from the Sentinel, one of the local newspapers.

The total number of clippings received numbered over eight thousand. Tickets entitling them to see all shows at the Campbell were awarded to the winners.

Display evolved by Mr. Schuhmann for "Don't Ever Marry," the basis of which was a mat intended for the use of a jeweler left over from the St. Valentine's Day issues.

At the time we received this information the enterprising manager of the Florence had hidden away some mats intended for use by a dealer in Chinese curios, awaiting the time when he played "The Yellow Typhoon," and probably before this they have been put to this much better purpose—for Mr. Schuhmann at least.

Below is shown an illustration of the results Mr. Schuhmann gets with his mats, in the reproduction of a display run by the Florence for the engagement of "Don't

How the Majestic Put Over "The Woman in Room 13"

"The Woman in Room 13" exploitation in pictures as put over by the Majestic theatre of Columbus, Ohio. For full details of Manager Frankel's campaign see opposite page.

Hot Weather Has No Terrors for Frankel

Plays "The Woman in Room 13" To Theatrical Season
Business By the Aid of Exploitation

"THERE'S just as much business to be gotten in the summertime as there is in the full swing of the theatrical season," says Howard Frankel, manager of the Majestic theatre, Columbus, Ohio, "only you have to work harder in the summer to get it."

Mr. Frankel recently demonstrated beyond question that a little extra effort in showmanship has a direct bearing upon the cashbox, in his recent campaign in connection with "The Woman in Room 13."

Frankel had the whole city of Columbus working for him the entire week prior to the opening of the picture. With the assistance of C. C. Deardorff, Goldwyn's publicity man, he lined up six of the biggest retail stores in the best downtown locations of the city. Each of these stores gave up an entire window to a display on "The Woman in Room 13."

It was announced to the people of Columbus by these stores that every thirteenth purchaser of any article in the store would be presented with an article identical with the one purchased and in addition a pair of seats for "The Woman in Room 13."

The Deardorff-Frankel campaign did not stop with this successful stunt and the next step was to secure the cooperation of the leading hotel, the first time this had ever been accomplished in Columbus, for "The Woman in Room 13."

For a whole week before the show opened the Columbus papers carried teaser ads, which started out with the numerals "13" in heavy black type.

After several days of this appeared "Who was in Room 13?" And on Saturday, the day before the opening engagement, two hundred keys were distributed around town tagged, "Key to Room 13—WATCH CLASSIFIED ADS IN COLUMBUS DISPATCH, CITIZEN AND STATE JOURNAL."

And the classified ads in these three papers carried this announcement: "LOST—BY WOMAN IN ROOM 13—A KEY. FINDER KINDLY RETURN TO DESHLER HOTEL AND RECEIVE REWARD."

And the Deshler Hotel was right on the job when every one of these two hundred keys turned up, and gave the promised reward—some passes to the show.

Other store windows of the city were secured for cooperative displays and a big motor truck was chartered to travel up and down the streets, bearing a banner ten feet long by five feet high on which was printed "WHO WAS THE WOMAN IN ROOM 13?" There wasn't the ghost of a chance for anyone in Columbus to ignore the fact that "The Woman in Room 13" was to play at the Majestic theatre for one week.

Mr. Frankel stated that he wanted his window displays to be far distant from his theatre. This picture of his lobby tells why. The whole lobby spelled "The Woman in Room 13." It was around the marquee. It was on the display frames in front of the lobby. And the little dangling teaser announcements that hung under the marquee, all of different bright colors, were the gayest of them all.

Mr. Frankel has backed up his belief that there's plenty of business for the motion picture theatres in the summertime by making his theatre an attractive place to go to in the summertime. Heat and cold is largely a condition of the mind. "Make a place look cool, and people will be reasonably cool." That's Frankel's philosophy. And his philosophy finds practical expression in the green and white striped lining to the marquee of the theatre. It looks cool and inviting. And if the outside looks cool, the average citizen will gamble on the conditions inside.

Liberty Transforms Marquee Into Stage

How Diebel Took Advantage of the Construction of His Theatre For Novelty Exploitation Stunt

THE Liberty theatre, Youngstown, Ohio, is one of the classiest motion picture theatres in the land, so when it goes in for exploitation, it's always something out of the ordinary that it puts over. Recently, the Liberty theatre had the whole town by the ears, with its novel, daring, and at the same time, simple exploitation with "On with the Dance."

Christie Deibel, manager of the theatre, took advantage of the construction of the building. The marquee always came in for its share of publicity as a news announcer, but it's something new to utilize it as a stage. And that's just what Mr. Deibel did. One end of the marquee, the end facing an intersection with one of the leading downtown business streets of Youngstown, was converted into a stage, and a beautiful young girl, dressed in the conventional ballet gown, danced there intermittently during the week's run of "On with the Dance."

A six-sheet was used as a "back drop" for the set in which the dancer performed. The lithograph was set in an elaborate frame. An inset of yellow paper was used which when lighted from the rear presented the appearance of a golden sheath,

Illustrating how the Liberty utilized its lobby in the exploitation of "On With the Dance."

The novelty was not only valuable from a decorative point of view but was also an effective ballyhoo, being visible from a considerable distance down the street and was the means of bringing crowds to the theatre.

Behind the advertising sign over the center of the marquee, an orchestra played while the dancer danced. The orchestra could also be heard for a considerable distance, and brought crowds, for music is a magnet that infallibly attracts the human race.

Another big six-sheet, like the one on the front of the theatre, was located at the extreme end of the marquee. This poster also had the yellow light shaft, and caught the people coming from the opposite direction.

Mr. Deibel also tied his exploitation up with a local music store, and during the rush of the noon hour, the young dancer, who usually appeared on her impromptu roof-garden stage, danced in the display window of the music store.

The whole stunt was simple, effective, artistic, and inexpensive, especially compared to extra business it brought to the Liberty theatre and to the added admissions it brought into the strong box.

Brooklyn and El Paso Offer Exploitation Suggestions

Adopts Unusual Advertising Angle for Talmadge Picture

BY the time the glamor of the first exploitation campaign ever launched in Athens, Texas, has faded away, Messrs. Edward and William Dorbante, managers and owners of the Dixie theatre of that city, are going to have another stunt ready. This is one of the striking results of the initial promotion effort made in Athens. Other outstanding features might be enumerated as:

(1) The breaking of all existing box office records in the history of the Dixie.

(2) More thrills per capita for the female residents than ever before in the city.

(3) Admission prices of 15-25 cents.

(4) The telegrams and special invitations that the boys stuck in their hat bands and the girls put in their hope chests.

Opening guns in this campaign were fired three days before the first performance when, with half-page smashes in the Athens newspapers, the Messrs. Dorbante let the city and surrounding territory know that recruits were wanted for the "sinner meetings" which were to be held on the occasion of the presentation of Constance Talmadge's "In Search of a Sinner."

These newspaper ads were followed by neatly-printed invitations mailed to a list of more than one thousand patrons. This invitation read:

"By the Satanic privilege of Leap Year, and without shame or remorse, I cordially invite you to become a conspirator and escort me to the earliest possible showing of "In Search of a Sinner," showing at the Dixie theatre, where Constance Talmadge will reveal the devilish ways most girls admire in their favorite sinner. Sinnercerely —R. S. V. P. (Really Something Very Promising)."

These invitations had hardly been hemmed and hawed over before imitation telegrams were found in the various mail boxes of the city. The telegram stated:

"Shhhhhhh. Come on down to the Dixie. 'In Search of a Sinner' with Connie Talmadge now showing. Keep it a secret."

For a town of 4,000 this sort of exploitation is rather unusual. Hence the broken box office and attendance records and the determination on the part of the Messrs. Dorbante to have another exploitation campaign ready just as soon as Athens stops talking about the campaign for "In Search of a Sinner."

How Wilson Rejuvenated the Imperial

West Philadelphia Exhibitor Gives Rules For Putting the Run Down House On Its Feet

WILLIAM WILSON, who manages the Imperial theatre of West Philadelphia, a neighborhood house that had fallen into bad repute before he took hold of it, is authority for the statement that the quickest way to build a losing proposition into a paying house is to correct the things that keep patrons away. The quickest way to find out what these things are is to make a personal canvass of possible patrons and ask them.

In discussing the methods he employed in putting the Imperial on its feet, Mr. Wilson says:

"I made the canvass personally and I made it a thorough one. I went from house to house in the district surrounding the theatre, making the trips in the morning when I was more than likely to find the owner of the house at home. I started by introducing myself as the manager of the Imperial, and then handed out an indirect compliment by declaring that I felt their opinion as to what was wrong with the house would be very valuable to me. Here are some of the things I was told:

"The theatre is dirty."

"I didn't deny this, although it was cleaned every day. I asked if they were of the opinion that a redecorating would make it more attractive and discussed new color schemes and apparently came to the decision then and there to redecorate."

"The theatre smells close and unpleasant." Then I discussed ventilation and announced that I would install a ventilating system.

"The pictures are old and shotted," and then I discussed possible new programs, and announced that I thought I could arrange it.

"The pictures are monotonous to me." Then I discussed novelties in presentation, contests, etc.

"In each case I was careful to make it appear that the person I was interviewing was giving me valuable suggestions in regard to my own business. I worked to

Thomas' Initial Promotion Effort Goes Big

HARRY THOMAS of the American theatre, Dallas, Texas, has recently scored a ten strike with his exploitation campaign for "For the Soul of Raphael."

Mr. Thomas selected one of the striking situations of the picture as a working basis. It was the marriage scene, showing Rachel Estevan, the heroine, in bridal costume, holding a babe in her arms. The babe is, of course, out of place and looks suspicious at a wedding ceremony. The fact that the child is not the bride's, but the illegitimate son of the bridegroom, need not enter the case, for exploitation purposes.

Accordingly, Mr. Thomas had cards printed, with a picture taken from the film, showing a bride with a babe. The only wording on the card was the name of the theatre and the date of the showing of the picture. The picture did the rest.

The first effects of this striking picture was a condemnation in the press by several letters written by parents to the editor, criticizing the "immoral" post-card sent by the American theatre. This aroused the public appetite to see the picture and gained free advertising. Of course Mr. Thomas replied to these letters at great length, explaining that the baby shown in the picture post-card did not belong to the bride, but was adopted at the wedding ceremony. Far from being in any way "immoral," Mr. Thomas added, "For the Soul of Raphael" was the height of propriety and ethics, as anyone seeing the picture would admit. The result can easily be guessed.

make them take a personal interest in the theatre, and it succeeded. A new ventilation system and redecorations had been decided upon before I took the house. People started to drop around in the morning after the workmen got busy to see if I was really carrying out their ideas. They felt a sort of proprietary interest.

"Those who wanted novelties were satisfied. I had made a note of their name and address and when I staged a baby contest in connection with 'A Twilight Baby' I had letters written in a rather personal manner, mimeographed and sent to a large list. A fashion show with Katherine MacDonald in 'The Beauty Market' also helped to bring this class out, and as a result the whole neighborhood feels that they have helped to make the theatre a success, so they keep coming to see how their suggestions are working out. I have had the theatre for two years and they are still interested, because whenever opportunity offers I discuss my work with my patrons."

Sun Conducts Great Campaign for Vitagraph Special

Gem Doesn't Believe in Sacrificing Poster Space

As a firm advocate of the practice of utilizing lobby space for exploitation instead of granting such space for ice cream and candy-parlor concessions, the Gem theatre, Salt Lake City, has discovered several advertising devices that hold an interest for exhibitors. Rather than sacrifice art poster space in the cause of monthly revenue from rent by cutting off the ends of the lobby and renting them for confectionery parlors, the Gem has its own plan of making the most out of this space.

This plan consists of art posters which resemble giant bits of engraving. An unpolished black or purple preparation serves as the background against which gold-colored letters are pasted. By a method of padding, these gold letters stand out in sharp contrast against all other ad matter in the lobby. Not only is the effect striking from within the lobby but it is rather pronounced from a distance of a hundred feet.

The theory on which the Gem works is based on the fact that the rental gained from dividing up the lobby is not enough to remunerate the house for the loss of valuable advertising space. Under the belief that the novel method of "building" posters creates attention that is apt to be turned into patronage the Gem fails to see the "percentage" in dividing up with the candy and soda pop people.

Capitol Giving Excerpts from "Pinafore"

ONE of the principal musical numbers on the Capitol program is the rendition of excerpts from the Gilbert and Sullivan comic opera, "H. M. S. Pinafore," by the orchestra, ensemble and soloists who sing from the stage.

The number opens with the "Opening Chorus" by the ensemble singing from the stage, attired in the costumes of the opera and before a stage setting to represent the deck of a ship. This is followed by the dancing of the "Hornpipe" by two of the performers. "A Maiden Fair to See" is next rendered by Sudworth Frasier as "Ralph Rackstraw." "Over the Bright Blue Sea" is then sung by the ensemble of female voices off stage. "The Admiral's Song" by Bertram Peacock, Frasier and Louis La Valle, as a trio with the ensemble assisting comes after next. The number closes with the rendition of "I Am an Englishman" by Mr. La Valle as "Bill Bobstay" and the ensemble.

The setting is by John Wenger and the direction is under the supervision of S. L. Rothapfel. The vocal selections and the orchestral accompaniment are arranged so that there is no delay in going from one excerpt to another. The number is staged in one set throughout and runs about fifteen minutes.

The new system of posters was first brought forth with the exploitation of "The Yellow Typhoon." In this case the lettering stood out in bold black and the background was a brilliant yellow to emphasize the title.

Uses Mailing List for "Prince Chap"

One of the real "first run" cities of the country is Jacksonville, Florida, which accounts for the fact that the Arcade theatre of that city has already played "The Prince Chap."

In the matter of exploitation Phil Gersdorf, publicity manager for the house, sent out a quantity of imitation typewritten letters which called attention to the fame of the original play, mentioned who starred in it and then gave its attention to the photoplay and Thomas Meighan, relating his former vehicles, especially "The Miracle Man," etc., with some kind words for William DeMille and the other recognized members of the cast.

This letter was, of course, in addition to the usual publicity given every picture. The Arcade mailing list was carefully inspected for "The Prince Chap" letter to select only those residents of Jacksonville who would appreciate what the name "Prince Chap" and Cyril Scott really meant in the theatrical world, a class who are hard to reach with the more orthodox forms of publicity. The results accruing from the letter were more than satisfactory, the "limousine" crowd turning out in most unusual numbers.

Manager Brown and publicity director Gersdorf seem to belie the generally accepted theory that the heat of the tropics saps the energies,

All Omaha Goes Treasure Hunting

"Silver Horde" Exploitation Put Over With Bang
By Sun Theatre, Omaha

DIGGING for twenty silver hoards to advertise "The Silver Horde," describes the exploitation stunt that set all Omaha wild for a ten-day period and resulted in immense business for the Sun theatre during the hottest week of the summer season.

For two weeks before the opening day of "The Silver Horde" at the Sun, the entire city was covered with one-sheets admonishing the populace to "dig in the shade, cool off in the Sun, and look for the Silver Horde," advising that "maybe we buried it across the street," suggesting that the passerby "get a spade and dig for the Silver Horde."

Under the able direction of N. N. Frudenfeld, advertising manager of the Sun theatre, and Harry Goldberg, who has set a mark as one of the most progressive and wide-awake exhibitors in the Middle West, aided by H. S. Lord, exploitation manager of the Goldwyn Chicago Exchange, the "Silver Horde" campaign was inaugurated and carried out to a most successful conclusion. Through the operation of the Omaha Daily News, front-page stories were carried for a week, and for another week full-column stories were printed daily on the second page.

The Sun theatre made up twenty "silver hoards," each containing from three to seven dollars in cash and ten tickets for the performance of "The Silver Horde." One night, two weeks before the playdate, and before any publicity was given to the engagement, Messrs. Goldberg and Frudenfeld gumshoed around Omaha in the wee small hours, armed with a spade, seeking twenty empty lots in various parts of Omaha.

The burial was accomplished without discovery, and the next day the entire city blossomed out with one-sheets, eight and twenty-four-sheet stands telling everyone to look for the "silver hoards," and to watch the Omaha Daily News for particulars. One week before playdate, the first story broke on the front page of the News for a three-column space, giving the details of the burial of the hoards, and four of the approximate locations.

The immediate result was a rush of treasure seekers, old and young, in search of the silver and tickets. All week long the excitement kept up, until it seemed that every person in Omaha was either looking for or talking about the "silver hoard." The News kept up the interest with detailed stories of the finding of each hoard and the hardware stores ran out of spades and picks before the week was over.

Then to top off this tremendous exploitation, the Sun theatre knocked the terror out of the hottest Sunday opening of the season with a most novel and appropriate lobby display. The entire front of the Sun theatre was transformed into a mammoth ice cave, with giant icicles hanging down from the ceiling, the entire cave narrowing down into the foyer door like a veritable Eskimo hut. Further to add to the illusion and to advertise the wintry coolness of the theatre and the picture as well, seven oscillating fans were concealed behind the front row of icicles, so arranged that their breezes wafted directly into the faces of the sweltering passerby, and gave the impression of typical Alaskan atmosphere.

It would be hard to call to mind a more complete and more profitable exploitation than that given to "The Silver Horde" by the Sun theatre. Every detail was covered in advance, and every detail was handled with minute care. It is just another example of the fact that summer weather holds no terrors for the exhibitor who will play big feature productions and has the courage to exploit them in a big way.

Treasure Hunt Makes Hit at Mount Vernon

McCormick and Goldschlag Get Results With Novelty Exploitation For "Treasure Island"

WITH an outlay of a hundred dollars and the expenditure of some gray matter coupled with an investment of some labor, Manager Harry McCormick, and Assistant Manager Goldschlag, of Proctor's theatre, Mount Vernon, N. Y., have just put over an exploitation campaign for "Treasure Island," which brought returns far in excess of the expense involved.

The stunt used was the "hidden treasure" idea described in the NEWS a number of times since "Treasure Island" has been released.

The first announcement appeared in the local paper a few days before the picture was to be shown. The words "100," "gold," and "free," make an alluring advertisement when they appear in bold-face type. Extra space, in addition to the regular advertisement, was used. "In celebration of 'Treasure Island,'" the copy read, "Proctor's theatre will hide in some conspicuous part of the city, a sum of gold each day."

As originally planned by Mr. McCormick and Mr. Goldschlag, the money was to be hid in a lump sum. But as this would not get the greatest amount of publicity nor arouse the most interest, it was decided to distribute the prize in sums of $5 and $10. On the first day three $10 prizes were hidden. Cash itself was not used, but instead a coupon, which was redeemable at the box-office. One coupon was placed under a board in front of the local newspaper office. Another was hidden under a certain stone in the public park, and still another in a third well-known place. A more or less accurate hint as to the location was flashed on the screen, and no sooner was the picture over than hundreds of youngsters, and not a few grown-ups, raced one another to the suspected locations. Mr. McCormick and Mr. Goldschlag watched the hunt in the park from behind a convenient tree. Not even the pirates of "Treasure Island" sought more assiduously for the buried treasure than these avid youngsters. All three prizes were discovered, and the newspaper carried a separate story of the affair the following day, printing the names and addresses of the lucky finders.

On the second day the screen announced that a man would be walking the business section immediately after the show, who, if accosted, would give a coupon which could be redeemed for gold at the box-office. Although the man's appearance was described in only a general way, he was "held-up" by eager members of the audience in a short time. On the third day, Saturday, the prizes were hidden throughout the city once more.

The stunt filled the house in the warm afternoons with hundreds of youngsters. Mount Vernon is a residential city with a large commuting population, and as the children went home in the evening they spread the news of the wonderful "hidden treasure," and incidentally of the picture itself. The result was crowds standing in back of the theatre every evening, despite the fact that a charity bazaar was running during two of the three nights on which the picture was shown.

Builds Jungle to Exploit Tarzan Picture

Building a jungle in Denver to exploit "The Revenge of Tarzan," was a piece of showmanship that demonstrated its value when the film came to be shown at the American theatre, Denver. It was arranged by R. P. Allison, exploitation representative at the Goldwyn Denver exchange, and the manager of the American.

The jungle was built in a booth designed and decorated by the Goldwyn branch office and the manager of the theatre at the Rocky Mountain Screen Club Movie Exposition, convention and hall held in the Denver City Auditorium on July 1 and 2.

With the aid of palms, ferns and other tropic vegetation a very imposing cross-section of a jungle was built in the booth at a comparatively small cost as it was a simple matter to borrow much of the vegetation. Near the centre of the jungle scene was placed a large cut-out figure of Tarzan ready to give battle to the lion which was about to spring out upon the Ape-man's shipwrecked sweetheart. The figure of the lion and of the girl were also cut out of the Tarzan posters, as was that of a monkey almost hidden by the foliage, but peering interestedly out at the figures of the man and the lion. Another large poster cut-out, mounted on top of the booth, showed the struggle between Tarzan and the lion.

The display attracted a lot of attention from the people of Denver and the exhibitors of Colorado who were present.

Sidney Originates New One for "Wonder Man"

Through the Denver Post, Louis K. Sidney was able to get over some exploitation for "The Wonder Man" when this picture played the Rivoli theatre of Denver recently that did much to boost box office statements during the whole engagement.

In connection with the Post, Managing Director Sidney of the Fox Denver houses offered a fifty-dollar prize to the man who could most nearly duplicate Georges Carpentier's physical proportions. The Post gave the French champion's measurements and ran a lot of other free matter about the stunt which was of great interest to those who follow the events of the sporting pages, especially boxing.

The result of Mr. Sidney's exploitation was beyond even his expectations.

Imitation Telegram and Freckled Boy Work Wonders

By expending six dollars as salary, and the cost of printing imitation telegrams, Frank L. Newman, president of the Newman Theatre Company, Kansas City, laid the groundwork for a most successful newspaper campaign in connection with the Newman theatre in that city. The salary went to a freckle-faced school lad for three afternoons of work, and he enjoyed every minute of the time he put in and the result was one of the most successful that has been staged at the theatre.

The boy was garbed in a bell-boy's suit similar to that worn by Wesley Barry in Marshall Neilan's production of "Don't Ever Marry." He was provided with telegram blanks on which were printed only the title of the picture. Armed with these the boy invaded the business district every day, and picking a man out of the crowd would immediately start whistling at him and running toward him. The actions usually attracted a crowd and then he would deliver the telegram and rush off again. Usually the terseness of the message, the method of delivery and the astonishment of the recipient created considerable comment.

For three days this style of teaser exploitation was continued and then the newspaper advertising for the attraction disclosed the secret.

The telegram simply stated: "Don't Ever Marry."

Exploitation Ideas for Two New Multiple Reelers

(Above)
Lobby display constructed for the run of "The Wonder Man" at the Lyric theatre, McKeesport, Pa. Handsomely mounted oil paintings of scenes from the picture and cut-outs from lithographs were used to advantage, as will be noted

(Right)
An exploitation idea originated by A. J. Mack of the exploitation department of Equity during the engagement of "Keep to the Right," at Poli's theatre, Washington. The plan was to plant one of the pasteboard "tombstones" wherever an accident had occurred during the previous year, but the police department put a crimp in Mr. Mack's aspirations almost before he had started. He did, however, erect one monument long enough to utilize the services of a photographer.

W. A. Johnston Stand Endorsed

IN a letter just received by the News, John W. Semler, in commenting on the competitive conditions that obtain in the small town to the detriment of the "little exhibitor," voices his hearty endorsement of William A. Johnston's recent editorial statements anent this subject. Mr. Semler's letter follows:

"The article published in the New York Globe of July 17th, by Kenneth MacGowan, 'Are Small Towns Starving For Good Motion Pictures?' is one not to be passed over lightly, particularly that part which quotes William A. Johnston of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS. Mr. Johnston's statements are correct, every one of them. He has hit the nail on the head—but what is the answer?"

"For the past year I have been spending time and money investigating just this condition—not so much in the big cities, but mostly in the smaller towns. In every small town the exhibitor is in a 'panicky' frame of mind, he does not know where he is at and how long he can hold out. Patronage has fallen off—why? because he cannot afford to pay the prices exacted by the manufacturers of the higher grade of films. He wants to play them, is willing to pay a fair price, but when he is told that the picture will cost him more than he can take in on the day, he has no alternative but to pass them by. His patrons, who keep abreast of the times, ask, When are you going to show this or that picture? His only salvation is in the art of stalling them. The days of stalling are fast nearing an end, and if something is not done to help the little exhibitor along this channel will soon be closed.

"Movie fans are getting tired of the 'made over night' feature that has been thrown together and called a feature. They want real pictures, and the quicker the manufacturers wake up to themselves and play along with the little exhibitor the better they will be off. Mr. Johnston says, 'the smaller theatre is going down hill in the calibre of the pictures booked,' and that it is 'not the fault of the theatre men.' You are dead right on this, Mr. Johnston. The fault lies with the manufacturer. Either he is blind or does not want to see for reasons known only to himself.

"One exhibitor I talked to in a small town made a statement that may explain the reason for the overprice of the picture. The salesman came along and talked up the qualities of a feature that had a Broadway run, the exhibitor wanted the picture, but the price was out of all proportion. The salesman smiled and asked him how much he would rent his house for two days. A price was agreed upon and in came the picture. With every seat filled, the show lost money when figured against the asked rental price. The exhibitor wondered what it was all about and why a manufacturer was ready to lose money on the 'go-in' for a small town showing. The answer came a few weeks later when another representative from the same company came and wanted to know if Mr. Exhibitor did not want to sell his theatre. The place was not for sale, and the exhibitor was led to believe that it would not be long before he would have opposition that would play the big-time pictures. Now, can you imagine this exhibitor's frame of mind? They would not book him direct at a fair rental, yet they take over his house for two days, figuring to lose money. They find they can get a play in that town, so try to buy him out—or are ready to build against him.

"One who knows the inside could go on indefinitely on this subject, but that does not solve the difficulty

Cincinnati Exhibitor Boosts Pathe News

Fred S. Meyer, managing director of the Palace theatre, Hamilton, Ohio, has written a letter to the Pathe Exchange in Cincinnati, telling of the service he has received from the Pathe News, and the scoops he has been able to put across on the other theatres in his town.

of the little fellow. Can the formation of the various exhibitors' leagues solve the question? I doubt it. It is a hard proposition to figure out and I had about given up hope for the little fellow, when I ran into a man right in this town who knows the picture business backwards and who unfolded to me a plan that made my heart jump for joy. I would tell you the whole plan, only I am pledged to confidence, but I can assure you, Mr. Little Exhibitor, that what is to happen this season will put you in a position that will 'tickle you pink' and permit you to book at 'let-live' prices, pictures that will make you wish you had a string of theatres and not one."

First Compson Picture Due in Early Winter

The complete cast of the first Betty Compson picture, "Prisoners of Love," to be released by Goldwyn Distributing Corporation in the early winter, reads as follows: Blanche Davis, Betty Compson; her father, Ralph Lewis; her mother, Claire McDowell; her sister, Clara Horton; James Randolph, Emory Johnson; his mother, Kate Toneray; Martin Blair, Roy Stewart. This production, recently completed, has received the highest praise from director George Loane Tucker.

Louise Glaum Has New Role in "Love Madness"

In "Love Madness," the forthcoming Hodgkinson release, a J. Parker Read, Jr., production, starring Louise Glaum, the star has a role which differs greatly from any with which she has hitherto been associated. In "Love Madness," she may be truly said to have come into her own, for the role with which she is entrusted is one which any actress would be delighted to play, that of a noble, self-sacrificing woman who gives her all to save the life of her husband who is condemned to die.

Saenger Changes Its Policy with "Sex"

The Saenger Amusement Company booked "Sex," the J. Parker Read, Jr. production for their Strand theatre, New Orleans, La., and gave the Hodgkinson representative a play date on it. But that play date never became effective, for the Strand Theatre. The company decided to change the policy of their Liberty theatre, and cater to the nicest element in town. So they changed "Sex" from the Strand to the Liberty to do it.

Film Specials Has Ten Horsley Comedies

Alice Terry, a new film beauty discovered by Rex Ingram, who has an important role in "Hearts Are Trumps," the forthcoming Metro melodrama.

Live News From The Producers

Fan Film Corp. Is Formed New Organization to Star Louise Du Pre; Giegerich General Manager

A NEW "million dollar" motion picture company has been incorporated, under the name of The Fan Film Corporation, to produce five and six reel features starring Louise Du Pre, recently understudy to Mary Pickford during the production of "Pollyanna."

Arrangements have already been made to visualize a number of well known stories that are ideally suited to Miss Du Pre's type and talents and production activities will be started about the middle of August.

While the company is not yet ready to announce the titles of these stories, it is stated that they are of the simple philosophical, human interest strain, that the public has shown a decided and consistent preference for, and it is the intention of The Fan Film Corporation to stick to that style of picture in all of its operations.

Recently while vacationing in Los Angeles and accepting picture engagements that would further her knowledge of screen technique, she was engaged by Mary Pickford to act as the latter's understudy during the production of "Pollyanna." This engagement came as a result of her remarkable likeness to Miss Pickford and the fact that they are almost exact duplicates in every measurement of figure.

The new corporation is composed of men well known in the business and financial world, and the production affairs of the company will be under the supervision of its vice president and general manager, Chas. J. Giegerich, who is well known in the motion picture field, through his activities in publicizing, "Over the Top," "The Yellow Dog," Georges Carpentier and other celebrities and through his association with the Vitagraph, Pathe, Universal and Robertson-Cole companies.

"Paramount Week" Plans Famous Players to Advertise in 868 Papers in Week of Sept. 5-11

NATIONAL Paramount Week, Sept. 5 to 11, inclusive.

Here's the slogan that will be placed before millions of people from one end of the country to the other by big advertising and publicity campaign. For the third annual National Paramount Week the officials of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation will use advertising space in twice the number of papers that were used in the campaign in 1919. Preliminary plans for this year's National Paramount Week call for the purchase of space in 868 papers in cities and villages exceeding 10,000 population in every part of America.

Exhibitors throughout the country are climbing aboard the "National Paramount Week handwagon." According to early reports received at the executive offices of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation the number of theatres booking "Paramount productions solid" for the week will exceed the mark set in any previous week of the organization's history. A mark of $1,000,000 business for the week has been set by Al Lichtman, general manager of the department of distribution, and indications point to the fact that this goal will be exceeded by exhibitors who are anxious to avail themselves of the tremendous benefit to be reaped by being associated with this advertising campaign.

Lloyd Is Featured at Brooklyn Strand

Harold Lloyd in his latest comedy, "High and Dizzy" shared starring honors at the Brooklyn Strand last week with Norma Talmadge in "Yes or No." Lloyd's name was featured on the electric sign board outside the theatre and also in the theatre program. A special musical setting was arranged for this comedy which made it doubly interesting.

New Realartist Starts on First Picture

Justine Johnstone, Realartist, left Saturday, July 17th, with her company for Jacksonville, Florida, where she is to film a number of scenes in her first picture for Realart, "Blackbirds," a screen version of Harry James Smith's successful play of the same name. The company, under the direction of Jack Dillon, will spend a week or so in and around Jacksonville, having their headquarters on one of the well-known estates, returning to New York via water to take scenes on shipboard.

The cast of "Blackbirds" is composed of many screen favorites among whom are Charles Gerard, Marie Shotwell, William Boyd, Grace Parker, Walter Walker, Jessie Arnold and Mabel Bert.

Musical "Atmosphere" in Doraldina Film

Musie will furnish the "atmosphere" for the first of the Doraldina pictures, to be filmed shortly for Metro on the Coast, says a report from the Metro offices. "The reason for this," says Metro, "is that the famous Hawaiian dancer not only trips, but thinks, acts and lives in terms of stringed instruments. Practically every member of the cast for 'The Passion Fruit,' her forthcoming production, is a musician, while the full Hawaiian orchestra with which the beautiful star worked in New York will provide the atmosphere.

"Doraldina is co-operating with Edward Sloman, her director, in the designing of original settings as a background for her Hawaiian picture."

"Beau Revel" Ready at Ince Studios

Under the direction of John G. Wray, and the personal supervision of Thomas H. Ince, "Beau Revel," the big Thomas H. Ince-Louis Joseph Vance special, was completed this week at the Ince Studios. The preliminary editing and cutting of the drama will begin within the next few days.

"The Green Flame" Is Released July 18

The W. W. Hodkinson Corporation announces the release of "The Green Flame" on July 18th. This picture, which was directed by Ernest C. Warde, is based on a story written by Raymond C. Hill. The continuity is by Jack Cunningham. J. Warren Kerrigan, who is starred in this production, is surrounded by a cast which includes Fritz Brunette, Jay Morley, Calire Du Brey, Myles McCarthy, Edwin Wallock and William Moran. The story is of the "crook" type and is based on the mysterious workings of an original type of criminal organization.

Cannibal Film Should Succeed in England

"Shipwrecked Among Cannibals" the Universal-Jewel feature containing actual pictures of New Guinea savages has the promise of great success in England, according to Frank J. Brookliss, one of the leading importers of moving pictures for distribution in the British Isles.

After viewing a private showing of the cannibal pictures, Mr. Brookliss sent the following letter to Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal company: "This film will prove a bigger success than the Paul Rainy Hunt pictures and as far as England is concerned should go over in the same way."

Capitol Theatre Selects Them for Showing in Near Future

IN an announcement just issued from the headquarters of the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, it is stated that five Goldwyn feature-productions have been engaged by the Capitol Theatre for late summer and early fall showings. The Goldwyn statement follows:

"Five photoplays, made by one motion-picture organization, for late summer and early fall at a week-run theatre is 'going some.' Yet that is the program which S. L. Rothapel, manager of the Capitol Theatre, has mapped out for the largest theatre in the city. The five pictures booked are all Goldwyn productions. Mr. Rothapel believed that he had in these five Goldwyn pictures just the variety and strength of story, the excellence of photography, directing and acting which would appeal to his clientele.

"Appropriately enough, the first picture in the series was entitled 'Going Some,' from the successful spoken comedy and novel of the same name by Rex Beach. It opened to a capacity audience on Sunday, July 18th. The snappy comedy and the punch in the humor justified Mr. Rothapel's faith in the picture, for the business kept at a high level throughout the week. The work of the young actor, Cullen Landis, who made such a hit in Rex Beach's Alaskan picture, 'The Girl From Outside,' repeated the strong impression upon screen fans which he registered in the previous production.

"Beginning Sunday, July 25th, the Capitol will show Will Rogers, the human and humorous screen comedian, in his newest Goldwyn picture, 'Cupid,' the 'Cowpuncher,' based upon the rollicking, whimsical story of cowboy life which Eleanor Gates christened, 'Alec Lloyd, Cowpuncher.' It was directed by Clarence G. Badger, who has been so successful in directing other Will Rogers' photoplays. The members of the Goldwyn staff believe that the homely and natural screen comedian, who has risen in a year's time to heights of popularity undreamed of when Samuel Goldwyn induced him to affix his signature to a motion picture starring contract, has one of his most characteristic and likeable roles in the match-making cowpuncher.

"Next in order, the silvershert of the Capitol will reflect a picture version of the century's most popular spoken French drama, 'Madame X,' in which Pauline Frederick, one of the most famous and successful of motion picture stars, gives an extraordinary emotional characterization of the woman who refuses to detect herself against a charge of murder in order that her son might never know she was his mother.

"The 'Penalty,' a film version of Gouverneur Morris' most popular novel, an Eminent Authors' Production, is also booked for the Capitol. The play is easily one of the most picturesque and unusual in character and situation ever filmed. Wallace Worsley has surpassed his own efforts in the direction and a sensation is promised in the acting of Lon Chaney in the role of Blizard, the soulless, legless king of San Francisco's underworld, who is the principal character. Chaney scored an immense hit in 'The Miracle Man,' and 'The Penalty' gives him an even better opportunity for knock-out acting of the finest kind.

"The fifth Goldwyn picture is a romantic comedy, starring Madge Kennedy and directed by Lawrence C. Windom. It is called 'The Girl With the Jazz Heart.' The talented and winsome 'first lady of the screen,' as Miss Kennedy has been called, plays a dual role in the picture—that of an innocent, demure Mennonite maid who runs away from her uncle's home to New York City to escape marriage with an elderly suitor whom she loathes, and that of a slangy, very human, up-to-the-minute New York telephone operator who helps her to escape from the arms of the elderly suitor to the young arms of a New Yorker whose heart is captured by her demure winsomeness."

Adler Joins Allan Dwan Producer Acquires Well Known Publicist for Representative

THROUGH Arthur Butler Graham, his legal advisor, Producer Allan Dwan, at present releasing Mayflower specials through First National and shortly to offer his own productions as a member of Associated Producers, announces the acquisition of Bert Adler as Eastern representative. Mr. Adler first attracted Mr. Dwan's attention as exploitation manager of Realart, where his campaign in the behalf of the producer's "Soldiers of Fortune" won wide comment for its originality. Despite the long association of both Dwan and Adler with the film industry and the confidential nature of the Eastern representative post, the two principals have never met each other.

Adler is a pioneer in the movement for producer cooperation with the exhibitor—the movement which teaches that a picture must not only be sold, but "put over." It will be his duty to "put over" the Dwan productions as well as supervise their booking. Adler's acquaintance with important exhibitors, built up by ten years of steady publicity performance, is certain to make itself felt in such work.

Starting in the industry with Edwin Thanhouser, Mr. Adler's advertising literature of 1910 shows lobby displays and tieup suggestions that might be herald as "new" today. He became general representative of Thanhouser Company under the late C. J. Hite, in this position aiding the "Million Dollar Mystery" reach its famous "million dollar gross." Other serials that Adler helped get over are Benjamin Chapin's "Son of Democracy," Vitagraph's "The Fighting Trail," and Universal's "Trey of Hearts," and "The Master Key." Adler perhaps attained widest note with his independent publicity office in the Candler building two years ago.

Bert Adler, who has signed up as Allan Dwan's Eastern representative

Estella Taylor playing a leading role in the Fox special, "White New York Sleeps," recently entertained Vice Admiral Henry B. Wilson, commander of the Atlantic fleet, and his staff at the Fox studio.

Unity League Progressing

Screen to Be Medium of Anglo-American League's Propaganda

A REPORT from the West Coast offices of the Mayflower Pictures Corporation states that the film work of the Anglo-American League is going forward satisfactorily. The Anglo-American League is an organization established to carry out a propaganda through the medium of the screen which shall have for its object the solidifying of friendly relations between the United States and England. The movement is sponsored by Lord Northcliffe, whose personal representative, C. L. Faulkner, is now in this country promoting the growth of this association. The Prince of Wales is an honorary member of the organization.

Arthur Levey is chairman of the national executive committee, and Reynold E. Blight has been assigned the task of assembling a corps of four-minute speakers. He is also to supervise the membership "drives." It is the plan of the League to publish a League magazine and to issue free to all the exhibitors of the United States and England the film news of the organization. A Los Angeles Chapter, including 200 prominent citizens of that city, has already been formed, and plans are being laid to extend the League's branches throughout the United States.

The Mayflower Pictures Corporation, through its president, Benjamin A. Prager, has offered the facilities of the Mayflower Coast studio to the new organization for its production work. Sidney A. Franklin, the Mayflower producer, has been made supervisor of production for the League. The leading producers, according to the plans of the organization, are to make a series of propaganda pictures which shall have international brotherhood as their basic theme. Allan Dwan has already completed one of these pictures under the title of "Friendship." This includes "shots" from English news weeklies made under the supervision of Lord Northcliffe. According to the Mayflower statement, the "Big Four" are expected to be early contributors to the League's film program.

"Hardboiled" Audience Sees "White Moll"

The hardest test that can be given a motion picture product is—showing it to a "hardboiled" audience of exhibitors, producers, directors, stars, writers, for trade and daily newspapers and magazines, special writers, and others connected directly or indirectly with the motion picture industry—was given "The White Moll" in which William Fox presents Pearl White for the first time under his management and in her special feature production, Tuesday morning of last week, at B. F. Keith's Palace Theatre, New York.

More than twelve hundred persons filled the theatre to its capacity, and at the end of the showing the audience applauded enthusiastically and spontaneously for several minutes.

"High and Dizzy" Wins Over Press Critics

New honors won by Harold Lloyd in his latest two-reel comedy special, "High and Dizzy," first of his second series for Pathe distribution and released July 11th, have been reported from both sides of the Continent. In Los Angeles, where, at Grauman's Theatre, "High and Dizzy" had its initial showing on the West Coast, the young comedian made 'em whoop according to Monroe Rathrop the film critic of the Los Angeles Express. In New York, where it played at the Strand and Capitol Theatres, the new Lloyd winner won the same measure of praise.

Two scenes from "The Penalty," Goldwyn's picturization of Gouverneur Morris' story.

Goldwyn Has Strong Story

Officials Expect Great Things of Pauline Frederick in "Madame X"

GREAT expectations of the screen version of "Madame X," the most popular and successful spoken French drama of the century are entertained by Samuel Goldwyn, the producer, and the members of his studio staff at Culver City, Cal., and of his home office staff. These expectations of popular appeal and box-office drawing power are based upon two things—the power and vividness of the emotion-arousing, soul-stirring story and the powerful, authoritative acting of Miss Frederick. No spoken drama which has been adapted to the screen has shown itself more susceptible to the translation without losing any of its strength, finesse and appeal.

"Madame X" was written by Alexandre Bisson, a French dramatist of genius, who told his most dramatic stage conception in a series of thrilling pictures peculiarly adapted to the screen. Its success abroad was duplicated in this country when Henry W.

Savage produced the play on the spoken stage. Several American actresses appeared in the title role in various companies and each of them won a new and greater reputation for her work in the role than she had ever enjoyed before. And then the great, the divine Sarah herself appeared in the role in one of her last tours of the United States.

The supporting cast has been carefully selected. William Courtleigh is cast as the unjust husband, and lovers of stage and screen alike know how strong and meticulous a performance he always gives. Casson Ferguson, in the role of Raymond, the son, who defends his mother against the charge of murder, gives a performance as fine and strong in its boyish way as that of the star. Hardee Kirkland, Albert Roscoe, Sidney Ainsworth, Lionel Belmore, Willard Louis, Corrae Kirkham and Maud Louis are other members of the superlative cast.

Lasky Creates Discussion

British Critics Split by Statement of Famous Players Executive

GREAT BRITAIN is now undergoing the same throes of agony on the argument of film versus novel that once divided the intellectual world of this country and still crops up occasionally, as the result of an interview with Jesse L. Lasky, vice-president of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation published by the London Daily Express. Literary men and women are taking sides as the result of this article which was, in part, as follows:

"Because of the world wide scope of the film the time has come when authors must choose whether they want to write for the screen or for the few."

"The great and influential authors of the future whose ideas will dominate the thought of the world are those who have the vision to present their thoughts to the world through the greatest medium ever devised for transmitting thought—the motion picture."

"It is an unusual book which reaches a circulation of 50,000. The greatest play will not, cannot, attract more than 8,000 people in a week to the theatre. Yet the same book and the same play, written for the screen, will reach 2,000,000 people each week in every part of the world."

Leading critics have endorsed Mr. Lasky's views to the point of saying that if recognized authors would only see the advantages the screen does offer in the way of appeal, artistry and audience they would go a long step towards eliminating some of the influence in the cinema that they now condemn.

Feminine Lead Chosen for MacLean Comedy

After a studio-wide search for a suitable leading lady to play opposite Douglas MacLean in his latest Thomas H. Ince comedy, tentatively titled "When Johnny Came Marching Home," Freddie Fralick, Ince casting director, announces the acquisition of Beatrice Burnham, winsome and talented young feminine lead.

Miss Burnham will portray the role of Margaret Warren, a rural girl who furnishes the incentive for "Johnny's" meteoric rise from hotel clerk to millionaire. So important and so unusual is the characterization conceived by Louis Stevens, who is responsible for the continuity of the Charles Belmont Davis story, that over eighty prospective "Margaret Warrens" were interviewed and given film tests. A number of the screen's most popular young actresses were considered before Miss Burnham

British Lawyer Visits Hollywood Studio

Sir George Croydon Marks, of the law firm of Marks and Clark, London, England, was a recent interested visitor at the studio in Hollywood where William D. Taylor is engaged in filming "The Furnace," his second of a series of four super-special productions for Realart for the coming season.

He was accompanied by Frank L. A. Graham, an attorney of Los Angeles. Sir George is an enthusiastic motion picture fan and was particularly interested in "The Furnace" as it is the film version of a novel by "Pan," an anonymous writer, of modern social life in England which recently created considerable of a sensation when published in England.

"Revenge of Tarzan" in Heavy Demand

Although "The Revenge of Tarzan," as the Goldwyn photoplay made from Edgar Rice Burroughs' novel, "The Return of Tarzan," is now called, has been available to exhibitors for but a short time it is already being heavily booked.

"The Revenge of Tarzan" played a three-weeks' pre-release engagement at the Broadway theatre, New York, and a week at the California theatre, Los Angeles.

Second Issue of Ince Magazine Appears

The second issue of the Thomas H. Ince magazine, "The Silver-sheet," has been announced for August first. The first edition of the new magazine, which was in circulation to over ten thousand exhibitors in the United States and Canada, resulted in hundreds of letters of commendation, and requests to be included on the regular mailing lists.

Carl Lieber Opens New Educational Branch

Mr. Carl Lieber, Jr., formerly connected with the First National Exhibitors Exchange at Indianapolis, Ind., opens the new office this month at the Educational Film Exchange, Inc., of Indiana.

Pathe Wins Place on Broadway

FROM the Pathe office comes the announcement that Pathe exchanges will follow up its record on the week of July 11th, when it had three Broadway showings by winning two more places on Broadway screens for the week following.

After his success with "Man and His Woman," a J. Stuart Blackton feature starring Herbert Rawlinson with May McAvoy, Warren Chandler and Eulalie Jensen, B. S. Mos. booked "The Girl in the Web." Blanche Sweet's newest Jesse D. Hampton production, for the Broadway showing. This is a pre-release, as the picture is not scheduled for general issue until August 15th. It also is the third Blanche Sweet picture to play the Broadway since her famed "come-back" under the Pathe banner, the others being "Fighting Cressy" and "The Deadlier Sex," both of which met with great success.

"The Unconventional Maida Greenwood," fourth of the Mrs. Sidney Drew series of comedies for Pathe, is a feature at the Capitol during the week of July 18th. The entire series of Drew comedies have been shown at this great playhouse. All have featured John Cumberland, noted stage star, and each of the stories has been adapted by Mrs. Drew from the "After Thirty" series of Julian Street.

With the booking of the Brooklyn Strand, a record-breaking week for the New York exchange of Pathe was rounded off on "One Hour Before Dawn." In spite of weather handicaps, every print of this production that could be obtained by the New York office has been booked solidly for eight weeks. Virtually every local circuit has taken the picture including Loew's, Fox, Poli's, Wolf and Springer houses—the Adelphi, Symphony, and Seventy-seventh Street.

A new photograph of Geraldine Farrar, who has now completed her first production for Associated Producers to be released by Pathe, "The Riddle: Woman."

All the upper Broadway houses have billed the production, and the prospects are that "One Hour Before Dawn" will make a record equalling the success won by "The Thirteenth Chair," until now the biggest mystery play success ever seen on the screen.

Another announcement from the Pathe office announces that almost three months after the first scene was "shot" in the old Thanhouser studio at New Rochelle, the camera has just turned for the last time on the Associated Exhibitors production of "The Riddle: Woman," starring Geraldine Farrar, which will be distributed by Pathe. With the filming of a massive scene, staged on the biggest set ever built in the Thanhouser studio, Director Edward Jose wrote him on his slate, on Saturday afternoon, July 17th. The scene depicted a lawn fête, in which several scene of fashionably dressed "extras" took part, together with the star, and principals, Miss Farrar and Adele Blood, and Montagu Love. Under supervision of Director Jose, the production is now in the course of being cut and titled.

The company returned late in the week from Marblehead, Mass., where several exteriors were filmed. The massive setting filmed Saturday, was representative of the type of interiors used throughout the production of "The Riddle: Woman." Money was spent freely upon the "setings," which lend to the picture atmosphere absolutely essential to its success.

Miss Farrar, at the conclusion of her work in the picture, proclaimed it the most "remarkable production" she has ever played in. She was worn out from her tiring day in the studio, and, with her husband, started immediately for her country home in the Adirondacks.

Arranging for Exploitation

Educational Plans to Issue "The Mystery Mind" in Sept.

Tentative plans are for the release of the first episode early in September, but a canvass is being made of the exchanges with a view to learning the date at which each office will best be able to start an intensive drive. Replies to this inquiry will be followed in selecting the time desired by the greater portion of the territory.

"We have our plans well in hand," said E. W. Hammons, vice-president and general manager of Educational and it will be easy for us to get a fast start when we are ready. Possibly we are breaking some trade traditions so far as serials are concerned, but we are going to depend on straight trade paper advertising to acquaint the exhibitors with the power of 'The Mystery Mind'.

We will break another serial 'rule' in that we are not going to prepare a lot of gimcracks and gawgaws under the guise of 'novelities.' We took over the distribution of 'The Mystery Mind' because we felt that it had rare merit for a serial and we see no reason why it should not be sold by us on its merit, and by the exhibitor on the same merit of his patrons. We hope to be able to aid him in doing that by following a few sane and sensible rules of business conduct.

"While in the past five years the so-called feature picture has had a wonderful development and the short subject has been brought up from a mere filler to an essential and important portion of the program, it appears that the serial has been allowed to follow the same old rut. Even the circus poster has lost some of its flamboyance of the days gone by. I feel sure that the serial can be made not only as successful as in the past, but that it can be given a much wider appeal by more good showmanship both on our part and that of the exhibitors.

"The story has been written by the author of the greatest serial successes, Arthur B. Reeve, and has been produced by him-off and John W. Grey, a veteran in this field. As the star there is J. Robert Pauline, the hypnotist who is known in every city and hamlet in America. I believe, too, that we will be able to show an excellence in production that has not been seen in other serials, without claiming that this cost millions to make. If we had not thought 'The Mystery Mind' had exceptional merit, we would not have acquired it. I believe we can show that merit to exhibitors very simply. We expect them to be a little perplexed by our trade paper advertisements; they will soon find that we are simply refusing to leave the realm of sanity because the production happens to be a continuous series of short subjects instead of only one.

Jimmie Adams, featured player in "Nonsense," third of the Mermaid comedies to be released by Educational Exchanges.

EDUCATIONAL FILMS CORPORATION is this week completing sales and exploitation arrangements for "The Mystery Mind," the Arthur B. Reeve and John W. Grey serial by Supreme Pictures, Inc., which will be the first chaptered story handled by Educational Exchanges.

Laboratories Get Big Order

Unusual Demand for Educational's
Comedy - Prints Taxes Facilities

EDUCATIONAL FILMS CORPORATION this week placed with its laboratories what is said by that organization to be the largest order for comedy-prints ever given, resulting from the unusual demand for prints that have come from its exchanges in the principal distributing centers of the United States.

One of the policies adopted when Educational decided to enter the comedy field and to provide its own distribution system was that the exhibitor should be given every opportunity to view the pictures before booking them, to look over every comedy, scenic and special release. It has required the greatest diplomacy to retain these prints in the exchanges for this purpose, so great has been the demand for their public exhibition in theatres, says Educational. The immense order just placed is to afford the various exchanges additional prints of the comedies, the Bruce Scenics, Chester-Outings and other series.

Additional demand on the prints already in the exchanges is reported through exhibitors desiring to extend the runs on these comedies and to repeat them at a later date. Reports have been received at the home office only on "A Fresh Start," the first of the Mermaid Comedies, and "Four Times Foiled," the initial Chester Comedy, both of which have already had several runs of two weeks at prominent theatres. It is said that as the result the bookings on the second of each series is already enough to assure many weeks showing.

"While we regret that any exhibitor has been put to a temporary inconvenience by the great demand for our pictures," said E. W. Hammons, vice-president and general manager of Educational, "we welcome this test of our new organization. It shows that we have built along the right lines and that we will be able to meet all emergencies. We have unusual laboratory facilities, and while the order that has just gone out is undoubtedly the largest ever placed for one and two-reel subjects, these pictures will be in the hands of every exchange by the time this is read."

Complete Organization of London Studio

WITH the completion of the organization at the Islington, London, studio of Famous Players-Lasky British Producers, Ltd., the English business corporation of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, the American officials who got the staff in working form will return to this country and their places will be filled by native British officials who have been trained in the requirements of Famous Players-Lasky's production work. The American officials will, most of them, have been abroad a year, doing missionary work in the establishment of the English studio and the perfection of an organization capable of continuing the work.

As one of the first steps in the contemplated changes Major Charles H. Bell, O. B. E., assistant general manager of the studio, sailed from England for America July 14. During his visit in the United States Major Bell will inspect the new eastern studio of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation to thoroughly familiarize himself with every phase of big studio work. It is expected that he will be in this country about eight weeks.

Major Bell, who is slated to assume the management of the studio, will be succeeded in his duties as assistant manager by Mr. J. Sloan, formerly purchasing agent of the London studio.

Morosco Forms Morosco Company

Stage Producer Incorporates at $2,500,000; Office in Los Angeles

AS forecast in last week's News, Oliver Morosco the producer of stage plays has again entered the motion picture industry this time as president of Oliver Morosco Productions, Inc., a corporation capitalized at $2,500,000 which will have its home office in Los Angeles. This is the second time Mr. Morosco has become interested in film production, his first connection being in association with Frank A. Garbutt, Charles Eyton and others in the organization of Morosco Photoplays Corporation, which was later absorbed by Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

The intention of the successful stage producer is to combine his work of producing plays with that of making films, it being the intention to film the play produced on the stage with the original cast after the play has been "whipped" and "dogged" into shape. To successfully do this Mr. Morosco will center his activities for the stage and screen in Los Angeles where he will try out his new plays and the successful ones he will film. The first to be made for the screen will be "The Humming Bird," a new Maud Fulton play now in rehearsal for stage production which opened Monday, July 19th at the Little theatre, Los Angeles, with Miss Fulton and Henry Walthall in the featured roles. Following this Morosco will produce "Seven Miles to Areen" which is now having a successful run at the Mason theatre, Los Angeles, and later he plans to film "The Clam Digger" which is scheduled for an early speaking stage presentation at the Morosco theatre, Los Angeles. Other plays to be filmed are "Linger Letty" with Charlotte Greenwood, "The Master Thief," "Marry the Poor Girl," "The Half Breed," "Mamma's Affair," "Wait Till We're Married," "Rose of the Ghetto," "Slippery McGee" and others.

Besides the manuscripts being submitted by the well known authors, Mr. Morosco has first call on all of the prize plays at Harvard University.

"World and His Wife" Shown in Ballroom

One of the most successful private showings of a motion picture ever held in New York City was that of "The World and His Wife," Cosmopolitan Productions' latest special, held recently in the Grand Ball Room of the Hotel Astor. The Astor's ball room is the largest in the city, and despite the fact that the night was the hottest of the year, the room was filled to the last chair, and a number of persons stood during the running of the six reels.

An unusually large number of persons prominently connected with the stage and screen were present and paid glowing tribute to the picture. Frequently the audience broke into applause, which was long and spontaneous at the conclusion of the picture.

Plantations Will See Hodkinson Pictures

The Derry Amusement Company of Derry, La., have just booked seven Hodkinson releases to show July 14th to August 25th, at Derry, La. An unusual feature of this booking is that The Derry Amusement Company will present these pictures for the benefit of the employees of the neighboring sugar plantations.

Johnson Cannibal Pictures in Demand

The Martin Johnson Cannibal pictures, the pioneer productions showing South Sea Cannibals as they really exist today, are still being strongly booked throughout the world, and Robertson-Cole, who releases them, announces that in the United States there is a steady demand for these sensational films.

Robertson-Cole is releasing the Martin Johnson pictures in two five reel productions, "Martin Johnson's Cannibals of the South Seas" and "Captured by Cannibals," and there are also ten one-reel feature pictures under the general classification of "On the Borderland of Civilization." These ten pictures are "Tulagi, A White Spot in a Black Land," "Through the Islands of the New Hebrides, where man eats man," "The Home of the Hula Hula," "Saving Savages in the South Seas," "Cruising in the Solomon" (through the heart of cannibal land), "Domesticating Wild Men," "Lonely South Sea Missions," "Recruiting in the Solomons," showing the dangers of the slave snatchers, "The City of Broken Old Men" and "Marooned in the South Seas."

Anders Randolph Paints Portrait of Star

Anders Randolph, the Danish actor, who achieved success as a professional portrait painter before doing pictures, has just finished a life-sized canvas of Marion Davies, the Cosmopolitan star. Miss Davies is so pleased with it that she has assigned to it an honor place in the cabin of the pirate ship where much of the action of the newest Davies Cosmopolitan starring feature, "Buried Treasure," takes place. The story of F. Britten Austen is said to be an absorbing of "psychic studies" and attracted attention as published recently in one of the Hearst magazines.

Field Day for First National

MARKING an exhibitor achievement that is said to have never been duplicated in motion picture history, E. L. Perry, manager of the T. and D. theatre, Oakland, Cal., has completed all arrangements for the initial Field Day for Associated First National Pictures, Inc., to be held in Oakland on July 26, which day has been declared a legal holiday by Mayor Davie in honor of the event.

All banks, public summer schools, city administration offices and the majority of the larger business houses of the city will be closed during the entire day. This is the first instance on record wherein the mayor of a city has declared a legal holiday in honor of a motion picture concern. In his proclamation Mayor Davie terms Field Day for Associated First National Pictures, Inc., the first annual event, thereby setting a precedent that will be followed in years to come.

The T. and D. theatre, of which Mr. Perry is manager, belongs to the Turner and Dahnen interests of San Francisco, holders of the franchise for Associated First National Pictures, Inc., for that territory. In carrying out the details of the plan, Mr. Perry had the full co-operation of the Turner and Dahnen interests, and that of Sam Y. Edwards, manager of the First National Exchange at San Francisco.

Featured by the presence of more than one-hundred California exhibitors who have thus far made reservations at various Oakland hotels, and one of the largest gatherings of motion picture stars ever assembled for a definite exhibitor's cause and at an exhibitor's call, the First Annual First National Field Day is the dominating local news item in all Oakland newspapers. Local trains and interurbans have arranged special rates in order to accommodate picture fans living in nearby cities and the most prominent newspapers of California have sent feature writers to report the affair.

The idea for First National Field Day for Oakland was conceived and perfected by Mr. Perry. He has personally arranged for the presence of brother exhibitors, has secured the services of a score of motion picture favorites and attended to all details of the parade and following events of the day.

Reservations have been made at the various hotels for Anita Stewart, Marjorie Daw, Wesley Barry, Mr. and Mrs. Carter De Haven, Ren Turpin, Phyllis Haver, Charlie Murray, Bobby Vernon and Fay Tincher and Charles Ray, Charles Chaplin, Marshall Neilan, Agnes Ayres, Katherine MacDonald, Henry B. Walthall, Mildred Harris Chaplin and Mack Sennett, all of whom have wired that they will be present. Allen Holubar and Dorothy Phillips will suspend for one day preliminary work on "Man, Woman and Marriage," which production they are making for distribution by Associated First National Pictures, Inc., in order to attend the Field Day celebration.

Accompanying the delegation of Southern California exhibitors will be Sol Lesser, who with Gore Brothers holds the franchise for Associated First National Pictures for the Los Angeles territory. Mr.

Lesser wired that nearly a score of exhibitors would arrive in Oakland on the morning of the 26th, in order to personally meet the various stars.

Field Day as scheduled by Mr. Perry will mark a radical departure from the usual method of bringing motion picture stars before the general public. In this instance the various exhibitors take part with the full understanding that on this occasion they are to meet as many fans and exhibitors as possible. The event is in the interests of the public, and in the honor of the organization and the players, directors, producers, distributors and exhibitors who make up the great motion picture family.

Billboards and newspapers have for the last week been heralding the event and dozens of novelty advertising mediums are being made to flood the city on First National Field Day. More than 10,000 invitations to a selected mailing list have been sent out by Mr. Perry, who has received congratulations from all parts of the country, complimenting him on his unique and history-making feat, that will probably blaze the trail for many more events of this kind.

Given Elaborate Premier

Fine Arts Picture is Booked Indefinitely at Broadway Theatre

AN elaborate premier will be given "Up In Mary's Attic" the new comedy drama being distributed through state right exchanges by Fine Arts Pictures, Inc., when the picture opens at E. S. Moss' Broadway theatre for an indefinite run Sunday, July 25th.

The original bathing girls appearing in the picture have been brought from the coast to appear in person in connection with the initial showing of the picture. Eva Novak, who plays the leading role, has been asked to appear along with the rest of the cast, but it is impossible to state as yet whether she will be able to do this.

The innumerable exploitation angles appropriate for the picture are being used to advantage in preparation for the showing and the interest displayed by the thousands who daily pass the Broadway theatre indicates a successful run. Hundreds of people continually gather in front of the theatre to view the score of lobby display paintings which are being used to decorate the front of the theatre.

Leon D. Langsfield, manager of the Broadway theatre, speaking of "Up In Mary's Attic," said: "We selected this picture for an indefinite run at the Broadway because we believe it is the kind of a picture that will draw the crowds during the hot weather. Its unusual exploitation and presentation possibilities makes it one of the best box office attractions available at this time."

"The innumerable bathing girls appearing in the picture gives an excellent opportunity for an elaborate presentation and we are doing everything possible to play the picture in the way it should be played."

Popular English Star in "The Great Day"

Cabled announcement has come from Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, who has been in Europe for the last month, that Bertram Burleigh, the well-known British film star, has been cast to play the lead in the Paramount Picture version of "The Great Day," the Drury Lane melodrama which marks the first photoplay to be made in Europe by the Famous Players-Lasky British Producers, Ltd. picture.

Not only is Mr. Burleigh one of the most popular film players in Great Britain, but he also is well known in this country because of his work opposite the famous Russian dancer, Lydia Kyasht, in "The Black Spider," "The Dope Doctor," and many other films.

Metro to Do "Strangers, Beware"; Smythe Addison Will Be Director

ARTHUR ZELLNER of Metro's scenario staff, who is in charge of the twelve pictures Metro is to make for the Motion Picture Producers' Americanization committee, announces the first of these short subjects to go into production this week. It is "Strangers, Beware!" an original story by Mr. Zellner with continuity by Julia Burnham, of the scenario staff.

The director will be Smythe Addison.

The cast, as announced, will be headed by Mary Louise Beaton, the Philadelphia society debutante, who has risen to leading roles after a few months on the screen. Harry C. Bannister has been engaged to play the hero, a young Irishman who finds everything wrong with America until it comes to a show-down. Mr. Bannister's appearance will mark his return to the screen. He has been playing in A. H. Wood's production of "Business Before Pleasure."

Dora Lardner, who has just completed work in Metro's production of "The Marriages of Mayfair," in which she appears as Lady Fairweather, has been engaged to do Greta Larsen, the Swedish widow in "Strangers, Beware!" Miss Lardner started her career as a society entertainer. She is from Louisville, Kentucky, where she was "born stage struck," she says. But her parents didn't think the stage "respectable," so a compromise was reached, whereby, as long as she was to follow in the footsteps of Kitty Cheatham in recitals, she was given training in Nashville and in Chicago. Her success in platform work led to vaudeville engagements and vaudeville led to pictures.

The screening of "Strangers Beware!" will take place at Metro's New York studios in West Sixty-first street.

Critics Praise H. B. Warner

"One Hour Before Dawn" Receives Tribute at New York Premiere

H. B. WARNER made an auspicious debut as a star under the Pathe banner, during the week's run at the Capitol Theatre, New York, of "One Hour Before Dawn," a Jesse D. Hampton production. High praise for every feature of the stirring drama was registered by critics of the principal metropolitan newspapers. The acting of Mr. Warner and the strength of the plot were particularly pleasing to the reviewers. Almost as one, they refused to divulge the plot of the play, admitting they had no desire to rob a remarkable mystery story of its charm by revealing its absorbing secret.

The Evening Telegram was strong in its praise of the production, stating: "One of the best all around bills yet offered the Capitol clientele was shown at that popular playhouse yesterday. That sterling legitimate actor, H. B.

Warner, was the bright particular star in a tense detective drama, 'One Hour Before Dawn.' The story is a film version of Mansfield Scott's novel, 'Behind Red Curtains,' and, from the very moment the first reel starts unwinding, it grips with a grip of steel. Particular care has been given the production, especially as to direction and photography.

"Iris Inn," the Daily Illustrated News critic, was equally emphatic in judgment of the merit of "One Hour Before Dawn" and said:

"If you know, when we received notice that the Capitol Theatre had scheduled a mystery yarn for this week's entertainment we had quite made up our minds that we were going to be bored, but were pleasantly surprised as we watched the unwinding of the plot of 'One Hour Before Dawn.'"

Unusual Air Picture for Pathe Serial

One of the few motion picture cameras which have gained admittance to the Naval Air Station at San Diego was taken through the lines by Connie De Roo, head cameraman of the Ruth Roland Company filming "Ruth of the Rockies," which is to be Miss Roland's next serial for Pathe. The scenes are of a flight made by Miss Roland in the Pony Blimp D-57, which is the smallest practicable dirigible constructed to date.

As the craft can slow down to four miles an hour, it proved particularly adaptable to motion picture uses. In addition to bird's eye views, several "long shots" of action scenes were taken with results stated to be highly satisfactory by those who have seen the pictures screened. The blimp was, also, used to photograph airplanes in flight.

Goldwyn Stars Keeping Noses to Grindstone

Will Rogers, has just finished filming, under Clarence G. Badger's direction, "Honest Hutch," adapted from the story, "Old Hutch Lives Up to It," by Garret Smith.

Mabel Normand is head over heels in work acting "Head Over Heels," before the camera, a picture of the musical comedy in which Henry W. Savage starred Mitzi Hajos, Victor Schertzinger is directing it.

Jack Pickford is cutting up before the eye of the camera in George Adean antics, translating the native-to-the-soil humor of the famous Indian to the screen for the delectation of Pickford fans.

Wanda Hawley's Next Is Half Finished

Production has reached the halfway mark on "Her Beloved Villain," the working title of Wanda Hawley's third Realart production. The Realartist recently completed "Food for Scandal," her second picture, which is scheduled for release in September under the Realart Star Franchise. Director Sam Wood expects to finish "Her Beloved Villain" by the end of July.

Realart Star Begins on New Production

Mary Miles Minter had gone two hundred miles on a proposed three weeks' vacation when she was recalled by wire to begin work on a new Realart feature.

Shoving up of the production at the West Coast studios in Hollywood changed the starting date from the middle to the 5th of July. Miss Minter's long cherished trip to Yosemite Valley and Lake Tahoe with her mother and sister was postponed as a result until a future date.

The new production will be an adaptation of "Blindness" from the novel by Dana Burnet recently published in The Ladies Home Journal. Clara Genevieve Kennedy wrote the scenario while Paul Powell will direct. He recently finished "Sweet Lavender" with Miss Minter, which is to be the star's first production during the coming season.

New Jack London Film Pleases Metro Head

A screen examination by Metro officials of the C. E. Shurtleff, Inc., production of Jack London's novel, "The Mutiny of the Elsinore," with an all-star cast including Mitchell Lewis, Helen Ferguson and William V. Mong, proved this week to be decidedly satisfactory to the Metro officials.

Especially enthusiastic was the praise of the staging of the marine scenes; the struggle of John Pike, the first mate of the vessel, with the mutineers under the leadership of the wily Mellaire; and later the fight to the death between Mellaire and the man he once had tricked, "The Rat." The suddenness with which the end of this battle came—the two being swept overboard when a giant comber broke upon the slanting deck—brought a gasp from the spectators, states Metro.

"A Splendid Hazard" Is Warm Weather Hit

According to word from the Mayflower offices, "A Splendid Hazard," an Allan Dwan production is maintaining a maximum circulation despite the hot weather. As an instance of exhibitor interest in this picture, Mayflower points out four first-run theatres that signed for the production on the same day. They are the Berber, East St. Louis; the Majestic, Bloomington, Ill.; the Apollo, Peoria, Ill.; and the Gaiety theatre, Springfield, Ill.

Indiana House Opens with "River's End"

The new Lincoln theatre, Goshen, Ind., was opened this week with a dedicatory program featured by an address by Circuit Judge James S. Brake, organ numbers by Miss L. J. Mowery, a popular local musician, vocal selections by Helen Charlton-Blough and Mark Shrock and the showing of "The River's End," Marshall Neilan's initial independent attraction distributed by Associated First National Pictures, Inc.

An exterior and an interior from "Big Happiness," a Robertson-Cole super-special starring Dustin Farnum

"Big Happiness" Fall Release

ROBERTSON-COLE is now preparing an extensive advertising and exploitation campaign for "Big Happiness," starring Dustin Farnum, which it will shortly release as the first of the big super-specials named in its recent 1920-1921 fall announcement.

This production will mark the beginning of the new Robertson-Cole plan, whereby it will release not less than thirty-six pictures yearly, of such distinction as to equal if not surpass the best releases which are being placed upon the market.

"Big Happiness" is the first picture to be made by the Dustin Farnum Productions, which becomes a producing ally of Robertson-Cole through a contract entered into with this star a short time ago. It was chosen by Mr. Farnum from a great number of stories submitted as being one which will so put him on the screen in his new productions as to forcibly prove to exhibitors that Robertson-Cole with its new pictures is setting an entirely new grade of product.

The first Dustin Farnum picture is based on a novel of the same name by "Pan," famous English writer. The screen version was written by Jack Cunningham, and the picture was directed by Colin Campbell. The cast includes, besides Mr. Farnum, Fred Malatesta, Kathryn Adams, Joseph Dowling, William Brown, Aggie Herring and Violet Schramm.

Mr. Farnum in "Big Happiness" is given emotional material with which to work that enabled him to rise to heights never before achieved by him. Heretofore he has been known chiefly as a delineator of characters of the great open. But here he turns to the role of a man who inhabits the greatest centers of the world, and mingles with the most cultured and sophisticated products of present day civilization.

The picture is said to be one which will give the exhibitor new opportunity to use the starring force of Dustin Farnum to good advantage. "Big Happiness" was made under the new Robertson-Cole understanding which allows the star three months to a picture, besides an unlimited financial backing, the object being to get the best possible production and one which is not hurried or handicapped in any way whatsoever. There have been no new Farnum pictures on the market for some time, and herewith the exhibitor is given opportunity to give Mr. Farnum's following the best picture of his career.

There are a number of pretentious scenes in "Big Happiness" which measures up fully to the story. Opening in a picturesque part of the Latin Quarter of Paris, the scene shifts thence to the staid and dignified financial section of London, later to Wall Street, to the Swiss Alps and back to London. One of the big sets shows a picturesque Parisian side-walk restaurant.

Mr. Farnum, who passes on to bigger and greater things in this new Robertson-Cole release, was born in Boston, and early went on the stage, making his mark in rugged plays of the open lands, such as "The Ranger," "The Squaw Man" and "The Virginian." He went on the screen in "The Strain" and since then has been seen in many photoplays in all of which he has had the leading role.

He plays opposite Kathryn Adams in "Big Happiness." Miss Adams has recently been seen in "Uncharted Channels." She has many screen successes to her credit, such as "Raffles," "Baby Mine," "The Silver Girl" and others. Another interesting member of the cast is Joseph Dowling, who was seen in the titular role "The Miracle Man" and in many other screen productions, following a long stage career.

Included in the cast is Fred M. Malatesta, a nephew of Nitti, former premier of Italy. He came to America with Max Linder, and since then has appeared in a number of productions, playing chiefly "heavies."

One "Whom Gods Love"

So Says Metro in Describing the Career of F. Scott Fitzgerald

F. SCOTT FITZGERALD, whose short story, "Head and Shoulders," under the screen title of "The Chorus Girl's Romance," will be a forthcoming Metro production starring Viola Dana, "is a young man whom obviously, the gods love," says Metro in a statement just issued from the headquarters of that organization. The career of the young novelist is traced with considerable detail in the Metro report which is submitted in part as follows:

"Mr. Fitzgerald enjoys the unique and enviable distinction of being the youngest successful writing man in America, if not the world, with a novel and numerous short stories to his credit and more in demand.

"In addition to reaching the printed page at an age when most young men are studying geography, Mr. Fitzgerald has found his work in immediate demand for screen production, one of which, as already been mentioned, Metro is doing, while others are under consideration.

"Mr. Fitzgerald was born in St. Paul, Minnesota, September 24, 1896. He was educated at the St. Paul's Academy in St. Paul, Minn., during his early youth, after which he attended Newman School in Hackensack, N. J., and later entered Princeton University at age of 17.

"He elected literature as a profession at the age of ten, and at once started writing with the result that at twenty-three Scribners published his first novel "The Side of Paradise," and magazines constantly called on him to supply material. During the war he served as a first lieutenant in the Forty-fifth and Sixty-seventh Infantry, and as aide-de-camp to General J. A. Ryan. He is a descendant of Francis Scott Key who wrote "The Star Spangled Banner," and his whole name is Francis Scott Key Fitzgerald. Mr. Fitzgerald was married on April 3, 1920, to Miss Zelda Sayre of Montgomery, Ala.

Will Feature Thelma Percy

Metro Raises Young Actress to the Ranks of Featured Players

THELMA PERCY, sister of Eileen Percy, has been assigned by Metro to play the leading feminine role in the C. E. Shurtleff all-star production of "The Star Rover," the third Jack London story to be filmed at Metro's studios in Hollywood. By this assignment, says Metro, Miss Percy has been raised with but a few months picture experience to her credit to the ranks of featured players. The Metro statement issued in connection with Miss Percy's selection is submitted as follows:

"Her short experience in pictures does not mean that the younger Miss Percy is a stranger to the mimic world. At the age of six, she made her stage debut in New York. For two seasons she was a member of the company presenting the Maurice Materlinck play, 'The Blue Bird.' Other successes of the legitimate stage in which she appeared were 'Lady of the Slipper' with Elsie Janis; as 'Tiny Tim' in 'Pickwick Papers,' and with Alice

Brady in 'Forever After.'

"While in California for a vacation, Thelma Percy accompanied her sister to the studio where she was appearing with Sessue Hayakawa. The Japanese actor was so impressed with Thelma that he immediately cast her for an important part in 'The Beggar Prince.' This marked her initial appearance on the silver-sheet.

"Completing her work with Hayakawa, Miss Percy joined the Eddie Polo company, and for six months appeared with the intrepid serial actor. The name of this picture was 'The Vanishing Dagger.' Miss Percy also played in two comedies starring Max Linder, the famous French comedian.

"It was because of her work in these productions that Edward Solomon, director of 'The Star Rover,' chose her for one of the leading parts in the Jack London story. In this production she enacts the role of Dr. Hugh Standing's fiancée."

Reelcraft Not in Alliance

President Cropper Denies Rumors Concerning Independent Company

PRESIDENT R. C. CROPPER of the Reelcraft Pictures Corporation has issued a statement denying any and all rumors concerning the alliance of the Reelcraft Pictures Corporation with any association, federation, alliance or affiliation of either distributors, producers or exhibitors.

"The original policy of Reelcraft still stands," states Mr. Cropper. "Reelcraft Pictures Corporation is an Independent Producer and distributor of Short Subjects exclusively, dealing with Independent producers and Independent distributors, distributing the releases of such Independents that can make pictures up to the standard required for our program, and selling to the Independent buyers of state rights market such pictures as they desire to purchase, be it a single series or all of our output. There are no plans made or contemplated relative to this corporation becoming a part of any combination.

"Thus far we have given three new series to the Exhibitors, namely the Billy Francy single reel comedies, the Matty Roubert series of comedies designated as the Romances of Youth, and the Royal Comedy Series featuring such stars as Leon Errol and Billy B. Van. Other stars of equal prominence will also appear later in this series. All of the above will be on the market and releasing by September 1.

Following the above Reelcraft will offer a big surprise series, with a star of recognized box office value. Several other series are under negotiation, and will, when completed, give Reelcraft a number of Short Subject releases equal to those of any distributor in the Short Subject field."

Jimmie Adams Made Featured Player

Jimmie Adams, one of the best-known comedians in the two-reel field, becomes a featured player with the release of the third of the Mermaid Comedies through Educational Exchanges. "Nonsense" is the working title of the picture, production of which has been completed.

Adams appeared in "A Fresh Start," the initial release of the Mermaids and his work in that picture has already scored such a hit that exhibitors have made many requests that he be given greater prominence. To this Director Jack White has agreed with the result that "Nonsense" bears the comedian's name on the main title.

Seitz Increases in Favor

Advance Bookings on New Serial Show Growing Popularity of Star

THAT George B. Seitz has more than doubled his value as a box office attraction since the completion of his first starring vehicle, is said to be evidenced by the report that Pathe had more than fifty per cent increased bookings on "Pirate Gold" five weeks before the release of the picture than was recorded on "Bound and Gagged." "Pirate Gold" is to be released August 15th, the first episode being issued simultaneously with the final offering in the "Young Buffalo" series.

The picture is announced by Pathe to have been the object of more requests for bookings previous to the setting of a definite release date than any other episode offering. The announcement of its release proved the signal for the signing of many contracts at every branch office; and, in response to the demand for paper, advance trailer and other exploitation helps, Pathe rushed matters and was able to supply these necessary and highly important accessories at a much earlier date than is customary.

On information from the branches, all of which have advised the home office that exhibitors are planning extensive campaigns, Pathe expects this serial to open upon its initial showings in an especially spectacular manner, as many novel exploitation stunts are in preparation. In this regard "Pirate Gold" promises to be conspicuous among the serial productions. Its story has been pronounced unique by exhibitors and one offering fertile opportunity for exploitation.

"Wonder Man" Going Big

Carpentier Production Shown at Record Prices Throughout Country

"THE WONDER MAN", starring Georges Carpentier, is now showing in the principal cities of the country to business which exceed that accorded any similar production ever given the public. The reception which is being given "The Wonder Man" in various parts of the country proves that Robertson-Cole, which released the Carpentier production, made no mistake in pronouncing it one of broad and diverse appeal.

While it has been evident from the very first that the picture was bound to be of especial appeal to the youth of America—to the ex-soldier and his wife or sweetheart—many instances are arising to show that "The Wonder Man" goes stronger with older audiences. A leading theatre in the city of Pasadena, California, one noted for its population of elderly, very prosperous citizens, bought "The Wonder Man" at a higher price than was ever made for any similar production.

At the Florence Theatre, Pasadena, where "The Wonder Man" is scheduled it will find probably a lower percent of young patrons than in nine-tenths of the other theatres in the country. But its appeal to the manager of the house, on pre-view, was such as to immediately result in a booking. Prices paid by booking exhibitors are not the only point on which "The Wonder Man" is breaking records. In Atlanta, Ga., where it was shown at the Atlanta Theatre, it played to $200 top admittance.

Conway Tearle Signed for R. A. Walsh Cast

Following closely upon the heels of the announcement that Biriam Cooper and Anna Q. Nilsson had been engaged for R. A. Walsh's second independent production comes the statement from the Mayflower Photoplay Corporation that the all-star cast of principals has been rounded out with the acquisition of Conway Tearle. Tearle has already started work at the Biograph Studios, where the Walsh offering to be presented by Mayflower through First National, is being filmed.

Levey Will Produce "Pages From Life"

A series of twenty-six one-reel "Pages from Life" are to be a feature of the Harry Levey Service Corporation releases. They are to be a series of sketches based upon the life about us, and in which will walk and talk on the screen people whom all of us know well, says Mr. Levey.

The series is based upon "Tim Talks," to which Mr. Levey has secured exclusive film rights. They are the work of Tim Thrift, who is, incidentally, advertising manager of a manufacturing concern of national importance.

Jack O'Brien to Play in "Man of the Dawn"

When Christy Cabanne started casting for the production, as yet unnamed, that he is now making for Robertson-Cole, he was for a time non-plused as to where he could find an actor who would fulfill one of the most important roles, that of the "Man of the Dawn."

Mr. Cabanne had completed the balance of the cast and was at his wits end where to go for the needed talent when someone suggested Jack O'Brien, best known for his work with Marguerite Clark in "Bab's Diary" and Olive Tell in "Wings of Pride," and who recently concluded an engagement with Fox as the star of the new serial which that company will release early this fall. Mr. O'Brien is big, standing over six feet three, and he is also an actor of distinctive ability, having spent several years in the legitimate, before coming to pictures.

Universal's 1920 - 21 Program

ANNOUNCEMENT of a program for 1920 and 1921 is made by R. H. Cochrane, vice president of Universal.

In his statement, Mr. Berman lays emphasis on the fact that Universal will produce upwards of sixty big pictures in the next twelve months. On this program at least ten pictures will be Universal-Jewel super-productions, and fifty special attractions, starring such well-known artists as Priscilla Dean, Erich von Stroheim, Carmel Myers, Harry Carey, and others.

Priscilla Dean's production, "The Virgin of Stamboul," put her in the fore-front as a star and Universal claims that this picture was put over quicker in the big cities as well as the smaller towns than any other production which it ever made.

On the Jewel program, will be several big productions by Dean, the first of which will be "Outside the Law," Tod Browning, who directed "The Virgin of Stamboul," is now busily at work on this production. As soon as Miss Dean finishes this picture she will begin work on a play, called "The Cat That Walked Alone," an original story by John Colton. Another Jewel picture will be "Once to Every Woman," starring Dorothy Phillips and directed by Allen J. Holubar. This picture will be ready for release early in the fall, and also "The Devil's Pass Key," a seven reel production made by Erich Von Stroheim.

On the special attraction program will be forty-eight pictures, the first

A new photograph of Gladys Walton appearing with Eddie Lyons and Ler Moran in their new multiple reel farce comedy for Universal release, "La La Lucille."

thirteen of which are announced as follows: "The Red Lane," "The Girl in the Rain," "Blue Streak McCoy," "The Adorable Savage," "La La Lucille," "Hitching Post," "Under Northern Lights," "Out of a Clear Sky," "Once a Plumber" and "Kate of Crime Street." Starring in these are Frank Mayo, Edith Roberts, Anne Cornwall, Harry Carey, Carmel Myers and Lyons & Moran. Norman Dawn who directed the "Breath of the Gods" is said to have made an exquisite picture in "The Adorable Savage," a story of the South Sea Islands, starring Edith Roberts.

Harry Carey's next production, "Blue Streak McCoy," directed by Reeves Eason is said to be a Western romance with all of the characteristic human touches which Carey put in "Overland Red" and "Marked Men."

At present a half dozen companies are busily at work on the lot at Universal City. Stories now being put into moving pictures include "White Youth" by Forrest Halsey and Clara Beranger, "Out of the Sky" with Gladys Walton and Jack Ferrin, directed by Reeves Eason; "Black Friday" by John C. Brownell, starring Frank Mayo, will be directed by Fred Thomson an old Vitaphone Director. Harry Carey is now working on "West is West" which he will follow with "The Hootch Hound."

John Colton and Douglas Doncherty have written an original ingenue scenario in which it is likely Miss Gladys Walton will be featured.

In addition to these Universal is making one one-reel picture and one two-reel Western every two weeks, Elmo Lincoln the serial star of "Elmo the Fearless" and "Elmo the Mighty" is working in a new serial, and Eddie Polo following the completion of "The Vanishing Dagger" has started work on a new circus serial which will probably be called "King of the Circus."

Mr. Cochrane states that the scenario departments both in New York and at the studios are scouring the markets for suitable stories.

Hodkinson Talks on Percentage

Distributor Tells of Origin of System in 1913

LETTERS on the timely and absorbing topic of Deposits have been exchanged between John S. Evans, member of the Executive Committee of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, representing the Philadelphia shipping district and W. W. Hodkinson, president of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation.

In answer to the request of Mr. Evans, Mr. Hodkinson defines his stand on the deposit question and outlines the significant chapters in the development of the deposit system since 1913. He states the conditions under which a cash deposit was first required and the conditions under which the deposit of today is entirely reasonable.

"In my judgment," says Mr. Hodkinson, "the protest of the exhibitor is not and never has been due to any unwillingness on his part to furnish a reasonable guarantee for the execution of fair and legitimate contracts. His resentment is directed against the flagrant abuse of deposit monies entrusted to the keeping of producers and distributors." His letter, in part, to Mr. Evans follows:

"The motion picture in 1913 was enveloped in a nickelodeon atmosphere. Both manufacturers and exhibitors seemed wedded to the belief that the motion picture was destined to remain a low and cheap sort of amusement and that the nickel was the last word in admissions. I took a different view and made a determined effort to divorce the motion picture from the nickel. At once I encountered the liveliest opposition from both producers and exhibitors. I stood for better quality in pictures, better methods of presentation, up-to-date theatres, longer runs and higher prices of admission. I was considered a theorist and a dreamer. Being thoroughly confirmed in my faith in better things, I naturally used every effort to convert producers and exhibitors to my way of thinking. I felt that my ideas were entitled to a fair and thoroughly practical test. I did not want a man to take up my idea, test it out in an impatient and imperfect way and then say it was a failure. I therefore asked every exhibitor who seemed inclined to travel along with my ideas for a contract binding himself to stay with me and follow out my plans for a period of not less than four weeks. I asked a guarantee for the fulfillment of these contracts. Among my neophytes in those days were such men as Grauman and Talley of Los Angeles, Clermer of Seattle, Washington, and others equally well known and now high in the exhibiting ranks. Where the commercial rating of the exhibitor was assured, his contract was deemed sufficient without a bond. Where nothing was known of the commercial standing of an exhibitor, or where for any reason, satisfactory to us, security for the purpose of the contract was deemed necessary, I insisted on a bond or, at the option of the exhibitor a cash deposit.

"In other words, the introduction of a bond or deposit was due to an honest and necessary effort to raise the prestige of the motion picture, to widen its field of operation, to increase its prosperity and to lay solid on permanent foundations for the future. Under these conditions a cash deposit was first required and I think to-day as I thought then that the deposit was entirely within reason."

"At present I cannot consent to an arrangement which would place me at a disadvantage by giving other companies the preference over my own. In other words while the Deposit System continues to be observed generally I do not think that I ought to be a fool to discriminate against my own company."

Monte Blue to Play in "Kentuckians" in East

Monte Blue, the young Paramount leading man, on completing his part in George Melford's production, "The Jackkins," will leave immediately for New York to play in "The Kentuckians."

Hodkinson Makes Changes

George Ingersoll is Appointed Advertising Director of Company

PRESIDENT W. W. Hodkinson has appointed George Ingersoll as Director of Advertising and Publicity for the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation and Mr. Ingersoll is now building up the plan and the promotion division of the Hodkinson distribution system. Mr. Hodkinson is constantly in search of men with ideas and does not hesitate to invade the merchandising field rather than cling to methods of bartering that have become shopworn.

Mr. Ingersoll's work is evident in the campaign on "The Green Flame" and "The Silent Barrier." Assisting him in this work are George B. Gallup, Jr., Richard Weil and William Dowling.

Events at the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation are watched with considerable interest since George Ingersoll joined the organization just in time for the fall campaign. His experience in advertising and merchandising covers fourteen years and includes seven years of newspaper and magazine work. He won his spurs as a copy-writer for the Crowell Publishing Company in 1911, and was engaged in the national newspaper and magazine campaign conducted by that company for its three publications, American Magazine, Woman's Home Companion and Farm and Fireside. Mr. Ingersoll served three years with the Charles Frohman Company as play-reader and press agent. The past year he handled the Goldwyn-Eminent Authors and the Rex Beach pictures, beginning with "The Girl from Outside."

Cosmopolitan Sets Record

"World and His Wife" is Seen by 7,000 in One Day at Rivoli

A REMARKABLE tribute was paid on Sunday, July 18, to Cosmopolitan Productions, when two theatres on Broadway did heavy business with two Cosmopolitan pictures as the feature attractions.

"The World and His Wife," the latest Cosmopolitan special, began on Sunday a pre-release engagement at the Rivoli theatre, Broadway at Forty-ninth street. The crowds began to come to the Rivoli in a steady stream, almost immediately after the house was opened at noon. By four o'clock practically every seat in the immense theatre was filled. All of this crowd was out by 6.30, and then the rush for the evening performances began. By 8.15 o'clock the theatre was again filled, and the sale of tickets was stopped. Then, for two hours, as rapidly as a few patrons would have seen the picture and left the theatre, others would be admitted.

Six times during the evening the sale of tickets was stopped, while great throngs remained patiently for it to be resumed. Thousands were turned away, but when the day was done and the third ticket-sellers and door-keepers were relieved, Manager M. M. Hansford discovered that 7,000 persons had paid to see the picture during the day. Mr. Hansford searched the records and found it to be the greatest business ever done by the Rivoli during the summer, and only equalled once, when, in cool weather, John Barrymore played to a similar number of persons in one day, in "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde."

At the Criterion theatre, "Humoresque," Cosmopolitan Productions' other wonderful picture, entered the eighth week of its record breaking pre-release engagement.

Buffalo Corp. Has Picture

"Daughter of Devil Dan" Features Irma Harrison and Kempton Greene

THE exhibitors who have successfully run the two previous Buffalo Motion Picture Corporation productions, "The Price of Innocence" and "The Sport of Kings," distributed by the First National will be pleased to hear that this company's third production, "The Daughter of Devil Dan," featuring Irma Harrison and Kempton Greene, has been completed and will soon be ready for release.

"The Daughter of Devil Dan" is claimed to have a wide appeal. It is a story that turns from the wild and open country to the civilized districts of the South with a twist in the story that is said to be unusually pleasing. Miss Harrison, star of the picture, is an added asset to the strong story and powerful cast which appears in the picture. She is acknowledged by many to be one of the coming stars in filmdom although only a girl in her teens. She plays the part assigned to her in this production like a seasoned trooper. Her experience dates back through many pictures where her personality was always evident for its sweetness and sincerity.

"The Daughter of Devil Dan" is one of those strongly built stories that deals with the life of a girl who has been thrust upon the world by the early death of her parents and who is not aware of the fact that in a city not far distant lives a rich grandfather who is attempting to locate her.

Neilan's Latest Knock-Out

Producer's "Go and Get It" Said to be His Greatest Achievement

THAT Marshall Neilan has scored the knock-out achievement of his career in the production of his latest First National release, "Go and Get It," his latest independent special feature production to be distributed by Associated First National Pictures, is the verdict of those who have seen it and described it as "the picture of a million exploitation angles."

The New York Strand, where the picture will be given its premiere public presentation is heralding it as "the season's sensation." This further backs up the opinion handed down at a private showing for the prominent newspapermen covering the Democratic national convention in San Francisco who pronounced it to be the most faithful portrayal of newspaper life yet screened and one of the most intensely interesting pictures ever made.

The screen in fact has been given an entirely new idea, in the production of "Go and Get It." It is possessed of all the elements that make for the success of a picture—sensational stunts, humor, wit, daring, and in addition the dramatic quality and love interest have all been skillfully interwoven into the whole.

It is a big production in every sense of the word and eclipses all of Marshall Neilan's previous achievements, including "Daddy Long Legs," "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm," "In Old Kentucky," "The River's End," and "Don't Ever Marry."

Wesley Barry, for the first time since "Daddy Long Legs," in which he endeared himself to the picture loving public, has in "Go and Get It" a part that is really vital to the production. In recent pictures Barry has been more or less of a comedy device but in this film he has a real part as copy-boy in a newspaper office, a role that gives him an opportunity to register strongly in the big dramatic moments, as well as to coax out the laughs.

Violet Mersereau Is Signed

Artograf to Produce Six Pictures with Star for Pioneer Film Corp.

CONTRACTS were signed last week by Violet Mersereau, M. H. Hoffman in behalf of the Pioneer and D. W. Townsend of the Artograf Film Company of Denver, covering all the details of the production and releasing plans for six super big productions.

Miss Mersereau is now on her way to the Artograf Studios in Denver, Col., where work upon the first of this series will begin upon her arrival.

After a conference at the Pioneer New York Office, it was decided that the first of the pictures to be made by the Artograf for the Pioneer, would be the adaptation of Robert Ames Bennet's novel "Finders, Keepers." It is expected that this production will be finished within two months, at which time work on the production of the second picture will begin without delay.

Edmund Cobb who has appeared in several pictures during the past year for the Artograf will share the stellar honors with Miss Mersereau in these productions.

Pioneer is now busily engaged in the selection of suitable material for Miss Mersereau and Mr. Cobb. They have options upon several novels and famous plays, upon which an early decision is expected.

Montagu Love and Alma Rubens, featured players in Cosmopolitan's production, "The World and His Wife," released as a Paramount special.

Preparing Continuities for Read's Stars

J. Parker Read, Jr., reports unabated activities at the Ince studios in Culver City. Louise Glaum, following the completion of "Love Madness," has begun preliminary work on "The Leopard Woman," which is an adaptation of Stewart Edward White's novel of the same title. Wesley Ruggles is directing. Hobart Bosworth's starring vehicle, "His Own Law," will soon be ready for public presentation. Meanwhile, the Read scenario staff is busy preparing the continuity of Bosworth's new picture, which, according to the statement from the Read offices at Culver City, is to present a story of the North Woods.

Ballin Busy Finishing Abdullah's Story

With the production of Achmed Abdullah's "The Honorable Gentleman" two-thirds finished, Hugo Ballin is preparing to direct the more poetic and pictorial episodes of the story next week.

While "The Honorable Gentleman" is a modern drama in every sense, scenes in the tenement district of New York, certain scenes are laid in China of today. Together with these characteristic glimpses of Oriental life, Hugo Ballin plans to visualize one of the many lovely legends familiar to students of Chinese myths, "The Story of the Bell."

In cutting and titling "The Honorable Gentleman," sympathy and intelligence are promised and, moreover, the spirit of the original will not be altered.

Hank Mann Reported to Have Been Injured

Arrow reports that Hank Mann, the screen comedian, was severely hurt recently when a heavy cake of ice fell on the actor, breaking three of his ribs. According to Arrow, the attending physician has ordered Mann's confinement to bed for at least two weeks.

Seven on Paramount Schedule

SEVEN productions, the high lights of which are the special, "The Fighting Chance," William DeMille's "The Prince Chap" and the Maurice Tourneur production, "The White Circle," are on the August Paramount release schedule as announced by Al Lichtman, general manager of distribution, Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

On the first day of the month comes "The Fighting Chance," which was directed by Charles Maigane. The story is probably the best known of Robert W. Chambers' works and was produced with an all-star cast. Will M. Ritchey wrote the scenario. The cast is headed by Anna Q. Nilsson and Conrad Nagle, and among those who support the principals are Dorothy Davenport, Clarence Burton, Herbert Pryor, Ruth Helms, Bertram Grassby, Maude Wayne, Frederick Stanton and William H. Brown.

Thomas Meighan is featured in William DeMille's production of "The Prince Chap," which is scheduled for August 8 and which is a picturization of Edward Peple's play in which Cyril Scott starred successfully a number of years ago. Olga Printzlau, who collaborated with Sada Cowan on the scenario of Cecil B. DeMille's "Why Change Your Wife?," wrote the continuity. The cast which Mr.

Famous Players Has a Notable Array Ready for August

Meighan heads is of all-star calibre, for it includes among others Kathryn Williams, Lila Lee, Charles Ogle, Ann Forrest, Casson Ferguson, Lillian Leighton, Florence Hart, Theodore Kosloff and Clarence Geldart.

Released on the same date is "Crooked Streets," starring Ethel Clayton. This is from the original story, "Dinner at Eight," one of Samuel Mervin's series, "The Charmed Life of Miss Austin." Edith Kennedy wrote the scenario and Paul Powell directed. The story is one of adventure, with Shanghai furnishing a background of Oriental mystery. Jack Holt is Miss Clayton's leading man and Clyde Fillmore, Clarence Geldart, Josephine Crowell and Frederick Starr are in the supporting cast.

Maurice Tourneur's special production, "The White Circle," which is released the 15th, is taken from the Robert Louis Stevenson story, "The Pavilion on the Links." In the cast are Janice Wilson, Jack Gilbert, Spottiswoode Aitken, Harry S. Northrop, Jack McDonald and Wesley Barry.

Bryant Washburn in "What Happened to Jones," a picturization of the famous George Broadhurst stage farce, is also released the 15th. James Cruze directed this comedy from a scenario by Elmer Harris. Its theme is the timely one of "bootlegging" and it was therefore not hard to modernize this extremely funny story with its local option background. Margaret Loomis is Mr. Washburn's leading woman and the cast includes Richard Cummings, J. Maurice Foster, Lillian Leighton and Caroline Rankin.

The release for August 22 is "Guilty of Love," with Dorothy Dalton as the star. This is a screen version of Avery Hopwood's stage play, "This Woman, This Man." The scenario is by Rosina Henley and Harley Knoles directed. Edward Langford is Miss Dalton's leading man and Charles Lane, Augusta Anderson, Julia R. Hurley, Henry J. Carville, Douglas Redmond, Ivy Ward and Lawrence Johnson are included in the support.

The final release for the month is the Thomas H. Ince production, "Hairpin," starring Edith Bennett, which is scheduled for the 29th. The story and scenario were written by C. Gardner Sullivan and the picture was directed by Fred Niblo. Matt Moore appears opposite the star and the support includes William Conklin, Margaret Livingston, Grace Morse, Al Filson and Aggie Herring.

Newlyweds Homeward Bound

Mr. and Mrs. Fairbanks to Arrive on July 28

Probably one of the greatest compliments paid Mr. and Mrs. Fairbanks while they were abroad was the offer of some British capitalists who endeavored to secure the signatures of the celebrated screen stars to a contract for a co-starring production, the overtures being accompanied by the gigantic sum of one million dollars for the single production. However, being happily engaged both actively and financially in the United Artists corporation along with D. W. Griffith and Charlie Chaplin, Mary and Doug smilingly refused the proposition.

After arriving in New York the couple will stop probably three or four days before starting across the country for Los Angeles. Several receptions have already been arranged here for them but dozens of others have been set aside until some future visit of the popular couple to this city.

In returning to California there is a possibility of making the trip up through the northwest despite the fact that it will require several days longer, but this is thought of so as to allow Miss Pickford an opportunity of again visiting the city of her birth, Toronto.

No definite decision has been made regarding a visit to the Canadian metropolis, although Mrs. Fairbanks has several times made it known that she would grasp the first opportunity to visit Toronto. This seems to be about the best opportunity to fulfill the desire.

MARY PICKFORD and Douglas Fairbanks are aboard the Olympic of the White Star line, having sailed from England Wednesday, July 21st, and they will arrive in New York on the 28th of the month, according to word received this week by Hiram Abrams, president of the United Artists corporation.

The present plans of the two "Big Four" stars will not permit a very lengthy sojourn in New York as everything is in readiness at their respective studios in Los Angeles for the resumption of their activities before the camera and both Mr. and Mrs. Fairbanks are over anxious to get going on their next production.

Each star has two stories in preparation but it has not been decided which will be the vehicle for their next United Artists release. Miss Pickford has a popular novel and a well-known stage play at her disposal and Mr. Fairbanks has an original story of the western type and also a widely read novel in preparation. Because no decision has been made by either as to which will be produced the titles are withheld.

Immediately upon their arrival here next Wednesday a definite decision will be made and then telegraphic advice to John Fairbanks and Mrs. Charlotte Pickford, general managers of the two studios, will permit plenty of time in which to get ready the required "sets" for the starting of the production a day or two after the couple arrive on the Pacific coast.

Stamford Citizens See Metro Scenes Taken

The people of Stamford, Conn., flocked to the waterfront in such great numbers to watch the filming of the Tower of London scenes for Metro's production of "The Marriages of Mayfair," that it was necessary to call on extra police forces to handle the crowds, says a report from the offices of the Metro Pictures Corporation.

A replica of the Tower fronting on the Thames was built by M. P. Stanleup, Metro's art director. About this setting centers the action of the theft of the crown jewels. The filming lasted three nights. Fighting on the parapet, the falling of the contestants into the river below, the rescues, shooting scenes, etc., with huge searchlights illuminating all phases of the action at night, proved a strong magnet for the Stamford citizens, it is stated. Director George W. Terwilliger was in charge of the filming.

Kathlyn Williams in DeMille Line-Up

Kathlyn Williams will have an important role in Cecil B. DeMille's next special for Paramount, following "Something to Think About." Production work on the Cecil B. DeMille special has already begun. Included in the cast are Ann Forrest and Forrest Stanley in the leading roles. Shannon Day, former beauty of the Ziegfeld Midnight Frolics, will also make her debut under the Paramount banner in this production.

New York Night Scenes in Screen Magazine

Under the title of "The Kingdom of Night," the Paramount Magazine of July 18 shows unique pictures of daylight's sunlit paths at the moment when sunset and night shades held sway. The scenes have been taken around New York, and include well-known landmarks of the city, presenting a study in camera art with the contrasting shades of falling night.

In the same issue of the magazine appears "Double Crossing Your Eyes," a revelation of trick photography and camera effects used to shoot unusual scenes.

Forrest Stanley, Cecil B. DeMille's new leading man, who will appear in forthcoming Paramount Specials Action and romance characterize the Metro-Screen Classics production, "The Misfit Wife," in which Alice Lake is starred.

Lytell Starts New Picture "The Misleading Lady," Directed by Terwilliger; Shifting Locales

GEORGE W. TERWILLIGER, the Metro director who is concluding camera work on the forthcoming production of Cecil Ral-eigh's melodrama, "The Marriages of Mayfair," has been selected to direct the screen version of "The Misleading Lady," by Charles Goddard and Paul Diekey, which will go into production within the next two weeks.

"The Misleading Lady," adapted by Lois Zellner, will be Bert Lytell's next starring vehicle, the first picture in which he has appeared since he came East after two years at Metro's Pacific Coast studios, where he recently completed the Anglo-Indian spectacle, "The Price of Redemption," adapted by June Mathis from the popular novel by L. A. R. Wyile.

"The Misleading Lady," with scenes shifting from Africa to York's fashionable suburbs and the Adirondacks, affords Mr. Terwilliger opportunity for much imaginative direction, it is stated. One of the first scenes will be shot at a lake on Long Island. For this an African village will be constructed by Lester Vermilyea, who is taking charge of the art direction in the absence on a vacation of M. P. Stanleup. Hundreds of natives will be shown in the scene, says the Metro statement.

Work has already been started on this production with the Morosco theatre as a background. One of the sequences of the story is a theatrical rehearsal, which was staged in the Morosco. As Mr. Lytell does not appear in these scenes, he undertook the direction in the absence of George W. Terwilliger, who was finishing the final episodes of "The Marriages of Mayfair" at Stamford, Conn.

DeHaven Cast Announced Array of Talent Augurs Well for Comedians' Forthcoming Picture

A STATEMENT from the offices of the Arthur S. Kane Pictures Corporation announces the all-star cast elected by the Carter De Havens for their first production under the auspices of Arthur S. Kane. This forthcoming production is slated for release through First National. Work on the picture is reported to be progressing satisfactorily at Hollywood. The statement from the Kane headquarters follows:

"Every name in the list of players is favorably known to supporters of either the silent or the spoken drama, and most of them, indeed, to devotees of both. Mr. Carter De Haven himself has the role of Signor Monti, the tenor who rises from a humble place in a Brooklyn cabaret to a lucrative engagement at the Metropolitan Opera House, and whose subsequent popularity with other attractive women is a source of much anxiety to his better half. Helen Raymond is again playing Signora Monti, the part she took with marked success in the stage presentation for more than five years, appearing in every part of the United States and in Europe and Australia.

"William Desmond and Mrs. Carter De Haven are well fitted for the roles of Mr. and Mrs. Harry Hawkins, characters that, as 'Twin Beds' enthusiasts will remember, furnish one pair's full share of fun in the always rollicking comedy. Hawkins is a sober-minded businessman, pining for a quiet home life, whereas Mrs. Hawkins, loving company, is continually inviting the neighbors in for a social evening. For this production Mr. Desmond, who has played leading roles in a long series of successes, is lent to the De Havens by J. D. Hampton.

"William J. Irving, who played one of the leads in Mme. Nazimova's recent picture, 'The Heart of a Child,' is cast for Andrew Larkin, and Katherine Lewis, a pretty and talented ingenue, for Amada Tate. Andrew and Amanda marry before the close of the first act, and the former proves a model husband—'too good to be true,' indeed, in the opinion of his bride, whose nature is inclined to be suspicious. Lottie Williams is a capital Nora, the always eminently truthful but sometimes tactless maid."

Vignola's Defense of Director Commended

THE defense of the motion picture director made by Robert G. Vignola in the last issue of this paper wherein he took occasion to say that the exhibitors are not giving the director sufficient credit in their lobby displays and publicity announcements, has brought a flood of commendatory replies from directors, producers, stars, and exhibitors throughout the country. Strange as it may seem not one reply has been received taking issue with Vignola, but all express their approval of his vigorous stand in favor of "the man behind the picture." "It was very gratifying," said Mr. Vignola, albeit surprising to receive so many letters from exhibitors some of whom said they had always made it a rule to credit the director in their lobbies and in their publicity, while others said I was right and that hereafter they would see to it that so far as they were concerned the director would receive fair and due recognition."

Developments Affect Goldwyn Release

Several important developments in the production of "The Highest Bidder," the new eastern Goldwyn vehicle for Madge Kennedy, have taken place during the past week. Lionel Atwill, who is playing opposite Miss Kennedy, mysteriously developed blood-poisoning in his right arm, necessitating the postponement of much work planned. Gilbert White, one of the art directors at the Culver City Studios, arrived in New York to take charge of the art element of the picture. Still another development was the hiring of the Spitz Studios, on east 124th Street, to be used in addition to the regular studios situated at 308 East 48th Street.

Mary Miles Minter will also appear in a dual role in the forthcoming production of "Sweet Lavender," an adaptation of Pinero's famous play which Reolart is producing

PRODUCTION HIS WOMAN

When the characters in a motion picture reach out from the screen and grip your heart; when the tears come, not from tragedy, but because something good within you has been hit hard; then you know you are looking at a great picture—

That is the kind of a picture this is. It will get you, and it will make you glad and happy to know there is still enough real good in you to bring the tears when a tense human note is struck—

This is a big chance to shake the hearts of your patrons and make them stop on the way out and tell you that you have just shown a wonderful picture, one that hit them in the solar plexus of the soul.

Serial Must Be Bigger than Feature Picture

"The serial photoplay must be greater than a feature," says Capt. Harry M. Ruby, president of National Films, "just as a serial story holds the reader because it is more interesting and has more angles of plot than a short story can possibly have. Neither can it be padded. No producer should ever manufacture a padded photoplay."

"The Son of Tarzan," which the National firm is producing for David P. Howells distribution, is said to have all the elements necessary for an interest-holding serial photoplay, as the story was first published as a serial in a widely-read magazine, later as a book and now adapted for the screen. Roy Somerville, the adapter, has followed the fiction version by Edgar Rice Burroughs closely, and every link in the closely welded chain of circumstances of the story itself has been preserved for screen presentation in an artistically finished and logical manner.

Mary Savage Heads Her Own Company

Mary Savage, stage and motion picture actress, who has been acclaimed "the best boy character actress in pictures," has formed her own company, and will be starred in pictures which will have an essential "boy role" for her.

The Mary Savage Pictures Corporation was incorporated in Albany, N. Y., with a capitalization of $100,000. Miss Savage has been elected president of the company. The incorporators are Arthur J. Levy, Joseph C. and Grover Roth. Mr. Levy is the sponsor for Miss Savage in pictures, and will direct her activities for a period of at least three years. Production work will be begun very shortly, on a feature picture based on a standard novel.

Cutting Beban Production

Sol Lesser Arranging Plans for Distribution of Screen Romance

WORD has been received from Sol Lesser's Western office that George Beban has finished the cutting of his latest production, "One Man In A Million," and that distribution plans are now being arranged by Sol Lesser, who will soon come East with Mr. Beban for the purpose of marketing the picture.

The picture was nine months in the making under the personal supervision of George Beban, who wrote the story, directed the picture, played the leading role and personally supervised the cutting.

Sol Lesser, after seeing the picture in its completed stages, said:

"In all my years of experience in motion pictures I never read a story more suitable as a dramatic narrative for the screen than the scenario of One Man In A Million. It is an exquisite love story with a beautiful theme that at times seems to be really inspiring.

"In all confidence I can say that the women and children are going to love One Man In A Million. George Beban, Junior (Bob White) and his great St. Bernard dog, 'Snookums,' will score heavily with the children. The double romance with Mr. Beban, Helen Jerome Eddy, Lloyd Whitlock and Irene Rich will strike a new note in screen romance. There is not a suggestive note struck during the entire play.

"Perhaps no screen-drama ever filmed contains more beautiful women attired in beautiful gowns. Professional department store models, wearing gowns value at thousands of dollars appear in a number of scenes. Contrasted with this is the beautiful love of a boy for a dog and a dog for a boy. One Man In A Million is primarily a drama of love and laughter."

George Beban is featured. Helen Jerome Eddy, who has been recently signed to star in her own productions, plays the leading feminine role. Irene Rich, Lloyd Whitlock, George Beban Junior (Bob White), George Williams and Jennie Lee also play important parts.

George Beban, noted actor and portrayer of Italian roles, with his son, George, Jr., as they appear in "One Man in A Million," Beban's latest picture to be distributed by Sol Lesser.

"Comiclassic" Release Is Announced

The Special Pictures Corporation is to give another comedy release to the film world, according to announcement made this week by officers of that Los Angeles organization which specializes in the production and distribution of short subjects exclusively.

"Comiclassic" is the name given to this newest release of Special Pictures, according to President Louis W. Thompson. It will be made up of a 1500 foot comedy and a 300 foot scenic, made by the recently perfected Handschiegl process.

"Only the bigger stars and directors of the comedy world will be used in the Comiclassic release says the Special Pictures Corporation. "Contracts are being sent now with well known makers of the local producing colony, while H. J. Roberts, general sales manager of Special Pictures is on his way to New York to line up ninth stars of the Gotham studios."

Urban Busy Developing His "Movie Chats"

Charles Urban in his work of editing his collection of negatives that includes upwards of 2,000,000 feet of film; pictures that were taken in every county of the world and that touch on practically every subject of human interest, both to the laymen and to the expert in the particular field; is working far ahead of the schedule he originally set for himself. When he started this work some time ago he intended to develop his series of releases at the rate of one a week. But he has been doing two a week and sometimes even more.

Most of his editing is towards the development of the single reel classic known as Charles Urban's "Movie Chats," a reel that exhibitors are growing more and more enthusiastic about.

Joe Brandt Will Leave for Coast July 23

Wires from Joe Brandt to the offices of Marion H. Joan to Sell "The Invisible Ray"

THE Joan Film Sales Co. announces the second release of its program of big feature productions for the States-rights market in the form of a gripping, breath-taking serial called "The Invisible Ray." This is the second states rights production of this company, the first being "She Played and Paid," a Romy Ward five-reel picture now being sold for territorial rights.

The "Invisible Ray" comes at the peak of the demand for serials that is now confronting the States-rights market. The Joan Film Sales Co. was quick to grasp this opportunity of acquiring the rights to this serial and meeting the demand.

"The Invisible Ray" deals with the discovery of an unknown force, the use of which is powerful enough to wreck the mightiest structure in existence. It comes in the possession of a band of criminals who seek to utilize the energy of the "Invisible Ray" for their own base desires. Through fifteen episodes of surprises and sensations the band of plotters is foiled.

It took thirty-four weeks to film "The Invisible Ray." The locations covered the continent, from Los Angeles to New York, and from Miami, Fla., to Sault Ste. Marie, Mich., and 124,180 feet of negative were used, 24 hazardous feats were staged and performed. Railroads, drawbridges, tunnels, yachts, schooners, light-houses, landslides, cliffs, armories, a prison, skyscrapers, oil-tanks and a host of similar properties were used in the filming of this thrilling serial. Three structures were built and blown up, while considerable damage was done by explosions in forests that figure in the story. Three-quarters of a mile of underground passages and tunnels were built, a subterranean canal was built and equipped, while fifty-one interior sets were constructed, each one of which was completely furnished and decorated.

Messrs. Reinhart, Earle and Peacock, the camera experts employed in making the serial, devised no less than thirty-two original photographic effects, some of them challenging belief. One of these is a skeleton scene and another is a crystal-gazing scene in which six persons are distinctly shown moving around the surface of a globe one foot in diameter.

As for action, the "Invisible Ray" fairly bristles with battles and perilous feats. Aeroplane and automobile leaps, fist-fights, light-rope walking, collisions, underground struggles, all the wizardry of daring and dare-devilry sweep past in swift succession.

The popular fascination of science has been exploited to the limit. The "Invisible Rays" are manipulated with weird effect, casting blinding flashes and causing terrific explosions in their perilous career. Palmistry, hypnotism, magic, and the mystery of spiritualism has been played up effectively, leaving no element of appeal untouched to make this serial an assured box-office winner.

The "Invisible Ray" unlike those serials that have a strong beginning but a weak finish, maintains the excitement and intensity of interest to the very end. One of the most phenomenal feats in fact occurs in the very last episode, when Jack Sherill swings from a flying aeroplane down to the roof of a passing train, in a haze of smoke, and engages in a hand-to-hand encounter against the six criminals. The identity of the five main characters of the serial is held a secret to the very last reel.

The press-book on "The Invisible Ray" which is now nearing completion, covers every angle of exploitation, and the nature and proportions of the posters and other paper prepared for it is as sensational as the serial itself.

Greater Stars Exchange Bought by Pioneer

Aywon Discovers Another Star

NATHAN HIRSH, president of the Aywon Film Corporation, announces what he believes to be a real "find" among motion picture actresses. She is Florence Chase, a former English actress, who is starred in the Aywon feature, "The Woman Above Reproach."

Miss Chase is of the statuesque blond type that screens so well and who has had dramatic training on the speaking stage that has given her a charm in portraying her lighter scenes and a keen understanding of the requirements necessary to properly enact scenes of a highly emotional character.

On the London stage Florence Chase has appeared as leading lady in many of England's latest and greatest successes. European critics have declared her to be one of the most finished actresses of the present generation, and an artist who has already made a name for herself and who should win still greater triumphs on stage and screen.

Florence Chase, after an appearance in a Broadway success the past season, decided that she would take up motion picture work. Never having appeared before on the screen, she wanted to learn the rudiments of the work before the camera thoroughly before assuming stellar roles, and for that reason played a few minor parts, one of them in a picture recently released by Mr. Hirsh. It was because of her acting in this feature that the president of the Aywon Film Corporation decided that she was capable of being starred successfully.

At the time Mr. Hirsh did not know that Miss Chase was one of the leading actresses of the English stage. He was simply struck by her ability to enact dramatic roles and her unusual beauty on the screen. A contract was entered into between star and producer, and arrangements immediately made to film several features with Florence Chase in the stellar roles.

The first of this series of features has already been completed, and is now being titled, cut, assembled, and made ready for public presentation. Pre-release showings have been given of this feature, and all those who have seen it declare that Mr. Hirsh has discovered a real star and one that seems bound to meet with the instant favor of the film fans of the country.

The first big feature in which Florence Chase is starred by Mr. Hirsh is "The Woman Above Reproach," a story that is said to be of great dramatic interest. In an interview, Mr. Hirsh said: "I will stake my reputation as a producer and distributor of motion pictures and as a man who knows a real box office winner when he sees one, that 'The Woman Above Reproach' is not only the biggest and greatest picture I have ever handled, but that it is one of the most remarkable box office attractions any company has ever released."

Producers and exhibitors are awaiting with a great deal of interest the release of "The Woman Above Reproach," and the debut of Florence Chase as a star. Announcements concerning the release of this picture will be made by Mr. Hirsh within a few weeks.

Arrow States Its Fall Program

ARROW'S fall program contains a variety of subjects both in the short-length and feature departments. With the addition of several new departments in its home-offices and an elaborate schedule arranged for the coming autumn season, Arrow anticipates a period of unusual activities during the fall months. The following statement has just been issued in connection with its fall releases.

"Seven feature subjects, three series of comedies averaging two reels each, and at least one serial are listed for Fall distribution by Arrow. The most prominent feature production on the fall program is known as 'The Golden Trail,' and Arrow announces for the first time that Jane Novak, well-known star, is to be seen in the leading role of this production. The story itself was written by Lewis H. Moomaw, adapted by Elizabeth Mahoney, and directed for the screen by the author and Jean Hersholt. It is nearing completion at the American Lifeograph Studios.

"Little mention has been made of 'The Black Lagoon,' one of the feature-attractions Arrow will release this fall. This picture is perhaps the most novel artistic production ever offered to picture showmen. It has an all star cast and was produced by Photodramas, Inc., in the Everglades of Florida. It was directed by Will Bradley. 'The Black Lagoon' is the story of two American girls caught in the netting of a Spanish nobleman and the subsequent rescue by a devoted admirer. Featured in the cast are Jane Gail, John Charles, Ruth Pecheur, and Charles Goltzold.

"Another one of the Arrow releases for fall is the all-Indian production 'Before the White Man Came.' Here also is a decidedly novel picture in that no white man is seen during the entire running of the story. The Northwestern Film Corporation obtained the services of the Crow Indians on the Crow reservation in Montana for the making of the production.

"Bachelor Apartments," a feature comedy release, was produced by the Georgia Hopkins Picture Company, and Miss Hopkins is featured as the star in the comedy. It was directed by Johnny Walker and is five reels in length. 'Woman's Man,' produced by Screenart, and starring Romaine Fielding is one of the principal features of Arrow. Romaine Fielding is one of the best known players of the stage and screen. Arrow has already sold practically all of the territory in the United States on this production.

"Love's Protege," starring Ora Carew, is another feature release for Arrow. This is a mountain love story in which Miss Carew does some of the best work of her career. It was produced by the Premier Pictures Corporation, and a large amount of territory has already been sold on this picture.

"The William Steiner series of detective stories known as the 'Tex' productions are included in the Fall program of Arrow. Four of the series have been completed, and in practically every case where the pictures have been released they have met with remarkable success.

A scene from "The House of Mystery" (seventh release), one of the "Tex" series distributed by Arrow Film Corporation.

"Arrow will release a serial now in the course of production which stars Jack Hoxie, well-known serial star. The tentative title of this serial, which was written by Joe Brandt, is "Thunderbolt Jack." It is being produced by the Berwilla Film Corporation and is being directed by Ben Wilson, himself a well-known serial star and director.

"The short subjects which Arrow will distribute during the year are the Muriel Ostriche two-reel high class comedies, the Ardath comedies, and the Hank Mann series. Garnette Sabin is in charge of the production of the Ostriche comedies and was fortunate to obtain the services of the well-known director, Arvid Gillsstrom.

"Morris R. Schlank, producer of the Hank Mann series of comedies, plans to add two producing units to his organization on the West Coast and will make fewer Hank Mann comedies during the coming year. The Hank Mann series is one of the best-known and most popular series of comedies on the market today.

"W. E. Shallenberger, president of Arrow, in making the announcement of the fall policy of the organization said he expected to add other productions to the present list. He also stated that the exhibitor and exchange men would receive the entire cooperation of the Arrow organization and that the advertising and publicity department would be prepared to handle every request."

Jans Is Proud of Its Record

Productions Doing Big Business; Plan Third Olive Tell Picture

A FEW months ago when Jans Pictures, Inc., announced that they had organized and were about to begin the production of motion pictures the officials of the company pledged themselves to make only the best in the way of photodramas. How well this pledge has been lived up to is said to be apparent when the list of attractions already produced by Jans Pictures, Inc., is given consideration. The first feature produced, in which Olive Tell starred, supported by a well selected cast, was "Love Without Question." This picture is reported to have made box office record and is still "going strong."

The next feature to be released was "A Woman's Business" in which Miss Tell also was starred. The picture proved to be a most unusual story, and production, well directed by B. A. Rolfe of the Jans organization, and a feature that has "gone over big" wherever shown. Both of the features mentioned were adaptations of well known and widely read novels.

Jans Pictures, Inc., then startled the motion picture industry with their remarkable production of "Madonnas and Men." This massive and elaborate super-feature was enthusiastically received at its premier showing a few weeks ago and pronounced the big picture of the year. It was directed by Mr. Rolfe from a story by Carey Wilson and Edmond Goulding with an all-star cast. The picture registered an instant hit.

Now Jans Pictures, Inc., are about to release the third of the Olive Tell features. It is "Wings of Pride," from the novel by Louise Kennedy Mable, directed by B. A. Rolfe.

The Day of the Independent

By VICTOR KREMER

SHORTLY before the now historical Cleveland convention, I made the following statement, "The ambition and competition among independent producers will be sharpened to the utmost. I myself am calling on, and in some cases disposing of interests I hold in various enterprises so I can concentrate practically all my efforts as an independent producer and distributor."

"I continued in another statement, 'The independent desires to remain his own master. He must have more product, better product, best product. The summer season gives us all a breathing spell. Those now big among independent producers will grow bigger, those smaller will become big. As far as I am personally concerned, I have set a mark for my high calling in this industry and am straining all efforts to reach said mark. I have no fear that I will accomplish all that I have set out for.'"

I have directed my Publicity Department to always bear in mind that "Truth in Advertising" is the motto, slogan and code of Victor Kremer, Inc. I fully bear in mind that no matter how good advertising may be, it can only be as good as the product it advertises. I can only succeed with the right product, it is of paramount importance that entering into the era of independent the sacredness of the slogan "Truth in Advertising" shall always be borne in mind.

In connection with the above permit me to state that I have succeeded beyond expectation in my efforts to represent the trade independent product of the highest order. I have concluded several large deals and with those pending over half a million dollars worth of product will be offered to the market in time for the season opening and by the first of January I should be able to double the output.

Right here I desire to make it plain that it is not merely the amount of product but pre-eminently the quality thereof, which is necessary to supply the demand. For instance, in presenting "Voices," the big six-reel production with which Victor Kremer, Inc. is opening its campaign, I am sanguine that my claim of it being offered to state right buyers as the foremost production on the market, I am not shooting wild always bearing in mind that the instructions given to the Publicity Department should comply with any statements that I personally might make.

In a previous statement I have also held that it would be of utmost difficulty for exhibitors to cancel contracts with producer-exhibitors, against whom all independents are warring, until such time as the independent producer and distributor be in a position to supply material of the highest order. In connection therewith I want all readers to mark well the following: that not only does "Voices" compare favorably with any picture of its kind but the five-reel Western the first one of which is to be released on September 1st, are positively superior to anything of its kind yet done in motion pictures.

I am willing to stand and fall with the statement and care not when or where my challenge be taken up, leaving it to a jury of exchange men or exhibitors to decide if the series which are to be released monthly do not bear me out.

A sensational trade paper advertising campaign as well as a spectacular general campaign will forthwith be initiated to make the star of this series as popular as any appearing on the screen today.

I bespeak for our representative, H. H. Yudkin, who has started on a country-wide trip with sample prints of early releases, the courtesy of the trade. He carries with him "Voices" as well as the other subjects "not forgetting" "Screen Smiles" the snappy half-reel selection of brightest bits of newspaper wits.

Serial Well in Advance

Ten Episodes of "Son of Tarzan"
Completed by National Film Corp.

IN order that there may be no possibility of delay in getting out the big animal serial "The Son of Tarzan," which is being made by the National Film Corporation for distribution by David P. Howells, orders have been given that all work be kept as far in advance of production as possible.

In keeping with this policy Roy Somerville who is making the adaptation from Edgar Rice Burroughs' book is now well in advance of production having completed ten episodes. This makes him six episodes ahead of Director Harry I. Revier, who is now busy cutting and editing the fourth episode while the sets are being constructed for the fifth.

Several innovations have been adopted in the production of this serial. Among these is the close and intimate cooperation in which Director Revier and Roy Somerville are working. When Somerville went west to start work on this picture he and Revier engaged a bungalow together, so that they would be able to work together without unnecessary delays. This arrangement has worked out with great effect as the two spend their days on location and their nights working out the script for the future episodes. By director and scenario writer working with such intimacy and in perfect harmony some very unusual results have been achieved that will be apparent on the screen.

One of the most important of these will be the method by which the synopsis preceding each episode has been worked out. In place of the usual sub-title synopsis which was so long that no one ever took the trouble to read it, Revier and Somerville have worked out a pictorial synopsis that will lead off each episode and in a few feet of film give the salient features of the action which has gone before.

TECHNICAL organization of the Metro studio assigned to the preparatory work for production of "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" are nearing the completion of a gigantic task in the building of a "French village on the banks of the river Marne" in a valley north of Hollywood, through which was the dry bed of the Los Angeles river, which contains water only during the rainy seasons. This village is reproduced from numerous photographs obtained in France of the exact scenes described in the "Ibenez" world read novel. To properly prepare the river bed it was necessary to deepen and widen as well as to secure an adequate water supply that will make this dry river a raging torrent. The village will have a population of about 5,000

Will Rogers this week did the final work for "Honest Hutch," originally titled "Old Hutch," and within a few days will begin work in the "Guile of Women," from the story by Peter Clark McFarland, adapted for the screen by Elfred Bingham. Clarence Badger, who directed "Honest Hutch," will continue as director for Rogers.

Mabel Normand is making the final scenes for "Head Over Heels," under the direction of Victor Schertzinger, and it is interesting to note that this photoplay has served as inspiration for the composition of a song titled, "Miss Jekyll and Hyde," the lyrics of which were written by Miss Normand and the musical score by Schertzinger.

Reginald Barker is making the final scenes for the "Black Pawl." Director Al. Green is completing "Just Out of College," and Director Harry Beaumont is getting ready to produce "The Canaban," with Tom Moore starred.

F. P.-LASKY

PRODUCTION activities have been renewed by several units at the Famous Players-Lasky studios in Hollywood, including those under the direction of William C. de Mille, James Cruze, Joseph Henaberry and Cecil B. de Mille.

"Always Audacious," adapted from the Ben Ames Williams story by Tom Geraghty, is to serve as the next play for Wallace Reid, which is to be directed by James Cruze, and now that the Roscoe Arbuckle Company directed by Joseph Henzberry has completed "The Traveling Salesman," it has been announced that the big comedian's next play will be "Brewster's Millions," adapted from the George Barr McCutcheon novel and play by Walter Woods.

Conrad Nagel, Ora Carew, Lois Wilson and Jack Holt are taking the principal roles in the William C. de Mille production, "His Friend and His Wife," adapted from the Cosmo Hamilton's novel of the same name.

George Melford and all-star cast producing "The Jacklins," will return this week from a stay of four weeks at Truckee, Cal., by which time they will have this production completed. Melford is next to direct the making of the William Vaughan Moody play "The Faith Healer," with Milton Sills and Mabel Julian Scott as principals. Mrs. Moody, widow of the playwright, is now on her way to Los Angeles to co-operate with Melford organization in the production of this play.

All principals for the next Cecil B. de Mille production have now been engaged, and Mr. de Mille is at work on an original photoplay by Jeanie McPherson. The principals are Ann Forrest, Forrest Stanley, King Baggott, Katherine Williams, Theodore Roberts and Theodore Kosloff.

Jesse L. Lasky will arrive in Los Angeles in about three weeks, according to advice received at the Hollywood studios.

1st NATIONAL

GENERAL MANAGER SAM GORK has engaged David M. Hartford to serve as director of the next Katherine MacDonald production for First National, which will be "The Second Latchkey." Hartford is at present directing the filming of the James Oliver Curwood production, "Nomads of the North," for First National release. Hartford has been identified with the theatrical world for the past thirty years, and a greater part of the time he was producer. For several years he was with Thomas H. Ince, and has a number of big film productions to his credit. "The Second Latchkey" is from a story by C. N. and A. M. Williamson laid

Lila Lee, Paramount artist, who is appearing with various Paramount stars in England with a mystery plot. Edmund Lowe is to play the opposite lead.

Marshall Neilan Company filming "Dinty," which features little Westley Barry, have returned from San Francisco, where they made the chinatown scenes for this production. These are the last scenes required for this the fourth of the Neilan productions for First National.

Mack Sennett Company directed by Mal St. Clair and headed by Phyllis Haver and Ben Turpin, who are working on the second comedy feature for First National are spending two weeks in the vicinity of Kern River, Kern County, Cal., securing comedy water scenes for this production.

The second Henry Lehrman comedy for First National titled, "A Kick in High Life," has been completed and shipped to the Rothacker laboratory in Chicago for print making. Mr. Lehrman is now casting his third picture.

Mrs. Maud Murry Miller delegate from Ohio to the Democratic Convention and also chairman of the Board of Motion Picture Censors for Ohio, has been spending a week at the studios in Los Angeles familiarizing herself with film production. While in Los Angeles she spent several days at First National studios, and was the guest of Anita Stewart, Charles Ray and other stars.

Talmadge Sisters to Sail for Europe

Norma and Constance Talmadge, accompanied by Norma's husband, Joseph M. Schenck, president of both Talmadge Companies, their family physician, Dr. Bernard Livingston, Miss Talmadge's secretary, Miss Ann Pallette, and Miss Talmadge's maid, are sailing on the "Imperator" August 12th, with Mrs. Gish and Dorothy Gish, for a two months vacation, in France, England, Belgium and Italy. The Talmadge girls will meet their mother and their sister Natalie Talmadge, in Paris, where they expect to crowd a year's sightseeing into a few weeks, as this is their first trip abroad. They will visit all the most fashionable coutourieres and modistes on the Rue de la Paix, and bring back many marvelous new costumes which will spell the last word in ultra chic styles for their First National pictures to be made on their return to New York in October.

Rothacker Worker Wins Baby Bonus

The mid-summer crop of babies is bringing round $8 a pound at the Rothacker Film Mfg. Co. treasury. In accordance with the agreement between Old Doc Stork and Waterson R. Rothacker, whereby a Rothacker worker gets a $50 reward for each baby, a check for that amount was given to John Bove, developing expert.

Earle Williams, Vitagraph star, on the "H-4," where the final scenes of his forthcoming feature, "The Purple Cipher," were made

N. Heffron Buck Jones is making the last scenes for "Sunset Sprague." Shirley Mason has completed work in "Merely Mary Ann," and Director Scott Dunlap is making the finals for the William Russell production, "The Challenge of the Law."

Director Lynn Reynolds with a big troupe of Western players, with Tom Mix is at Phoenix, Ariz., filming exteriors for "The Texan." A three-day rodeo was held at Prescott last week, and at this Director Reynolds secured many scenes for the photoplay, as most of the Mix cowboys took part in the contests.

THOS. INCE

WITH the completion of the first Louis Joseph Vance-Thomas Ince special titled, "Beau Revel," this week the announcement was made that this subject would be released through the Paramount-Artcraft program. Preview of the subject shows that it has a number of new night effects in photography perfected by Henry Sharp.

The Ince organization has selected Beatrice Bernham to play the role of Margaret Warren in "When Johnny Comes Marching Home," a Douglas McLean Ince picture. Casting Director Fred Froliek in interviewed more than fifty prospective leading women before selection was made for this part. Continuity is now being prepared for the next McLean picture, which will be "And So They Were Married." This work is being done by Joseph Franklin Poland.

W. Hanson, who for five years was stage and technical director at the Morosco studios, has been engaged as stage manager for the Ince plant to succeed Harry Schenck, who resigned.

Malcolm Oettinger, who has served as writer on New York and Philadelphia newspapers and was contributor to a number of the leading magazines, has been engaged to write magazine features for the Ince studio publicity department, and has arrived from New York to take up the new work.

Lewis Making "Lahoma"

Producer Has Personal Recollection of Days of the Novel

EDGAR LEWIS, then but a youth, thirty-one years ago, almost to the day, was at Wichita, Kansas, eager to enter the new territory which, that day, was to be thrown open by the United States Government, to those hardy pioneers who had come from all parts of the country to be in on the Oklahoma "land rush." Thousands had passed through Wichita on their way. There were all types of men and women among them.

Lewis possessed the spirit of adventure, the love of the outdoors. He was on an "excursion" as he says himself. When the time came for the signal starting off this motley crowd on one of the greatest adventures of the times, young Lewis was there.

This was the beginning of the settlement of Oklahoma, then but a wild, uncultivated country, today one of the most prosperous states in the Union. Lewis says things he can never forget on that adventure. In that same crowd was John Breckenridge Ellis, now a popular novelist. Some years after the "land rush" Ellis wrote a romance under the title of "Lahoma," and this will now be filmed by Mr. Lewis.

Edgar Lewis wanted to film that story from the first day he entered the motion picture field, but it was not until this year that he could obtain the film rights from Bobbs-Merrill Company.

Schlank Contracts for 28 More Comedies

Morris Schlank, producer of Hank Mann comedies, has returned to Los Angeles from a short business trip to New York with contracts for a series of twenty-eight additional pictures for the season of 1920-21, which are to be marketed through W. E. Shallenberger of the Arrow Film Corporation.

"The new contracts given me will not in any way affect the present distribution arrangement of the Hank Mann comedies. These are to continue one every other week for the remainder of the year which ends in March," Mr. Schlank said. "I have not made any contracts for featured comedians of the other two series of comedies I will make but negotiations are now on and I expect to have a definite decision on the question within the next two weeks."

Elaborate Press-Book for Equity Picture

With the release of its latest press-book of thirty-two pages, Equity's exploitation forces exceed all their previous achievements in the number and nature of exploitation stunts described and illustrated in detail on any single production. In all the Young productions, the proportion of exploitation material to publicity has been about evenly divided. In "Whispering Devils," this high mark has been exceeded.

Re-Issue Abramson Films

Chadwick Pictures Have Entire Stock of Ivan Film Productions

THE Chadwick Pictures Corporation has taken over the entire list of feature subjects which were produced by the Ivan Film Productions. These include the dramas directed by Ivan Abramson and which brought him into fame. These subjects are all being re-issued and re-edited by Martin Cohn and J. F. Natteford.

The subjects will be released in blocks of five and four respectively, every three months. The first five subjects are "Like An Old Fool," an adaptation of "A Fool's Paradise;" "Who's To Blame?" a modern revival of "Forbidden Fruit;" "Repentance," which as "The Faded Flower" brought Alma Hanlon into stardom, "A Wife's Story" formerly "A Mother's Confession," and "Truth Will Prevail."

The second series will be composed of four subjects comprising "A Daughter of Hate" in which Frankie Mann is starred; "When A Woman Sins" formerly known as "His Wives;" "Wanda's Affair" the screen vehicle which brought Ruby De Remer before the camera, then known as "Two Men and a Woman;" and "Love Triumphant."

The third and fourth series is composed of the following nine subjects which have as yet not been retitled: "Her Surrender," "Human Clay," "Sins of Ambition," "Married in Name Only," "One Law for Both," "Two Men and a Woman," "Babbling Tongues," "The Window Opposite" and "Conquered Hearts."

New advertising matter, photos, posters and lobby displays are being prepared on all of these subjects. Specially hand painted titles will be used throughout.

The following territory has already been sold on these subjects: New York City and State and Northern New Jersey to the Merit Film Corporation of New York City; Eastern Pennsylvania and Southern New Jersey to the De Luxe Film Company of Philadelphia; Maryland, District of Columbia, Delaware and Virginia to the Merit Film Corporation of Baltimore; Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia to the Merit Film Company of Pittsburgh; Ohio and Kentucky to the Merit Film Corporation of Cleveland.

Urban Buys War Pictures

Purchases 2,500 Feet Showing Kolchak's Expedition in Russia

CHARLES URBAN, president of the Kinetograph Co. of America, has purchased 2,500 feet of negative taken by Lieutenant Carl von Hoffman while the latter was with Admiral Kolchak's ill-fated expedition against the Bolsheviks.

Lieutenant von Hoffman had 18,000 feet telling practically a complete story of the entire Kolchak affair. He lost all but 2,500 feet when the Bolsheviks destroyed the Kolchak forces. He was able to save this part of his collection because he happened to be carrying it along with his immediate personal equipment. The other 15,500 feet were with the supplies that were lost to the enemy. Von Hoffman says they were destroyed and not salvaged, so that the negative he has just sold to Mr. Urban constitutes practically the only record of Admiral Kolchak's ill-fated adventure in Siberia.

Mr. Urban bought the pictures for his film library. In time they will take their proper place in the moving picture encyclopedia he is developing. He is engaged now in collaboration with Lieut. von Hoffman in editing and titling them.

Proposed theatre for Wilmer and Vincent, Allentown, Pa. Hoffman-Henon, Architects

New Strand in Albany Will Use Stadium Layout

Bowl Shaped Auditorium Will Seat Sixteen Hundred

EQUIPPED with many new and distinctive features devised by Architect Thomas Lamb of New York, a motion picture theatre is being erected in Albany by Henry Kramath at an expenditure of $540,000, and which when completed will be turned over to the Strand interests under a forty-year lease. The theatre, by far the most modern, largest and most expensive in the city, located in North Pearl street, will be opened to the public in October or November. No expense whatever is being spared in the construction of the house, explaining in a great measure the delayed opening, likewise the fact that instead of costing $200,000, as first estimated, the house will approximate $540,000.

When Mr. Kramath conceived the idea of erecting an up-to-date motion picture theatre in Albany, he took a trip to the Pacific Coast, stopping in many cities both coming and going, visiting the best motion picture houses in each of these and carrying back with him this or that feature which had appealed to him from as many different theatres.

When the trip was over, Mr. Kramath found that none pleased him more than the Strand theatre of New York City, which became the model on which Albany's newest picture house is being constructed, but with certain improvements that had been devised since the original Strand was opened to the public.

For instance, the lower floor will be of a bowl-shape arrangement, seating in the neighborhood of 1,600 persons and in a way that there will be no obstruction to the view and no distortion of the screen picture.

The balcony will have a seating capacity of close to 1,000 persons with three rows of loges, each divided by curtains, while movable chairs in each will add to a large degree in the comfort of the patrons.

There will be three boxes on either side of the theatre, but these will be on the same level as the balcony, none on the ground floor. The floor plan in each of these boxes includes steps so that the persons occupying seats in the rear will have fully as good a view of the picture as those in the front row.

Some idea of the immensity of the stage can be gained from the fact that it is eight feet wider than the one at Proctor's Harmanus-Bleecker Hall, one of the largest in the country. There will be six sets of scenes, while dressing-rooms of a most modern type will be located on either side of the stage, for the house is being built for the screen as well as the legitimate, although under the Strand interests it will be operated as a first-run motion picture theatre.

The organ will be supplemented by an echo organ and there will be an orchestra occupying a pit at times and at other times being on the stage.

The interior decorative effects are up to the minute and will surpass anything in this city, even including the state buildings. Mr. Kramath is giving his entire time to the construction of the building and is personally on the job throughout the entire working day. The decorators and plasterers are experts from New York, several of whom were employed on the Capitol and other theatres and are thoroughly conversant with Mr. Kramath's demands for the very best that exists.

Some novel arrangements are embodied in the theatre in connection with the fire escapes, which will undoubtedly attract much attention from those who are in the theatre-building business. For instance, solid concrete walks supplant the usual lattice and lath-like arrangement which prevails in many houses and through which flames can quickly find their way from beneath. There are no movable ladders in connection with the fire escapes, the exits being of a type that will permit not only a most speedy egress from the theatre but one which will be characterized by perfect safety even under the most hazardous conditions.

The theatre will be known as the Strand and has been under course of construction for the last year. While it was first reported that it would be open to the public on Labor Day, Mr. Kramath in conversation with a correspondent of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS stated officially that the house would not be open until October or November owing to his desire to complete it in the finest respect even in the most minute detail.

Buildings Are Being Razed to Make Way for Evansville's Newest Theatre

Plans Are Being Changed to Allow for Introduction of Roof Garden Feature

Erection of a new theatre here, to be known as the Vendome theatre, will be started within a few weeks at Evansville, Indiana. Leases on the ground at Third and Sycamore streets, which the building will occupy, have all been closed and the store buildings now on the site will be torn down as soon as the tenants give possession.

The new theatre will be 145 by 90 feet in size, covering about one-fourth of the block. It will be erected in such a manner that it can later be enlarged into an eight-story hotel building in addition to the theatre. Further leases are necessary to carry out the plans to construct a hotel in connection with the theatre.

Jacob Handelsman of Chicago is manager of the Vendome theatre company. Other officers of the company are: Joseph Trintz, Chicago, president; Charles Frisse, Evansville, secretary.

The theatre will have a seating capacity of from 3,300 to 3,500. The largest theatre now in Evansville, the Strand, which is devoted to high class pictures, seats but 1,700.

No expense will be spared in making the theatre one of the more modern and beautiful in the county, according to Mr. Handelsman.

It is believed construction work can be started by Aug. 5 and it is planned to work two shifts of workers in order to complete the building within six months.

Several new features will be incorporated in the theatre. Instead of being located near the orchestra circle, the boxes will be located midway between the lower floor and the balcony, giving spectators a direct view of the entire stage instead of a side view.

Motion picture men point out that the boxes in the average picture house, no matter how good the pictures are presented, afford a side view that too often distort the figures on the screen into thin and emaciated specimens of humanity.

The officials of the new theatre company believe the boxes affording a direct view will be popular with the audiences.

On the mezzanine floor, just in the rear of the boxes, a promenade will be located for use of patrons. Rest rooms will be located in the rear of the promenade.

A nursery with woman attendants will be conducted for the benefit of mothers. The nursery will be located in the rear of the theatre where small children may be left during the performances.

Paul H. Bush, manager of the Selznick Film Corporation; S. I. Levin, general manager of the Jones, Linick and Shaefer Amusement Enterprises of Chicago, and Frank T. Milner, late manager of the pipe organ department of the Kimbel Company of Chicago, came here recently to go over plans for the programs to be offered at the new theatre with Mr. Handelsman.

A pipe organ will be installed but the theatre also will use a symphony orchestra.

Motion pictures will be featured at the theatre, but operas and plays of various descriptions also will be presented at intervals.

The location of the theatre, just a block from Main street, Evansville's business thoroughfare, will enable the company to make the house plainly visible from Main street. In addition Sycamore street has long been a favorite showhouse street and the Grand theatre is just a half-block from the location of the new theatre.

The Vendome theatre will be erected with the main entrance and foyer cutting diagonally across the corner.

Difficult to Find Words to Describe Spanish Theatre

But Copy-writer Does His Best with Words at Hand

THE opening of the magnificent Real Cinema in Madrid is further evidence of the widespread popularity of motion pictures and the overcoming of prejudice even in the most conservative localities. Making due allowance for a characteristically Spanish liberality in the matter of adjectives, we cannot doubt that the Real theatre is one of the finest in the world and its opening looked upon in Spain as a matter of national importance. The Nicholas Power Company, whose projectors are used in the Real, furnish an account of the opening, printed in a Madrid magazine, and it can easily be seen that Spain is well supplied with film fans. The King, the Royal family, and all the grantees of Spain who were in town, attended the performance and evidently had a fine time. To quote from the local paper, "His Majesty, expressing many praiseful phrases, was greatly pleased with the achievement of the Empressa Sagarra and promised that he would call again in order to look over the whole building." The King has a Power's Projector of his own, and is a good judge of projection, therefore his opinion of the Real and its equipment carries somewhat more weight than the judgments of most kings.

There is no doubt that the Empressa Sagarra, owners of the Real theatre, have spared no expense and combed the world to get the finest equipment for their house. P. A. McGuire, who looks after the advertising for the Nicholas Power Company, informs us that the use of Power's Projectors absolutely proves that the Royal Cinema has been supplied with the very latest and best that the world furnishes the photoplay houses.

American exhibitors who are proud of their own efforts to give their people the best and have no objection to local papers saying a few kind words in reference to these efforts to please the public, may find some suggestions in the attempts of the "Nuvo Mundo" to do justice to the Royal Cinema. "Madrid boasts of a new sumptuous, splendid and comfortable photoplay palace, the Royal Cinema, which today stands in the centre of Madrid, the pride of all Spaniards and the admiration of all foreigners. There is not in all Spain a more ample and regally arrayed photoplay house than the Royal Cinema. In spite of the great dimensions of the building there is not a single touch that betrays bad taste. Even upon entering the plain but admirably exquisite vestibule, the visitor is impressed with the beauty of the house.

"The regal stairway reaching to the beautiful roof garden, the marvelously illuminated exhibition room, the boxes—especially the parquette boxes, apparently made for the exhibition of women's beauty, the ample sitting rooms—furnished with comfortable, graceful American arm chairs, the perfectly arranged orchestra seats—from every one of which the spectator can comfortably watch the performance, the proscenium arch of pure marble and brilliant bronze, bedecked with a wonderful arrangement of lights, and an elegant blue damask curtain which presents a beautiful contrast with the predominating light green tone of the house in every touch present a fascinating and admirable ensemble. Thus is explained the ecstasy which overtakes the visitor upon entering the Royal Cinema."

Although this house cost the Empressa Sagarra two and one-half millions of pesetas, the public of the metropolis of Spain is filling the theatre to its capacity at every performance and the owners are well satisfied with their investment,—and that is a good way to end a story in Spain or in Michigan.

The Story of How the World's Largest Theatre Furnishes Fresh Air to Its Patrons

The Third Installment of the Description of the Capitol's Heating and Ventilating Systems

THE first two sections of this article treated to a detailed extent the ventilating and heating layouts of this monster theatre building. It would have been impossible, however, to have elaborated the description of these systems to the point where the article would have consumed a dozen issues. But with the idea of condensing the material so that the most important phases only would be touched upon, the data was finally prepared in two sections.

The third and final installment will be dedicated, by the logical order of things, to the thermostatic apparatus which plays the all-important part in maintaining an even temperature.

The thermostatic devices employed at the Capitol were developed and installed by the Johnson Service Co. of New York. These automatic regulators are installed throughout the playhouse, controlling ventilating as well as heating. Two are installed on the main floor to control the direct radiation there and others are in the balcony accomplishing the same purpose.

Not all of the steam radiators, however, are automatically controlled; some of those in the lobby being hand regulated.

In the second installment of this article mention was made and a photo shown of the air outlets placed up and down beside the entrance doors. Thermostats on the walls of the building are strategically placed to operate these counter-draught outlets.

In a structure of this scope the engineer is not in a position to remain cognizant at all times of the temperature conditions throughout the building. At the Capitol this information is brought to him by so-called "long-distance thermometers." By these devices he is able to keep informed of the condition of air in the balcony and on the main floor.

The registering devices are located in the ventilating ducts leading from these parts of the theatre but the temperature indicated is approximately that encountered by patrons.

After the heating and ventilating systems had been installed and adjusted test runs were made to ascertain the actual working results of the systems. In spite of the fact that the theatre's 5,000 seats were filled with a constantly changing crowd, the temperature hardly varied, showing that the designs of the various elements were correct and the capacities ample for all purposes.

Allen Gets Out House Organ

"The Mouth Organ" which happens to be the official instrument of the Allen Theatre Managers' Association of Toronto is out again. The little pamphlet is full of the kind of items that make such a publication of the most interest to its readers. Most of the material is of a personal nature and hence of greatest value to those "on the inside," but Sam Cohen who assumes the position of Editor of the "Mouth Organ" gathers a fine brand of variegated material.

Monsoons on Broadway

The Criterion theatre, located at 44th Street and Broadway, New York City, is another to join the list of Monsoon Cooling System owners, and the installation is progressing at a rapid pace.

Briefly, the system as designed for the Criterion consists of four big Monsoon Blowers—two located on each side of the stage in the upper tier boxes. The tremendous volumes of air blown in by these blowers will maintain perfect ventilation throughout the year and will be particularly beneficial during the hot weather months.

The Monsoon System was selected for the Criterion by Russell B. Smith, Inc., Consulting Engineers, only after a careful study of the problem and a thorough investigation of the improved Monsoon apparatus.

Study Lessons for the Projectionist

Generation of Electricity

AS was stated in the last issue, in order to generate electricity, it is necessary to have a conductor cutting the lines of a magnetic field. Thus a direct current generator is a machine so designed that electric conductors will cut a magnetic field, and also provide a means of conducting the current produced by the conductors cutting the field, so that it may be used to perform work.

The generator is a means of converting mechanical energy into electrical energy by means of magnetic induction, and while electricity is not created, an induced electromotive force is produced which causes a current to flow through the connected circuit in a similar way as water is forced through a system of piping by means of a pump.

A generator is made up of two fundamental parts—a magnetic field which may be set up either by permanent magnets or electromagnets and an armature which consists of a series of coils of wire wound on an iron core and so arranged that they may be revolved within the magnetic field.

There are different methods of construction used in the production of electricity. These methods are by means of a revolving armature and stationary field magnets as used in a direct current generator, also a revolving field and stationary armature, as in the case of the alternator for the production of alternating current. In speaking of electrical machines, the stationary part of the machine is known as the stator and the rotating part the rotor.

When a conductor is moved in a magnetic field perpendicular to the lines of force as shown by Fig. 58, the direction of the induced E. M. F. tending to cause a current to flow, is given by the right hand rule which is as follows:

If the thumb, forefinger, and middle finger of the right hand are extended at right angles to one another, then the thumb held in the direction of motion of the conductor, and the forefinger pointing in the direction of the magnetic flux, the middle finger will be pointing in the direction of the induced E. M. F.

In order that the conductors may be revolved and cut the magnetic field, the wire is wound on a core which revolves on an axis neutral distance between the two pole faces. In order to illustrate this most simply we will consider a single loop of wire as shown by Fig. 59. If this loop is revolved in a clockwise direction, then since the direction of motion of section AB is upward, and the field flowing from left to right then the direction of the induced E. M. F. in the section AB will be from A to B. Also in the section CD whose direction of motion is downward the induced E. M. F. by the right hand rule will be opposite to that of AB or from C to D. The ends of the loop revolve in a plane which is parallel to the magnetic lines and since no cutting takes place there is no induced E. M. F.

Since the induced E. M. F. AB and CD are in opposite directions, a current tends to flow around the loop in the direction ABCD. The E. M. F. in AB is added to that of CD so that the E. M. F. at the ends of the loop is equal to the sum of the two conductors.

FIG. 59.

FIG. 60.

One-half revolution later, as illustrated by Fig. 60, the sections of the loop AB and CD have changed places and the directions of induced E. M. F. will be from B to A and from D to C, so that the current would be the same but in the opposite direction. Thus it will be seen that the current flows in one direction during half the revolution and in the opposite direction for the remainder.

An alternating current is therefore produced in a closed loop revolving in a magnetic field.

The current will have a maximum value when in the position shown by Figs. 59 and 60, since at these positions the conductors are cutting the greatest number of lines per second and in a direction perpendicular to the direction of the lines.

When the conductors are in a position shown by the dotted lines Fig. 60, the motion is parallel to the lines of force and no cutting takes place therefore there is no E. M. F. induced and the loop is said to be in the neutral position.

As the loop of wire is revolved through the field, the induced voltage increases to a maximum at a point where the conductors are half way across the magnetic field and then falls to zero again at the neutral position. If we consider the neutral position of the coil as the "zero" position, we may then plot the induced E. M. F. for one revolution as shown by Fig. 61. When the coil has been revolved 90 degrees the voltage will be at a maximum in one direction. It then falls to zero again when the coil has gone one-half revolution or 180 degrees. The voltage then builds up in the opposite direction to a maximum at 270 degrees and falls back to zero upon returning to the original position. This plot is known as the sine wave curve and the above action includes one complete cycle. The same action is repeated for each revolution of the loop, in a two-pole machine.

The amount of induced E. M. F. in a conductor depends upon the number of lines cut per second. When the rate of cutting is 100,000,000 lines per second then the E. M. F. produced between the terminals of a loop is 1 volt. The above figure is usually written 10^8 and is read "ten to the eighth power."

Problem:—Find the E. M. F. induced in a wire which passes 50 times per second across a pole face, the flux density of which is 15,000 gauss. The dimensions of the pole face being 20 x 30 cms.

Solution:—The flux ϕ equals $20 \times 30 \times 15,000 = 9,000,000$ or 9×10^6

The total number of lines cut per second = $50 \times 9 \times 10^6$ or 4.5×10^8

Volts induced equals $4.5 \times 10^8 / 10^8$ or 4.5 volts.

Since it is necessary to have considerable space between the poles of a machine in order to furnish room for the loop of wire to revolve, the inside of the loop is filled with an iron core in order to provide a more accessible path for the magnetic lines and also to concentrate them to a more definite path.

In order to increase the voltage at the terminals of a winding number of the loops are connected in series, the total voltage being the sum of the voltage of the number of loops.

In addition to the core and the loops of wire it is necessary to provide a means of collecting the current and conducting it to the outside line. This is accomplished by means of slip rings for an alternating machine, and by a commutator for direct current machines. The combination of core, loop windings, and device for collecting current is known as the armature, the construction and operation of which will be explained in a later issue.

Since the current within the armature of both a direct and alternating current machine re-

Fig. 61; in a direct current machine, it is necessary that the connections be so reversed during the revolution of the cutting conductor that the current will be unidirectional, this action is accomplished by means of the commutator.

Problems Referring to the Text

40. A wire cuts through a field of 2,000,000 lines, at an average rate of 2400 times per minute. How many volts are set up in the wire?
41. If a wire which is cutting a magnetic field at the rate of 100 ft. per second induces 4 volts at the terminals, how fast must it move to set up 6 volts?
42. An armature has 100 conductors connected in series. If these conductors cut a field of 5,000,000 lines 800 times per minute, find the voltage induced.

Picture Is Dull

Ivan T. Davidson, Mayville, Ky., writes: AM having some trouble that has got my goat. I am using two machines of different makes. One gives a most wonderful picture while the other gives a very poor one. I overhauled it and it is no better. I installed new lenses with no results. My picture is dull, it will not focus although I am using the best grade of Gundlach lens that can be bought. The picture runs fairly steady, tension springs set right but it will not project a picture compared to the 6B. I even changed lenses from the 6B to the Simplex with no results.

REPLY:

In the first place the trouble is not in the objective because you say you have changed them about without improving the picture. Have you examined your condensers to see if they have become fogged or discolored due to overheating or poor glass. With these two possibilities out of the way there are just two that remain—one has to do with the lining up of the optical system and the other with the light source.

See that your objective, aperture, condensers and light source are lined up perfectly. You will need a piece of stout cord and a pair of calipers to do this mechanically although it can be done optically with a piece of smoked glass providing you can get out in front of your projection room and up to the height of the port-hole.

If you have a good sized and evenly distributed spot on the aperture plate it is one sign that your illuminant is O. K. But check this up by measuring the volts and amperes on the line side and machine side of both machines comparing the two under normal conditions. Be sure also that your carbon set on the one machine is as good as the other. Perhaps through carelessness the lower carbon is deflecting a considerable percentage of source illumination which would have the effect you describe.

Speedco Inventor Enters Politics

Elias B. Dunn, president of the Speedco Arc Controller Co., before it was taken over by the Fulton Company, is seeking success in politics. His name has appeared as an active candidate for Congressman from the Ninth Congressional District which centers about Newark, Orange and East Orange, New Jersey.

Wants Triple Machine Diagram

P. A. Wills, Park Theatre, Champaign, Ill., writes:

"I noticed John L. Hogan's letter in a recent issue and agree with him in regard to Company punch-holes. I myself have been 'bawled out' by the exchanges for cutting them out, but why can't the exchange put them in the reel designer. Vitagraph puts three or four in the title and two or three in the ending, and possibly in two or three pictures at the first and last of the reel which can easily be cut out. The Rivera in Chicago shows no punch-holes, and I don't think they were in the film when they received it as there were no jumps in characters where any film had been removed, which looks as if the exchange did not put them in until after they ran the film. And Goldwyn, four at the first of each reel and two at the end, and ONE NEAR THE MIDDLE, which is very hard to locate.

"I would also like to see the change-over for three machines that was promised to appear a long while ago. I have a change-over for two machines, but cannot be adapted for three machines very easily. I have a double dower arrangement on my lamps, whereby I am able to cut one picture off and put the other on without it being noticed, as from one scene to another.

"Within the next week or two I expected to have one of the best equipped booths in the business as we are getting two new Type S Simplex with arc controllers. I have just finished trying out the new Keenaltite lens which sells for $100. While this lens gives as sharp a picture as the Bausch & Lomb and has had considerable work done on it, it seems the price is rather high. It is a triple combination lens with the back lens about two inches from the film insuring very little loss of light.

"Would like to know if it is against the Underwriters Code to run the line wires up through the pedestal without conduit as there is a cross-piece through the frame that will not permit conduit being run up?"

Reply: The correspondent who promised that three-machine change-over has never sent it in. He sent a letter which stated that he was enclosing it, but examination showed that he had forgotten to put it in. If he sees this we hope he will make good on his promise.

Kernalite lenses seem to be giving excellent satisfaction when used under the conditions for which they were designed. Admitted the price is higher than the general run of lenses, but if you are in sore need of screen illumination it is very probable that the cost of the lens is nothing compared to the gain. This lens was fully described in the News about two months ago.

According to the Underwriters Rules all concealed wiring not on knobs or in tubes must be run in conduit. In places where the conductors are liable to injury this conduit must be of the approved type made for the purpose. For the sake of safety to you as well as to conform to the Underwriters rules the line wires should be in conduit. If a cross-piece prevents the entrance of a conduit break off the piece to get the space.

Wire Sizes

R. F. A., from one of the largest cities in Indiana, writes as follows: I often hear that the lead wires for a motion picture machine should be No. 6 and sometimes No. 4. I can find this out from any table on wire sizes and capacities but how are these tables figured. Are the sizes decided by the Underwriters or how?

Reply. Although you do not want your name mentioned there is no reason at all why you should be ashamed to ask this question. No doubt there are any number of men holding licenses of the first class who could not set down the computations for wire sizes.

This is the way the tables are worked out: Multiply full length of circuit by the current taken at the arc and then multiply this amount by the resistance of a standard mil-foot of copper wire. A "mil-foot" is the resistance of a foot of copper wire which is one one-thousandth of an inch in diameter. After you have multiplied these three terms together divide the result by the allowable drop in voltage. As an example:

Suppose the distance from the transformer to the machine is 150 feet and that we want to use 50 amperes at the arc. By looking up in a table of wire data we find that the resistance of a mil-foot of copper wire is 10.08 and if we assume a maximum voltage drop of 2, our figures will read thus:

$$\frac{150 \times 150 \times 50 \times 10.8}{2} = \text{equals } 81,000 \text{ circular mils.}$$

This calls for a No. 1 wire but the difference between this result and actual practice is caused by the adoption of an 8 or 10 volts drop instead of the two. This would demand a wire of much smaller cross section, in this particular case with a 8-volt drop the size would be 20,000 circular mils which would call for a No. 6 wire.

Now, with this figure in mind we look for another table in which the Underwriters have given the carrying capacity of copper conductors and we see here that a No. 6 wire will carry 50 amperes safely. But if we want to be sure, or if we should ever wish to increase our current consumption to 60 amperes it would be better to install an extra-sized conductor now, or a No. 4.

Thus you see that the actual conductor size is determined by a balancing of Safety against actual Carrying Capacity.

"The Punch Holes Are Furnished Free, Too"

Stirred into action by the series of articles appearing in the News on the subject of punch holes Mr. J. B. (Pop) Kenton of Hollywood, Cal., explains the existence of "change over" cues in conjunction with music cues. These are all right as far as they go; they would eliminate the need for punch marks on the part of the projectionist but they could not help the situation insofar as the negligence of Exchanges is concerned. If the "cue sheet" is furnished free by the Exchange so are the punch holes. The letter follows:

I have been reading for some time, a controversy in your paper about punch marks. Here is a remedy and it doesn't cost a cent.

All Music Cue Sheets made by the Filmusic Company of Los Angeles contain a complete set of "change over" cues for the benefit of the operator. These are furnished free with the pictures by the Exchange. All the operator has to do is to ask for these Cue Sheets.

25th Anniversary of Cinematography

(From the NLWS correspondent in Paris)

Twenty-five years ago this summer the camera and the movies were joined together here and moving pictures were shown to the public for the first time in the grill room of the Grand Cafe by the inventor, M. Louis Lumière who is better known to Americans for his system of color photography. The professional cinematographers recently commemorated the silver anniversary of the event by a unique festival in Paris at which a film was projected showing the entire development of the cinema since the day it first appeared before an astounded public under the name of the "Biograph."

In his address of welcome to the artists of the tripod, M. Lumière said: "Since many great American producers have set up moving picture studios in France to film interior and landscapes for scenarios with European settings, they have seen and been impressed with the art of French producers and have asked many of our best directors to cross the Atlantic to work in American studios. I wish to advise my co-workers who have received such offers, to wait six months before accepting. In that time I hope to see done away with the present difficulties that now hinder French production. If this does not come to pass, it were best for our cinema artists to take their genius abroad and thus teach a lesson to the capitalists of France who have refused their support to a French industry hard hit by the war and in need of encouragement."

The difficulties referred to by M. Lumière are the forbidden entry of raw film into France and the attitude of the subsidized theatre of France which makes it almost impossible for actors to take up movie work after success on the legitimate stage.

Meanwhile the picture theatres continue to increase in number in Paris. There is a two-years' stock of raw film on hand, and a year's stock of film ready for projection. The studios are hindered by a lack of real movie stars and the price of raw film has jumped out of sight with the high rate of foreign exchange and the embargo. Add to this the cost of keeping idle film in stock and you have a lugubrious picture of the future of the movies in France.

Photographically Mexican Films Are Fine, But Sentiment Shown Is Untrue

Cameraman Ramon Marty of Monterrey, Mexico, Criticizes American Films Depicting That Country

SOMETIME ago you asked me for information concerning the establishment of any moving picture studio in his country by any American film house. No sir; there is no American film producer here to date; but I still hope to see the realization of what I expressed to you in my former letter.

Probably producers in your country have not even thought of coming to make films in this Republic so full as it is of novelties in this matter, because they have sufficient there, or from fear of unsettled conditions in Mexico during Mr. Carranza's administration. But he assured that some day those producers, or European houses even, spurred by the exigencies of the public, will seek other fields of action where to develop their films, under different surroundings, in lands having landscapes, plants, types and customs unknown at present to the rest of the world. You cannot deny that ninety per cent of the inhabitants of the United States, notwithstanding their nearness to this Republic, are totally ignorant of things in Mexico; such as happens in Europe in the case of France, where many times Spanish personages of both sexes have been taken to the dumb scene and have been dressed and characterized in such a ludicrous fashion and showing such a lack of knowledge of what Spain is, that the directors of these films would be ashamed to have presented such fantastic personages if they once made a trip through the peninsula studying the costume, and the character of the people in each province. I have just seen a film made in Italy by Bertini, being a reproduction of the Spanish comedy "Genio Alegre" and I notice in it the great lack of knowledge that I speak of. How dare these producers take to the screen the reproduction of a work without having first obliged their directors to study all things necessary to have the work complete?

You yourselves make the same mistake. I have seen some American films in which Spain is presented between tragic and picturesque, with her banditti, her bullfighters, her ascetic penitents and her defiant women, and dressing the personages in such a variety of capricious costumes that anyone who knows not Spain, on seeing those films, will believe that we live in that land in perpetual carnival and a good time. It is a fact that up to date there has been no house who has produced a real and truly Spanish film.

Do you not believe it is sad to see such blunders, and that there lies a big blame on such famous companies, who spend so many thousands of dollars in their works, for not trying to put the seal of reality on them instead of presenting types created by the imagination of their directors? What do these companies lack to remedy so grave defects? Nothing, almost nothing; only a little more care and to require from their directors a little more study or, if necessary, a tour of inspection through the country to be presented to the screen.

Now, in regards to the last films of American production that I have seen, I must say that they are good, very good, both on their artistic photography and in their very discreet artists, their exquisite direction, their correct "mise en scene" and their interesting arguments. That is all very well and it is the way to success.

What I cannot admit is those series films of interminable length, full of fanciful blunders and sensational scenes in which the true hero is . . . the camera-man, and whose entangled arguments are so unlikely and so absolutely ridiculous that the public of less culture and even little children, who formerly stood aghast before such a humbug, now scorn them heartily and criticize them mercilessly.

Producers should understand the need of morality in the cine, and of taking hold of other arguments which serve not as a school for thieves and murderers. Above all, real arguments should be made, reproductions of truth, else I prophesy a failure. At present, series films are coming from Europe with a sound and well-borne argument and which even cultured people enjoy. Another notice to producers and distributors: Be on the alert, gentlemen, to win the Latin-American countries. European houses are working hard and have advanced far in their conquest. So if you do not wish to lose these markets, enter the struggle, not only through journalistic propaganda, but sending in good films, competing in art and presentation with those coming from the Old World.

About native productions I must say that it is progressing. Some good films have been made and every day the number of producers increases.

I intend to go to Spain next year in order to study on the spot what can be made for the development of the cinema art. Spain, which is considered as the cradle of art, offers good artists, grand monuments, cities and towns rich in artistic works, old architectures, magnificent landscapes; it is a land full of joy, music, light and emotions; a land of traditions, romance and adventures. Before this I should like to make a trip through California and New York, and visit the large studios, talk with artists and producers to exchange impressions and get knowledge which may be useful to me in the future, and so be enabled to talk with assurance when I try to speak about the enterprising spirit of the great people of the United States.

Technical Papers of Interest to the Trade

The latest volume of the Journal of the Optical Society of America appears to be a valuable one and, we are sure, will be found to be so by those interested in this branch of the optical field.

Among some of the papers printed in this issue are: A Method for Determining the Photographic Absorption of Lenses; Dyes for Photographic Sensitizing; and Dispersion in Optical Glasses.

In addition to the foregoing there are also several reviews of recently published books.

This journal is published bi-monthly by the J. B. Lippincott Company of Philadelphia.

Technical Editor Resigns

AFTER having started the Studio Technique Section of the Trade Review and carrying it along for three months Mr. Earl Rossman, formerly with Prizma, Inc., has resigned his editorial berth to accept a position with the Storyart Pictures Corp., as Technical Director. This producing firm, recently organized, has laid plans to produce a series of short subjects of a vastly different nature, including revelations in photographic effects and color schemes and it was because of the nature of the intended work that Mr. Rossman was selected.

He has had a wide experience in practically every branch of cinematography from free lancing, "footage" work to the actual studio production end. For several years he was associated with Prizma, Inc., and was with the expedition to Africa in 1919.

His appreciation of the artistic in photography and his resourcefulness in obtaining desired effects make him particularly well fitted for the unusual type of productions on which he is now working under the direction of Charles Clemens Husted, well known director.

Paterson Theatre Installs Typhoons

Mr. E. Bizar, owner and operator of the people's Park theatre, Paterson, New Jersey, has always endeavored to give every possible convenience and comfort to his theatre patrons, and for that reason from time to time, add new innovations to his theatre. Mr. Bizar's most recent addition to his theatre comprises the installation of a Typhoon Cooling and Ventilating System, and thus each visitor to this theatre will be assured a cool and comfortable seat all during the hot weather.

Two large 5 ft. Typhoons have been installed on each side of the screen, taking fresh air through openings in the side walls of the theatre, and forcing it directly over the orchestra and out through the exit doors. This operation entirely renovates the atmosphere in the theatre once every minute, so that at all times the air is cool and fresh.

Already, Mr. Bizar claims that through the installation of this cooling apparatus, his summer receipts have increased.

No. 8

The Kind of a Man to Appoint

By Charles D. Isaacson

(Author, "Face to Face with Great Musicians")

IN motion picture music, the man is the most important element. The wrong kind of individual will never understand. The right one will make wonders grow wherever he turns.

The man at the head of your music must be gifted essentially with a point of view which will enable him to grasp the needs of your peculiar situation and capitalize everything,—letting nothing elude him when it comes to making prestige and business for the house.

The man at the head of your music ought to be a musician. But his musical talents are secondary to his viewpoint.

The brainiest musician in the world might be utterly out of place in the finest motion picture. Not that the training of the masters would keep him out of pictures, or that he ought to consider himself above the newly developing field—that is not the point at all. The musician, whose classicism is so ingrained that he believes anything which does not stick to old and fixed traditions,—that man is not the type. The motion picture musician must first of all be ready to make his own traditions, build his own laws and be willing to make a new definition for dignity. He cannot hope to use the motion picture theatre in the same way that he does the concert hall; nor is the theatre to be considered in the same way as the opera house. There is a fine shade of difference which is developing between the best picture-music houses and the concert halls. Oftentimes the musical programs of the picture houses are good enough to be transferred to the concert hall without change. But the most interesting concert program could not have been put without change into the finest picture theatre.

On the other hand, the man at the head of the music cannot be a man of poor taste in art. Such a type would be utterly unable to size up the big opportunities. The musician whose conception of music is jazz and ragtime and who is unable to hear or appreciate the best in art will not go very far. I do not think the public want to hear the low sort of music with their pictures. They may be willing to hear it, and doubtless enjoy it, at the dance hall and the vaudeville houses, but they feel differently about the picture theatre. If they are promised music, they want real music—fine old songs they remember, beautiful airs from the opera, such as they have heard on their phonographs, and later the inspiring music of the masters.

Not that they are going to object to popular music—they do want some of that frothy stuff. Just as they want the crazy comedies and the utterly ridiculous farces, as a balance to the good features. But you couldn't succeed with all comedy—you're finding that the best programs are well balanced—you're finding that the use of the topical reviews, the scenics and occasionally even the educationals are well received. The public is using the picture theatre for getting the best of ideas.

And this you can take for an absolute truth—that when it comes to music you can only succeed if you gradually offer better, and better kinds of music, of the best composers. Don't forget that people remember what they hear in music, even if they are not able to play a note themselves. Give them nothing but a diet of frothy music and soon your music will become a boomerang; instead of drawing the crowd, it will drive them away.

I remember one theatre, where music actually sent some people away. The man at the piano had no conception of the sensibilities of his crowd—he continued to grind out, night after night, the selfsame, irritating, frothy music, and it hurt the listeners—it actually detracted from the virtues of the films.

The right kind of man is not hard to find, but it were far better not to have anybody at all, unless you have the right kind.

There is a way that any manager can test his present or prospective musical director. That is, he can find if the man has the proper outlook on his job.

What does he expect to do with his music? If he only hopes to make a sound while the picture is going on, he won't get far. Does he understand and know the operation of the theory of musical moods and emotions? Can he give the non-musician a series of examples of musical moods and emotions? He should be able to offer half a dozen passages of music illustrating every mood and emotion—for instance, joy, humor, laughter, abandon, gayety, madness, sorrow, tragedy, sobbing, woe, murderous passion, sex passion, childish innocence, romantic love, savage hate, etc. He should be able to give you half a dozen passages illustrating and describing woodlands, ocean, clouds, storm, dawn, the spaces of the desert, an oriental scene, a Chinese street, Hebraic chanting, the bustle of a busy city, a fire, hunting for deer, a ballet dance, etc. For, as I have remarked already, and shall have occasion to demonstrate in detail, music is a more expressive language than words, and there are an unlimited variety of passages, marvelously descriptive of the most delicate shades of meaning. The right musician has them at his fingertips, or, if he hasn't, will be able to work them out and recognize them. This is the way the makers of cue-sheets write their analysis but the man at the head of your music must be able to make his own sheets, or criticise the ones which are sent him.

Now, one kind of musician will be so utterly above the earth that he will refuse to acknowledge that music can be described in words and music itself must be treated as a descriptive language—that type of musician will feel that it is undignified to talk that way. He is out of your class—he will never do.

The other musician won't be able to understand. If he has been dealing only with cheap music, he won't have any acquaintance with the real thing. And I assure you, it is as utterly impossible to find one's descriptive music in the popular songs of the day as it would be to attempt to make an exciting drama out of a slapstick comedy. There's lots of stuff in the popular repertoire, but it's only the trimmings—the real goods is in the high class, standard repertoire. Therefore, you can understand that the man who sneers at classical music, or who demonstrates an unfamiliarity with it, cannot be acceptable to you.

After the question of music to be used during the exhibition of the pictures is set—tled, the next matter is what about the music between pictures.

The right kind of executive for the music department could within twenty-four hours furnish a half-dozen programs for different occasions—say one for Christmas, another for St. Valentine's day, another for Washington's birthday, another for the beginning of November, and another for an ordinary plain every day week. He could have a dozen suggestions for musical novelties—solos, dances, ensemble operatic offering, a music-film story, old-fashioned songs, comparison of past and present music, etc.

The right kind of music head will know how and be eager to connect with all the local musical happenings, so as to swing some benefit to his theatre. He will understand what is happening in music today, so that he can keep step with progress. But mainly he will have the psychology of the crowds, and he won't go over their heads, but he won't keep them always down in the cellar.

No, I am not describing a paragon, an angel come to earth. I could call off for you a dozen names of famous musicians, high-priced too, who wouldn't be worth their salt in the motion picture theatre. They're not enough of the people. They haven't the spirit of crowds in their hearts. All their lives they have been dealing with the so-called highbrows, and if you, Mr. Manager, were to admit to them that you never heard, let us say, Debussy's "Afternoon of a Fawn," they would consider you outcast! They wouldn't come off their perch—they are so confoundedly dignified, as they call it, and so piggishly snobbish, as I call it, that they refuse to see that their attitude is hurtful to art and the people.

I always tell them, when I talk with them, that they are cutting off art from the crowds, and cutting the crowds off from art—that the people must be given a chance to develop in music. They can't be expected to chew off grand opera of the most serious type until they have gone through an evolution. Now please, just because a man is off classical music, don't therefore consider him out of your considerations. But I am anxious to show you that the prestige of announcing the former conductor of a famous orchestra or grand opera company won't compensate for the lack of vision, if the man is too good for the crowds.

On the other hand, I could tell you of twenty great conductors who would be worth any price in a motion picture theatre, because they are in love with the plan to make music for all the people. For instance, there is Arthur Bodensky of the Metropolitan Opera Company and the New Symphony Orchestra; there is Sokoloff of the Cleveland Symphony Orchestra; there are Theodore Spiering, Victor Herbert, John Phillip Sousa, Stokowski, Polacco. Mind this prophecy—watch some of these men in the next ten years—and you will find them engaged by some theatres, for occasional appearances!

The ideal man for the job of musical director of my ideal motion picture theatre loves music. Also has a keen love of pictures—he is not a snob who sneers at the pictures behind the back of the manager and then plays because he's being paid. He wants to use the theatre to make people more musical, but he will never do anything which will be above their heads. He will always be original, and mainly he will have that subtle something which cannot be described, but which might be weakly termed as a communion with crowds. He will be the most important adjunct to his theatre, if he is the right man.

If you are in doubt, ask your prospective man to communicate with me. I'd like to know him anyway. If some music director believes that he is in the wrong theatre,—where he is not appreciated, or where the heads of the house are unable to grasp the idea of real music for theatres, drop me a line. Another manager may want to reach you.

Questions and Answers Discussion

Mr. Charles D. Isaacson, New York City:

I am about to start playing for a picture show in a small town in North Georgia. This manager has installed a photo-player and I would like to ask you if I can get music written especially for this instrument and where it can be purchased.

Also can "cue" sheets for the standard pictures, like the ones given in the MOTION PICTURE NEWS be bought and where?—BESSIE LOWREY, Carrollton, Ga.

There is really no music published for a photo-player. Musicians playing this instrument generally use piano parts from the orchestrations in which the melody is cued in. The orchestral piano part is the most practical thing for the photo-player owing to the fact that it constitutes a condensed orchestration of the composition and indicates woodwind, string instruments and brass effects.

A musician using orchestral piano parts must have the ability to pick between the melody and the accompaniment for use on the photo-player. Music cues are obtainable through MOTION PICTURE NEWS, but they are not for sale anywhere. Music cues can also be had at Belwin, Inc., 701 7th Avenue, N. Y. City, who specialize in this particular field, and are in a position to supply you with appropriate music suitable for the photo-player.—M. W.

Mr. Chas. D. Isaacson, Motion Picture News:

Just finished reading your article entitled "Music For Your Theatre." I wish to compliment you on same. I must admit I enjoyed this story of yours so much that I read it twice.

I intend to write the exhibitors of the Southern territory calling their particular attention to this story, as I know each and every one of them will benefit by it.—R. C. GARY, Atlanta, Ga. (Goldwyn Distributing Corporation).

Further about Mr. Weeks, of the Hil-tonia theatre, is contained in the following letter:

Dear Mr. Isaacson, Motion Picture News:

Your articles are very clever and to the point each week and will open up a new field of endeavor to exhibitors. While I have been harnessing music, as you say in the past, perhaps some new idea may be brought home to me. I hope so. I have done everything I could think of in that line, to writing a war song and featuring it by getting up a chorus of the young girls of 15 or 16 years of the best families and always found that the publicity gained made those things worth while.

I have used singers, and while I didn't advertise the fact, I wanted to make my program attractive, different, wanted the people to say, "Let's go tonight and see what's on," and it always worked well.

Maybe I'll put on a song-writing contest—have thought about it.

Once I put on a singing and dancing contest among the boys and girls. Gave prizes. My idea is to bring the theatre the local people together. Named the theatre after the town, Hil-ton-ia. Well, I've made it pay. That means success. I've given Hil-ton (800 population) an $8,000 theatre; paid for itself in five years. "Music the big Feature." Any little store movie can project a picture, but it takes the music to interpret the true meaning.

So I'm very much in favor of your articles. Hope they will reach the goal for which they are intended. I again wish to thank you for your kindness in the matter and trust that your articles will reach the success which they deserve.—E. C. WEEKS, Hil-ton, N. Y.

Strand to Be Well Ven- tilated

Interior of Strand theatre, Dubuque, Iowa

One of the features that adds greatly to the prestige of the Strand Theatre is the Typhoon Cooling System, installed when the theatre was remodeled. On the roof of the theatre in the prescribed enclosure are two eight-foot fans propelled by a seventy-five-foot motor. They force huge quantities of cold fresh air into the theatre with the result that the Strand has become known as one of the coolest places in town.

Orchestra of Auditorium theatre, Minneapolis

In fact, the theatre is so well ventilated that when passing the cooling air from the theatre is decidedly noticeable. The management declares that the system has more than paid them for the cost of installation—in fact, that both in summer and winter it is one of their greatest assets. BORDEAUX.

The detailed story of the changes effected in this theatre at the time of remodeling was told in the issue of May 15.

Improves Cooper Hewitt Power Factor

THE Cooper Hewitt Electric Company have developed a new type of auxiliary for use with their alternating current lighting units which has raised the power factor of these lamps from 52 to 85 per cent. This has been accomplished by replacing the choke coils of the former auxiliary by a positive low resistance unit, as shown by the diagram. Further advantages of the new auxiliary are a saving of fourteen pounds in weight over the old type, and an increase in the allowable voltage variation, since the new lamp has a regulation of 25 per cent, while that of the old type was only 12 per cent.

The wattage of the new lamp is 430 which has increased the candle power about 12 per cent. Since the tube will operate at 3.8 amperes D.C. normal, a further slight reduction has been made possible, since the auto-transformer need not be as heavy as formerly.

The lamp is adapted to alternating current circuits only, and can be used only on its specified frequency and within its own voltage range.

Everything the Showman Needs on Every Picture Released

"Kiss Me, Caroline!"

(Christie Comedy—Two Reels)

TO judge from the laughter that greets this comedy at the Rialto, there is no doubt of its ability to score with the average audience. "Kiss Me, Caroline!" revolves around a humorous idea—one which has been treated before in comedies and will doubtless be used countless times in the future. Two undergraduates are expelled from college for cutting up didoes. To square things with father, one of them is forced to settle down by entering matrimony and no girls being visible on the horizon, he intrigues his chum to pose as his wife. Here is the opportunity for Bobby Vernon to bring forth his skill at female impersonation. He disguises himself in frills, negligees, and what not, and events look safe for them until a couple of girls happen on the scene. Bobby is determined to be with the flappers much to the chagrin of his chum.

There is a fine spirit of "give and take" to the ensuing episodes with the boys getting deeper and deeper in hot water. Eventually the irate papa comes to the house and asks Bobby to show his affection for his "spouse" by kissing him. In the end the complications are straightened out when the real girls consent to go through with the marriage ceremony. The picture starts in a breezy manner and maintains its pace without resorting to padded incident. Also the element of slapstick is absent which gives it a note of refinement. It should appeal to those patrons who are not too exacting in their demands.—LAURENCE REID.

"Tex of the Timberlands"

(Graphilm Western—Pathé—Two Reels)

THE first of the "Young Buffalo" series of two-reelers produced by Graphilm Corporation and released through Pathé is "Tex of the Timberlands," written by William Addison Lathrop and directed by George Ridgwell. While the story is cut according to the regulation Western pattern it differs because of its authenticity. The idea disclosed is taken from a chapter in the life of "Young Buffalo" who is said to be a successor to Buffalo Bill. Philip Yale Drew, who interprets the character, makes a picturesque appearance and one that appeals to the popular conception of what an old-time hero should represent. Attired in an open shirt with a bandanna about his neck, a fancy vest, chaps and sombrero, and with his curly locks falling to his shoulders, he conjures up in the imagination the hero of a bygone day—of a day when the West had a glamour about it.

The story takes the spectator through a lumbertown camp at the height of its activity. And it serves to provide a pleasing and adventurous line of action. Villains lurk about to make life miserable for him but he foils them in true heroic fashion. A slight romance accompanies the melodramatic incident and offers Else La Tour, the heroine, an opportunity to present an ingratiating personality. The photography is admirable and releases some effective shots. In all "Tex of the Timberlands" augurs well for what is to follow if the succeeding pictures keep to this pattern.—LAURENCE REID.

"The Unconventional Maida Greenwood"

(Two Reel Comedy from "After Thirty" Stories, Starring John Cumberland—Produced by Mrs. Sidney Drew and Released by Pathe)

MRS. Sidney Drew's productions of the Julian Street "After Thirty" stories which promised so much in the beginning seem to have petered out if we are to judge by the last two, especially this latest two-reeler under the title of "The Unconventional Maida Greenwood."

In all fairness it should be stated however that the failure of "Maida" is not to be laid at the door of Mrs. Drew nor is John Cumberland or his supporting cast to blame. In fact, just the opposite may be claimed. Without Mr. Cumberland's clever acting, a skill that grows in finesse as the ages in picture expression, and Mrs. Drew's exceptional direction and carefully constructed titles the offering would be a terrible frost. As it is, "Maida" is an artistic series of episodes in the life of the impressionable "Jimmy" which arrive at no conclusion so far as story goes and which also contain little action or interesting incident.

The picture is so skillfully constructed in individual sequences that the spectator is led to expect that the "point" will be reached sometime but hardly a glimmer of an idea is forthcoming. "Jimmy" fusses around with the unconventional "Maida" until his wife gets home and then goes back to being a good and faithful husband while his wife smiles to herself at his small digressions from the straight and narrow path.—J. S. DICKERSON.

"Ten Nights Without a Barroom"

(Fox Sunshine Comedy—Two Reels)

IT'S here again—the burlesque of the old time "meller" and the expose of the black stage devices. This Sunshine comedy takes us to a small town, where a band of amateurs are staging a benefit. They are to present in the village Opera House, a play of the good old days—with its earnest, noble hero; its "Little Nell" sorely abused and just as badly deceived, and its "Handsome Harry" with his graceful mustache and shining silk hat.

The picture is built upon the assumption that the public likes to laugh at a burlesque of that which made their fathers cry. They are afforded, it is supposed, a biased and superior feeling. Probably this assumption is correct, for many travesties of this type have been well received in recent months. And "Ten Nights Without a Barroom" should be well received, chiefly because of its cast. The development is too much along familiar lines, although there are some new gags. If it was the first of this type of picture to reach the screen, it would have been a world beater, but having had predecessors, it does not mount a new rung in the ladder of screen comedies.

Ethel Tearle is "Little Nell." Slim Somerville is the hero of the show—a hard-working farmer's lad. His lanky form, his tragic air of melancholy and his deadly seriousness about it all, even when he gets a splinter in his hand from stroking the nose of his trusty "steed," provide some of the most laughable stops in the picture.

As the picture goes on it seems to slow down a trifle. The troupe of Sunshine girls are introduced as the "Mansion House waitresses" and do an uninspired dance. We are glad to get back behind stage with the tragedians. The second act starts and more attempts at realism fail. The rain falls all in one spot. The villain is shot with a howie knife instead of a revolver; the man who furnishes the incidental music signals a horse's approach by tooting an auto horn, and the two men who make up the "horse" become separated, and the bisected fiped wanders about the stage in confusion. The picture ends when "Little Nell's" real husband, thinking the affair with her stage lover has gone far enough, breaks up the show.

Edward Cline who is the director, deserves considerable credit, although he has neglected, to a large degree, the potential comedy of the hick audience in front of the footlights. Any picture-goer, who has not been over-fed with a diet of melodrama burlesques, will roar almost continually throughout the two reels.—

DETROIT

Minter United Amusements have taken over half of the top floor of the film building for their new exchange handling Equiv, Pioneer and many state right features. The Pathé exchange has absorbed the space formerly used by the Minter exchange and will soon have one of the finest offices in the building. Offices for Associated Producers also is to be opened in the film building if space can be secured. As the present time the building is full from top to bottom.

John H. Kusky's new home on the Detroit river, in Windsor, is to be completed on Sept. 1.

Robert Churchill, manager of the Robertson-Cole exchange, has resigned.

W. S. McLaren, of the Majestic-Colonial theatres in Jackson, has purchased the Dawn theatre in Hillsdale from George Brookings.

Ralph Preckham has been appointed Detroit manager for Hodgkinson.

A new theatre is announced for Dearborn, a Detroit suburb.

BUFFALO

The Nu-Art Pictures corporation, 421 Franklin street, Fred W. Zimmerman, manager, has taken over the Hallmark exchange, which recently opened in the new Warner building in north Franklin street. F. D. Lawlor, Hallmark manager, and "Bud" Taylor, Triangle manager, will both join the Nu-Art staff. Under the new arrangement, Mr. Zimmerman will handle the entire Hallmark and Triangle output, comprising 1,400 releases and including features, serials and comedies. A. W. Young is now office manager of the Nu-Art exchange and will be in charge while Mr. Zimmerman is on a two-week fishing trip in the Adirondacks, on which he started Monday, July 19. It is rumored that T. W. Brady will take over the Hallmark office in the Warner building for Associated Producers, for whom he is local manager, as the Buffalo exchange.

A Silverman, who has been associated with D. W. Griffith in New York for over a year in an exploitation capacity, has been engaged as a member of the local First National sales staff. City Sales Manager E. O. Hayes has closed accounts with all the representative accounts for the showing of First National features the weeks of August 15 and 22, which will be known as First National Producing Week.

NEW JERSEY

A Motion Picture News representative traveling through the southern New Jersey territory reports the exhibitors on their toes and well satisfied with conditions.

In Atlantic City the representative found the Palace entirely remodelled and opened under the management of H. A. Cineman. J. A. Brodie is the owner of this house, which it is intended to make an all-year-round picture playhouse.

The Virginia, a member of the Stanley chain, has just hung up new house records with a four days' engagement of "The Prince Chap." Joseph H. Snellberg is the energetic manager of this theatre.

In Red Bank the representative found a real live wire manager in the person of J. Clark Conover, of the Strand. The Strand is showing the pick of the pictures with a daily change policy. Proof of the energy Mr. Conover puts into his work is found in the fact that he started in 1917 as manager of the house and is now the owner.

The Park and Liberty theatres, at Atlantic City, each with eight hundred seating capacity, have just installed new organs. W. N. Huilner holds the reins at these houses.

SEATTLE

Although the union operators, musicians and janitors walked out of the theatres managed by the Jensen & Von Herberg theatres in the Northwest cities, the theatres are going along and are crowded the same as before. The strike, it is claimed by some, started by the organ operators, who claimed they did not receive as much as operators in other cities.

The operators in Seattle and other cities did not wish to go on a sympathetic strike, for some were being paid even more than operators in other cities. Consequently, they held back as long as possible. When they finally went out the musicians and janitors were forced to follow, although they did not care to do so.

As J. Willis Sayre, advertising and publicity manager for Jensen & Von Herberg, has left for a month's vacation, George Bell, motion picture editor of the Seattle Times, will attend to this business until Sayre returns.

One hundred and fifty of the leading motion picture exhibitors of the northwestern states, local motion picture exchange men and several representative citizens were the guests of John von Herberg and Claude Jensen at a banquet at the New Washington last week.

The visiting motion picture exhibitors were attending a convention, which had for its purpose the establishment of an affiliation with the First National Exhibitors' Exchange, the northwest franchise of which is owned by Jensen & Von Herberg.

The banquet was a "get together" affair. The successful conduct of the motion picture exhibiting business now demands a close affiliation of those interested, and those in attendance at the banquet were a unit in expressing a desire to cooperate with their fellow exhibitors and to put forth every effort to place the picture business on the high est possible plane.

Short talks were made by J. W. Spangler, L. O. Lukan, J. Fred Braid, Vivian Karkeek, Carl Reiter, T. Koopel, C. J. Fisher, and John von Herberg.

INDIANAPOLIS

S. Barrett McCormick, manager of the Circle theatre in Indianapolis since its erection six years ago, has resigned to become manager of the new Rivoli in Toledo, Ohio. The Olson-Sourbier interests of Indianapolis control the Rivoli. Mr. McCormick's successor is a newcomer to the movie industry. He is Ralph Willard Lieber, who has been connected with an Indianapolis financial institution in a sales capacity for some time.

The Methodist church of Indiana went on the warpath against Sunday movies again July 15, when at a conference of ministers and laymen in Indianapolis a resolution opposing any law to legalize Sunday shows was adopted. It is thought the resolution was adopted for the purpose of influencing the Indiana state legislature, which was in special session at that time, from passing any law of the nature opposed. However, so far as can be learned, theatrical men of the state have no such legislation definitely in mind at the present time. Indiana exhibitors, generally, prefer to let the matter rest quiescent until such a time as public sentiment crystallizes so strongly in favor of Sunday shows that no amount of opposition can stem the tide.

Jack Sennett's "Married Life" had its first showing in Indiana at the Isis in Kokomo four days beginning July 14. All Kokomo liked it, it is reported.

J. A. Bailey, of Swift City, has purchased the Southside Movie theatre in Greensburg, Ind., from William Francis for a reported consideration of $3,500.

A panic in the Liberty theatre at Muncie, Ind., was averted on the night of June 10 by quick motion on the part of Miss Veele M. Manor, ticket seller. Films caught fire in the operator's booth and clouds of smoke began rolling into the auditorium. Miss Manor ran to the front of the theatre, silenced the orchestra, and, briefly, but calmly, told the audience what had happened, cautioning everybody to pass out in an orderly manner. The orchestra struck up a popular air, and the audience responded to Miss Manor's warning quickly but quietly.

Above is shown the City Square Theater, Atlantic City, which, as told elsewhere in this issue, has just passed into the ownership of a group including Edward J. O'Keefe, the manager of the house for the past nine years. Mr. O'Keefe, standing to the right of the photo, eight years ago originated the sale of all-comedy days every two weeks and the institution is still a popular one with his patrons. Many other theaters in the territory have adopted the idea with success.

"THE WORLD AND HIS WIFE"

(Cosmopolitan-Paramount-Artcraft)

Rich Production and Good Acting Save This One

THAT a picture may be saved through its artistic production is admirably brought out in "The World and His Wife," an adaptation of the play of the same name which in turn was founded upon a Spanish poem. The beautiful backgrounds, the tinted photography, the rich and effective settings, many of which are contributed by the scenic artist, Joseph Urban, certainly give tone to a story which has not been treated dramatically here. In the first place it has the very serious fault of detailing psychological analysis through the medium of subtitles. And before the feature has run through its spool, one is "subtitled" to the point of tedium. There is an excellent idea around which the play revolves since it shows the influence of evil gossip. And to bring out its moral effectively those in charge have had no other recourse, but to paint it in platitudinous subtitles.

"The World and His Wife" start their tongues a-wagging and before their gossip bears fruit, a trail of unhappiness and sorrow follows three lives and takes one in its tragic embrace. Subtitles will never be able to present psychological analysis no matter how well argued because certain scenes introduced, destroy the value. And the moral interpreted through pantomime is rendered hors-de-combat. This idea has been worked out before on the screen to the tune of much sub-sister emotion. It is to the credit of Robert C. Vignola that his efforts have not gone entirely to waste. Some of his scenes are mighty effective in establishing the curse of babbling tongues.

He is best, however, in those incidents which revolve around the external conflicts of his characters. The point is well emphasized where the young wife and her platonic love are almost led to believe that they have sinned. And a good climax wherein the husband rises from a sick-bed and catches the youthful pair in an affectionate embrace, is worth recording since it is one of the few moving moments in the play. Montagu Love as the husband, however, plays this bit too strenuously to appear convincing. At other times he is thoroughly in character. Alma Rubens as the young wife, Gaston Glass as the youth; and Charles Gerard as the principal babbler, give an excellent account of themselves. The artistic production compensates somewhat for a draggy plot that is anticipated from the start. Yet in many ways it is a worthy effort to present a good lesson.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

A drama of passion as it flourishes in Spain—a drama of the evils of scandal and its power to create a domestic triangle with its attendant hate and disillusionment is "The World and His Wife," which comes to the theatre next with the beautiful Alma Rubens as the star. This play, which was written by Charles Frederic Nirdlinger, is based upon a Spanish poem, and it is translated with excellent taste into terms of the screen. The leading figures in the domestic tragedy are separated by a score of years. A youth is invited to make his home with them and the World and His Wife start their tongues a-wagging. Suspicion enters the husband's mind until the end and he is forced to believe the scandal. And the innocent parties almost believe that they have been violating the conventions. The picture presents a story of impassioned drama in which mutual trust and respect are discolored. Robert C. Vignola, the director, has given the picture a beautiful production and has handled the plot and the players in a capable manner. The cast is headed by Alma Rubens and Montagu Love and others who assist are Charles Gerard, Pedro de Cordoba and Gaston Glass.

PROGRAM READER

A picture based upon the evils of scandal, the sinister power of gossiping tongues in destroying the happiness of romance is coming to the theatre next in "The World and His Wife." It is a picture of great passion as it flourishes in Spain and is intensely interesting to climaxes in soul-stirring action. The World and His Wife are the onlookers who lurk in the background to scoff, who place a wrong conception on everything they see. They succeed here in wrecking a romance. And the picture builds inexorably to its denouement, sending out on its journey a valuable lesson. The interpretation is in the capable hands of Alma Rubens, Montagu Love, Pedro de Cordoba, Charles Gerard and others. Charles Frederic Nirdlinger wrote the drama which has been scenarized by Frances Marion and directed with infinite taste by Robert C. Vignola.

SUGGESTIONS

This title can be used in several ways for exploitation. It would be well to advise your patrons that the World and His Wife are the outsiders, the parties in the background who are always attempting to discolor facts and place a wrong meaning upon them. Use the theme for some effective arguments. Tell that the picture teaches a worthy lesson in the evils of gossip. Bring out that it is a drama of immeasurable passion told against a background of Spanish life. Bring out that it is a domestic triangle story, strong in romance, intrigue, pathos, conflict, suspense and action. Mention that Alma Rubens and Montagu Love head the excellent cast. Mention that the picture was originally a play and scored a success. Tell something of the director. You can stage an effective prologue based upon the theme.

"THE MISFIT WIFE"

(Metro)

Often Told Story Is Fairly Well Done

THE steady patron of pictures is certain to recognize in "The Misfit Wife" a story which has been buffeted about on the screen for many years. Probably the only reason why it is resurrected here is the fact that it was written by Julie Herne and once served as a play. But it is old stuff and hardly worth visualizing in a day when a constant search is being made for something new. The director might have been less conventional in his treatment and given the story a measure of novelty. However, he has played safe, with the result that the action follows a familiar groove so that the maximum amount of conveniences and coincidences are presented.

It is the old tale of the working girl who marries a scion of wealth and position and regenerates him into a worthy representative of his sex. The situation which shows her as a manicurist in a crude mining town hotel is about the only high spot in a picture of 1910 vintage. When her husband lugs her back to his native heath and introduces her to his family, the conflict enters and the spectator is treated to the orthodox scene in which she is snubbed. The conventions are still obeyed when the young wife is given a course of sprouts in deportment while her better half is away on business. The director deserves a vote of thanks because he has kept the action here from resembling a series of charades. The other women of the household attempt to humiliate her, but she displays her fine character in a spirit of self-sacrifice.

The ultimate climax shows her sister-in-law compromising herself, with the heroine taking the responsibility. This incident is plotted too obviously to be effective. In the end difficulties are straightened out through a last-minute confession from the guilty spouse. "The Misfit Wife" will enter the category of average program pictures. While there has been no imagination expended in its development, nevertheless it pleases after a fashion because of its well arranged sequences. And the sincere and natural acting by Alice Lake. Not forgetting the convincing work by Forrest Stanley. The settings and photography are adequate enough. Would that they might have fitted a more original story, or, if not original, one that had been treated with some novelty. Let it be said that the little "diamond in the rough" is polished to the point where she is able to shine in the best society.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Alice Lake, the Metro star, who created such a good impression in "Should a Woman Tell?" and "Shore Acres" comes to the theatre next in her newest production, "The Misfit Wife," an adaptation of Julie Herne's stage play. "The Outsider" was the part of an awkward little laundress who loses her job and then takes up a career as a manicurist in a crude hotel of the West. Here she meets the dissolute Peter Crandall who has been sent West to cultivate some manhood. A romance blooms into marriage and together they depart for New York, where owing to her lack of refinement she is not welcomed into the best circles.

She has such fine spirit, such depth and understanding, that her husband's people accept her though she is compelled to study in order to learn the social graces. Her dramatic assault upon the affections of her husband's family is then developed into a winning fight, with the East capitulating before the working girl's straightforward methods. The picture carries adequate ingredients which are as effective as the title. Miss Lake continues her able acting in the title role and she is well supported by Forrest Stanley and others. Edwin Mortimer directed, while Lois Zellner and A. P. Younger attended to the adaptation.

PROGRAM READER

His parents had sent him out West to cultivate some manhood. And when he returned with a working girl as his bride, his family realized that she had brought him round to redemption. However, she lacked the social graces to make herself entirely acceptable. It wasn't until she acted in a spirit of self-sacrifice that she was duly appreciated. Her straightforward methods made them capitulate to her charms. This is all told in "The Misfit Wife," an adaptation of Julie Herne's play, "The Outsider," which comes to the theatre next with Alice Lake in the title role. It is an adventure romance which is well punctuated with dramatic moments. The story was adapted by Lois Zellner and A. P. Younger, while Edwin Mortimer was in charge of the production.

SUGGESTIONS

Here is opportunity to make use of the title to create interest. Use your billboards and newspaper space in arousing curiosity. The title can be worked out in appropriate catch lines. Tell that it is an adaptation of Julie Herne's play "The Outsider." Bring out the playwright is the daughter of the late James A. Herne, the author and star of "Shore Acres." Bring out why that the star is Alice Lake, who is rapidly forging to the front through her charm and ability. Tell that this is the third of her starring vehicles, the other two, "Should a Woman Tell?" and "Shore Acres," establishing her as a talented actress. Feature the play as an adventure romance with woman's self-sacrifice as the motif. Mention the other players.

Index to Complete Plan Book and Exhibitors Box Office Reports

EDITOR'S NOTE—Exhibitors will find here a complete list of all feature pictures for last twenty weeks arranged alphabetically as an index to The Complete Plan Book for this period, designating the issue of MOTION PICTURE NEWS which contained the original review.

The following also contains our reviewer's opinion encompassed in a brief single line and gives the comments of exhibitors who have shown the picture and forwarded their opinions. And we also publish a final line fairly summarizing a consensus of all opinions received on each picture. As many of the exhibitors do not comment on every picture (merely checking it Big, Average or Poor), we arrive at the consensus not only by the actual comments made and published, but are also guided by the reports from exhibitors who have made no actual comments, but have merely checked the box office value of the picture.

All the pictures mentioned are five-reel features, unless marked otherwise. Serials are reviewed also. At the conclusion of this department will be found the "Flash-Backs," being comments on films released prior to March 20, 1920.

"A SISTER TO SALOME"

(Fox)

Dream Ending Does Not Save It from Being Hopelessly Tragic

GLADYS BROCKWELL is the star of this, which is another story of ancient Rome combined with a modern tale. The principal characters are reincarnated and the romance continues after a lapse of two thousand years. The picture goes the dream story one better, and proves to be a dream within a dream. This supplies the necessary happy ending, but it does not prevent the bulk of the feature from being far too tragic and overdrawn, as well as untrue to life. In addition there is the danger of bewilderment descending upon the audience.

After an operation, under the influence of the ether, the star, who is a prima donna, dreams of her previous existence in the days of Rome. She is a vampire and practises her art upon a Christian disciple, named Paulus. If a churchgoer assumes this man to be St. Paul (which is naturally enough) he will probably be displeased, for the disciple becomes infatuated with her and later falls in love. After a tragic series of incidents, ending with two deaths, the story skips to the present day where the plot runs along the same lines, forming a kind of analogy. Paulus is now a young minister and the dancing girl a singer. They meet, both recall their previous existence, and fall in love all over again. But the modern Paulus has a wife, and the star, after accidentally killing his father, poisons herself to escape from the villain. Which brings the total casualties up to four. Thereupon she comes out of the ether.

Some of the incidents cannot possibly improve, for they are on the style of the oldtime "movie"—dramatic and unnatural to the point of arousing a laugh of derision from a modern audience. Such a scene is that in which the minister, recognizing the sweetheart of his former existence in his congregation, leaves the pulpit in the middle of his sermon to make love to her. Gladys Brockwell makes a sufficiently seductive vampire in the Roman scenes, and an equally languid beauty later on, although in some scenes she is overburdened with make-up. We do not think an audience will accept the apology i. e., the dream ending, for the unreal series of events.—Length, 5 reels.—Matthew A. Taylor.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"There's nothing new under the sun," is an old saying and a good one. Moving picture devotees will swear by it for seldom do they see a picture that varies in any great degree from the many they have seen before. But they will get a surprise when they see "A Sister to Salome," in which Gladys Brockwell appears at the theatre on..... In treatment, development and plot it is so different from the ordinary run of feature productions that it is bound to leave a startling effect.

"A Sister to Salome" is a dream story—a dream of a popular prima donna, who sees her former existence in ancient Rome, when she lived in the cruel days of Augustus Caesar. These scenes, which constitute the first part of the picture, besides being historically correct and therefore educational, are very elaborate and highly dramatic.

At the scene shifts to modern America, we see a powerful story of the romance of a young minister and a popular actress. Their vocations are widely separated, but love bridges the gap, despite the machinations of a wily doctor who attempts to thwart the romance. But the most startling feature of the production is its ending, which is thoroughly unique and unforeseen, so that it will surprise even the most sophisticated picture goer.

The story was written especially for Miss Brockwell by Julius Furthman, and the star, who is equally attractive as the seductive Roman maiden, and the wealthy actress, is ably assisted by William Scott, Edwin Booth-Tilton and Ben Deely.

PROGRAM READER

Is there such a thing as a dual existence—a return of the same personality to this earth, after a lapse of two thousand years? Whether this is probable or not, the question makes interesting material for discussion, and still better material for a motion picture, and such is "A Sister to Salome," which will be seen at this theatre on..... Gladys Brockwell is the star. She plays the role of a seductive Roman dancing girl of the days of the Christian martyrs, and also of a successful prima donna of the American stage. There is romance running through both stories, which are cleverly co-ordinated and serve to make the picture twice as thrilling as the ordinary, stereotyped drama. In addition, there is pathos, stirring drama, and rapid thrills in the way of action. It is the type of production that reaches the screen only occasionally, and is one you cannot afford to miss.

SUGGESTIONS

While this is not what is generally known as a "mystery" picture, it would be best to exploit it as such, emphasizing the fact that it has a highly original ending. This is, of course, the dream-within-a-dream idea. Appeal to the Gladys Brockwell following by lobby photographs if possible. Show stills of the ancient story, and get over the settings in your catch lines.

CATCH LINES

He denounced her from the pulpit, yet he loved her.

A story of ancient Rome and the America of today. In that pagan world of long ago, love ruled all, and defeated even death; just as it does in this land of Christianity. Gladys Brockwell in a supreme story of thrills, mystery and action.

"THE MUTINY OF THE ELSINORE"

(Shurtleft-Metro)

Rich Entertainment in This Realistic Jack London Story

THERE is no question about this adaptation of a Jack London story being a regular, full grown "he-man" picture. The author always wrote in terms of vivid action, his plots and characters being vital and sharply defined. "The Mutiny of the Elsinore" easily takes the prize for being the most graphic and picturesque sea story that was ever told on the screen. The striking point in its visualization is the remarkable realism that accompanies the gripping incident. It is a picture of "he-men" for "he-men," and doubtless the feminine portion of an audience will shudder at the rugged character of the tale, the fact that it revolves around a mutiny on the briny deep and the vivid and clear-cut interpretation by the star and his capable assistants.

The director has fashioned his scenes so that realism is the keynote. Every detail is there that should be and nothing is presented that is out of harmony. The continuity is compact, the sequences being closely related, with emphasis placed upon the climaxes. "The Mutiny of the Elsinore" isn't a study in brutality, however. It has its tender moments which afford it an adequate balance. Yet it is a tale of the sea and its vigorous sweep is as certain as the tide itself. Painstaking effort is visible everywhere in making it faithful. The schooner, the cut-throats who compose the crew, the stern and relentless skipper, the mutiny itself, the storm-tossed deck with the rain and wind raising havoc—these are details and incidents which are thoroughly compelling.

A prologue introduces the reason for the hero following the sea and when the old skipper is killed the younger man takes charge. And his object is to take care of the schooner and see that it provides an ample income for the skipper's son. Humorous moments are provided when the new skipper forces the youth to join the crew. The romance is given up to the lad and a ward of the old man and it also has its note of conflict. Then the mutiny takes shape, inspired by a vengeful cut-throat. And it is true to life because the hero battles, unsuccessfully, against great odds, though he lives to sail again. Mitchell Lewis is an ideal choice for the part of the skipper and he plays the part convincingly. Great character studies are rendered by William V. Mong and Noah Beery, Jr. Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

A virile story of the sea is "The Mutiny of the Elsinore," by Jack London. Adapted to the screen it takes on a force and vitality which will be felt by every spectator when it comes to the theatre next..... the rugged star, Mitchell Lewis, in the leading role. Albert Shelby Le Vino, who adapted the tale, has taken its graphic points and moulded them into an absorbing subject. And Edward Sloman, the director, has added a typical London touch through his graphic atmosphere which is expressed in terms of compelling realism.

The story depicts the adventures of John Pike during the cruise of the Elsinore. His captain, Nathaniel Somers, is the victim of an assassin, and he takes charge of the schooner in order to provide a source of income to the skipper's son, Dick. The latter dislikes the sea, but Pike forces him to go along in order to keep his obligations to Margaret West, the daughter of a former half-owner of the Elsinore. The crew is composed of cutthroats and at the first opportunity they mutiny, forcing Pike to battle for his life. It is the mutinous scene which gives vigor to the action and stamps the picture as one of the most realistic that was ever presented on the screen. Mr. Lewis is an ideal type for the part he portrays and his assistants are thoroughly in character.

PROGRAM READER

Jack London's stories are easily adapted to the screen. He wrote in terms of graphic action, there being a rich vein of adventure in all of his subjects. As a writer of sea stories he has never been excelled. "The Cruise of the Elsinore" is the latest of his tales of the briny deep to be translated for the screen. Patrons of the theatre are assured of exceptionally fine entertainment when the picture comes here next..... It tells a tale of thrilling action—action which is punctuated with genuine thrills and realistic incident. It is not a mere statement when we declare it to be the most graphic sea story ever told on the screen. Mitchell Lewis is the star and he gives one of his rugged performances. Edward Sloman directed the picture.

CATCH LINES

He was put in command of the Elsinore after the skipper's death. And he kept his word by subduing the most mutinous crew that ever scuttled a ship. See the thrilling picture, "The Cruise of the Elsinore," by Jack London.

"THE FIGHTING CHANCE"

(Paramount-Artcraft)

Robert W. Chambers' Best-Seller Provides Fair Entertainment

IT isn't an easy task to translate Robert W. Chambers upon the screen. His skill at drawing the psychological processes of the mind cannot be brought out effectively because subtitles are unable to cope with descriptive dialogue. The spectator is forced to dramatize the subtleties, the innuendoes, the figures of speech that compose the action and conversation of his characters because "cold pantomime" is a weak substitute. Naturally such a course is fatal. While "The Fighting Chance" was interesting reading, via the printed page, it fails as good screen material. One is taxed to interpret the whims and fancies of each character, whereas in the book these are effectively translated. The subject becomes decidedly "wishy-washy," due to its lack of vitality.

There is a worthy theme which stands as the framework of the story since it presents the power of a woman's love and sympathy in regenerating a man, the victim of hereditary influence. Somehow it is not made the most of here. While the picture is faithfully adapted as far as its outstanding incident is concerned, yet so much is told in the book in the way of effective dialogue that those who remember the tale will notice a wide gulf in entertainment values. The characters seemingly walk about and their actions, obviously, planted, so that the forcefulness of the lesson is lost. The heroine is engaged to an unscrupulous millionaire simply for the sake of his money and she has a problem on her hands deciding whether to accept him or the apparently incurable drunkard. Finally she offers her heart to the latter, realizing that his unquenchable thirst is the lesser of the two evils. But only after her fiancé is conveniently killed in a quarrel.

There is no doubt that Conrad Nagel's easy performance in the part of the regenerated hero saves the picture. He brings a finesse, a poise and understanding to the characterization which reacts upon the spectator's sympathy. In the hands of a less skillful player, the figure would have been dismissed as a likely saphead. Anna Q. Nilsson makes the character of Sylvia quite convincing. She is a typical Chambers heroine insofar as outward appearance is concerned. The Chambers subtleties, however, are missing to make her the delightful creature of the book. The locations and atmosphere are truly artistic, Charles Maigne seeing to it that the picture carries tone and quality. But as dramatic entertainment it is rather weak.—Laurence Reid.

"MOON MADNESS"

(Haworth-Robertson-Cole)

Commonplace Story Has Artistic Settings

THEY have exploited this feature as a "special," although there is nothing about the story to indicate why it should be placed in the distinctive class. In fact the author has fashioned a hackneyed and commonplace subject on a theme that has become considerably warped in screen circles. It is a tale of the Orient and the Occident and presents a heroine of French blood brought up among the Bedouins, who attempts to find romance among her own people. There is no logic in the conduct of her father, from whom she is separated when an infant, and who conveniently stays in the background for twenty years for the express purpose of exacting vengeance upon the man who stole his wife and child. At the opportune moment he comes forward and his patience is rewarded with swift and proper punishment.

The value of the title figures in the romantic fervor of the Bedouin lover to whom she pledges her heart, until the French philanderer comes into the scene and attempts his evil conquest. Mind you she has been brought up in ignorance of the outside world, yet she gladly accepts his hospitality and love like a born vampire. She is lured to France and domiciled in a handsome studio. Where the story breaks down is in her attitude of playing upon his passion by appearing in decollé, then chastizing him because he is unable to keep his philandering tactics under control. It hardly seems reasonable that the heroine would accept his hospitality and look unkindly upon his advances at the same time. It is like straining at a gnat and swallowing a camel. When events loom up disastrously, the father exacts his vengeance and she falls into the arms of the faithful Bedouin.

It is a cut and dried story any way you look at it, the action being hackneyed and obvious to the extreme. The director has not wasted his opportunity, however, in bringing out the climaxes. And his backgrounds are truly suggestive. A rainstorm is effective, and the desert scenes are appropriate. The characterization is faulty, however, it hardly being logical that a girl brought up in the environment of the desert could become so easily a woman of the world. The subtitles are decidedly weak. Some are preachy, some are crude and all of them shoot wide of the mark. The players fill their parts adequately. Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"Moon Madness," which comes to the ——— theatre on ——— of the ——— week with Edith Storey and an excellent supporting cast, is a picture which contains the necessary elements of good drama—plot, finished acting and a worthy production. The story has for its main theme, the romance of youth, and in the development of the plot, the spectator's emotions are played upon as keenly as though he, himself, were living through the scenes portrayed. The situations are compact with interesting incident and are embellished with truly artistic backgrounds.

Miss Storey has never appeared to better advantage than as the tempestuous French girl reared under the code of the Bedouin in the African desert. She is adopted by a tribe when a child and brought up ignorant of the outside world. Although she is attracted to the chieftain's son, love doesn't come to her until she meets a man of her own race. And he offers an unworthy love. From that moment she is changed into a woman, who, by her fascinating charm, brings to her feet the very man who had scorned her. Eventually she realizes that the Bedouin can bring her happiness. The cast includes such favorites as Wallace MacDonald, William Courtleigh and Sam de Grasse. J. Grubb Alexander wrote the story while Colin Campbell directed.

PROGRAM READER

"Moon Madness," which comes to the ——— theatre next ——— is one of those photoplays which stand out as an entertaining feature through sheer beauty of background and photography as well as story interest and superior acting. The tale, dealing with the love adventures of a French girl brought up a Bedouin in the African desert, is a highly dramatic one, and it plots the players through scenes of most absorbing action. How the heroine decides the test of love—how she is changed from an ignorant girl into a woman of the world is told in a most interesting way. Edith Storey is the star and Wallace MacDonald is the leading man. J. Grubb Alexander wrote the subject which is directed by Colin Campbell.

SUGGESTIONS

It would not be advisable to detail the plot here to attract patronage. In the first place it offers nothing original. So concentrate with your arguments upon the artistic production, which gives it the chief point of interest. Tell that the photography is excellent and that the picture hasn't been excelled in some time for its lavish appointments. Feature it as an adventure-romance which has for its theme the search for love and happiness. Feature the star and tell that she comes back to the screen after a long absence.

"THE HIDDEN CODE"

(Sulmac-Pioneer)

Frankly a Thriller, and Nothing More

THE foreword flashed on the screen, and the fact that the whole five reels are supposed to be only the visualization of a popular novel which a girl is reading, serve as a hint as to the aim of this production. It is a feature developed as serials are developed—a mass of action from beginning to end, with an occasional thrill thrown in.

Little attention is paid to anything else except the adventure and the continued action—the endless pursuit of the heroine by the band of villains in motor-boats, autos and on foot; the countless fist fights between two men, and the inevitable reappearance of the mustache, immaculate villain to indulge in more pursuing and more fighting—all this is the only asset of the picture, and it is sufficient to keep up the excitement of an audience who care nothing for romantic drama, or novelty of plot, or character development.

The story revolves around a newly discovered explosive. An eccentric old chemist, in order to keep the formula from his enemies, burns it in a hidden code upon the shoulder of his daughter in disappearing chemicals. The head of an explosive manufacturing company is the hero, and a band of crooks, who are headed by a woman and make their headquarters in a serial-like cellar, are seeking to learn the secret and make their fortunes. One of these crooks is attempting to double-cross his associates, and, with these three opposing parties, it is easy to see what action can be developed. There is no pre-eminent daredevil stunt in the picture, but there are some good fight scenes in a river and a slightly exciting auto chase. In order to place the girl in the villain's power, they have given him the gift of hypnotism over her. No sooner is she rescued than he casts his spell-binding eyes upon her and she is helpless once more. Close-ups of the two pair of eyes do not get over this hypnotism idea very well.

Grace Davidson makes a beautiful heroine, but has few opportunities.—Length, 5 reels.—Matthew A. Taylor.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

What is said to be a modern Arabian Nights story will be the attraction at the theatre on "The Hidden Code." The title and it is a succession of thrilling moments and will satisfy the most adventurous person. There is no deep sex problem thrashed out in this production and no dainty ingenu who's greatest accomplishment is to wear elaborate gowns. It is a story of action and adventure and is intended solely to thrill the world-weary business man. The story revolves around a lost formula for a powerful explosive. An eccentric old chemist, the inventor of this potent agent of destruction, has written the formula on his daughter's shoulder in a secret code with disappearing chemicals. After his death his enemies seek to kidnap the girl and from her learn the secret that will make them their fortune.

Grace Davidson, one of the most beautiful actresses on the screen, plays this important role in such a way that insures her continued popularity as a screen actress. Love, intrigue and unabating excitement continue one upon the other, as the unscrupulous crooks keep up their efforts to obtain the hidden code. It is a picture of endless surprises, tense moments, and one that will do just what its makers intended—make you forget the workaday world and its troubles for a solid hour and lead you into a land of adventure and thrills.

PROGRAM READER

All that you tired business men and women need in the line of amusement is something that will bring back those golden days of childhood—days that loved adventure, excitement and thrills. The makers of "The Hidden Code," which will be shown at this theatre on Friday, worked on this theory. They have made a picture that is so full of these elements that it holds the attention every moment it is on the screen. There is no eternal triangle, quadrangle, or any other kind of angle in this picture. It is just a vivid picturization of those stories of intrigue and romance that made you happy not so long ago. It revolves around a powerful explosive, the formula for which has been written in code upon a girl's shoulder with disappearing chemicals. From this moment there is no abatement of the interest, as you watch the band of crooks at work in their efforts to obtain the formula and earn their fortune. "The Hidden Code" is a welcome relief from the heavy, tragic, and mawkish society dramas that crowd the screen today.

SUGGESTIONS

You can run a teaser campaign in the local newspaper, reading: "Lost: the formula for the powerful explosive, 'Amnitide.' Finder will return to the theatre on Friday. Place in front of your theatre a sign with a few hieroglyphics on it, and underneath the words, 'This is the 'Hidden Code.' To solve it means a fortune." Another teaser campaign could be a sign in shop window reading: "Government has new explosive! Mystery of 'The Hidden Code' finally solved."

CATCH LINES

A powerful story of adventure and mystery—and a little love thrown in—a picture that will prove one of the outstanding events in screendom for the year.

A picture that rivals the Arabian Nights for thrills and adventure.

"GOING SOME"

Very Good Entertainment But Not Much Like the Original

IN adapting the famous Rex Beach-Paul Armstrong farce of "college and cowboys" to the screen Goldwyn has taken some of the principal character of the original, borrowed "Ma Pettin'gill" from the "Billy Fortune" stories, invented a plot concerning an oil well deal, thrown in a little ex-soldier atmosphere and threatened to mix in a divorce action for spice and from this pot pourri of new and old evolved a picture of more than passing interest. Cullen Landis plays the part of "Speed" and continues to impress as a promising juvenile, while Snitz Edwards has the role of "Willie, the Four Eyed Gent," and Lillian Hall plays "Helen."

The cast is a long one and has been carefully selected as to types. Harry Beaumont directed and to his credit should go a great deal of the picture's entertaining qualities since it is full of good incident in which the comedy element is brought to the fore.

The production opens with some good scenes purporting to be a Yale track and then emigrates to the West where care has also been taken to provide the correct atmosphere. It is possible that some scenes may not mean a great deal to those not familiar with the original since it is apparent that in cutting several sequences have been almost eliminated, but all this will be overlooked in the wealth of good business that has been provided.

The titles used are especially good and the photography is up to standard. The feature may be classed as a comedy-drama, the purely farcical idea of the play having been eliminated and the story material bolstered by injecting the oil well plot.—Length, 6 reels.—J. S. Dickerson.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Rex Beach's spontaneous farce comedy and popular novel "Going Some," has been adapted for the photoplay and will be the stellar attraction at the theatre for a few days' engagement beginning Friday.

The public will not need to be introduced to the famous characters of one of Mr. Beach's most humorous yarns, "Speed," the Yale "head yeller," "Willie, the four-eyed gent," "Helen," who was strong for athletics and all the other unique personages of the novel and play.

Cullen Landis, who will be remembered especially for his role of the "Curly Kid" in "The Girl from Outside," has the principal part in "Going Some" and is supported by such chair actors as Walter Hiers, Snitz Edwards and Lillian Hall. Much of the comedy of the original has been retained in the photoplay and patrons of the theatre are assured an evening's entertainment that is seldom equalled.

PROGRAM READER

"Going Some," the Rex Beach-Paul Armstrong novel and play, comes to the theatre in picture form next week. This announcement is a matter of pride with the management for in presenting this new feature from the Beach-Goldwyn program, we feel assured of offering one of the most entertaining films of the year. "Going Some" is a play of "cowboys and college boys" having to do with the experiences of Wally Speed, "head yeller" at Yale, who in order to make a big thing of the oil well, poses as a runner, who will compete for the honor of the Flying Heart ranch and against the Centipede cook. Cullen Landis is "Speed," and then there is "Willie," the best two-gun man this side of the Santa Fe," and all the other unique characters of Mr. Beach's famous story, all played by a great cast of types especially created by the author and Harry Beaumont, director, who has been transferred from Tom Moore pictures for the filming of "Going Some." "Going Some" assures you an evening of rare fun and entertainment.

SUGGESTIONS

Bill the title and the names of the author above anything else but give Cullen Landis and Walter Hiers mention, calling attention to their previous pictures. We would suggest that you give Harry Beaumont some billing, stating that he has previously been Tom Moore's director and giving a list of some of his best pictures. In order to make the picture more interesting, "Willie" offers opportunities. Select a small, spare man of middle age and provide him with old-fashioned spectacles, a Western outfit including two guns, for a ballyhoo. Dress half your lobby with college flags and other "rah-rah" stuff and the other side with cowboy material such as saddles, ropes, etc. Over the entrance place a sign reading "A Play of College and Cowboys." For newspaper displays use stills that show the footage and the training camps, playing up the comedy angles. For a prologue use a western drop showing two ranch houses in the distance and light for night. Have half a dozen cowboys, including "Willie," bring about talking about the approaching footrace and the chances they have of winning from the Centipede bunch. One of the cowboys raises a bottle to drink, to be broken when a short runs out off stage. Then a heavy woman's voice orders them to "vamoso." If you desire to work up an elaborate prologue consult the first part of the novel where you will find practically all lines and business of the stage play written out.

CATCH LINES

It was "Play or pay," but Speed couldn't run fast enough to best a tortoise and his opponent was "Whiz Long," an A. E. F. champion. How did he win? That is the secret that the picture discloses.

"LIFE'S TWIST"

(Robertson-Cole)

Has Entertaining Values Which Should Interest

ALTHOUGH this picture is of the usual brand selected for Bessie Barriscale in that the society element is predominant, it gives the star an opportunity to display her versatility, for she plays a dual role.

In one part she is seen as the wealthy girl whose mother is anxious to have her enter society through a marriage with a man of good family, but with little money.

The marriage takes place, but unhappiness sets in when the young wife discovers that her husband loves her only for the money she possesses.

This leads to an estrangement between the couple. But the husband finally realizes that he loves his wife and endeavors to become reconciled with her.

The other part shows the star as a poor girl of the slums who resembles the wife and in whom the husband seeks forgetfulness.

In the end he finds that his love is only for his better half and it is through the efforts of the "girl of the slums" that they are reunited.

Interwoven in the story in another role, played by King Baggot, which gives enough contrast to keep up the interest.

Although the action is a bit draggy in spots, the picture is well produced, has a good cast and should interest wherever played.—Length, 5 reels.—Frank Leonard.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Bessie Barriscale in her latest Robertson-Cole feature, "Life's Twist," will be the attraction at the theatre on ——— of ——— week.

In this picture Miss Barriscale is seen in a dual role, one as Muriel Chester, a petted, pampered daughter of wealth and the other as Tina Pierce, a little tenement girl.

The skillful way in which the star portrays the two parts should interest her many admirers, especially as she is backed up by a story which authors and dramatists often strive for in vain—universal appeal.

As the young society girl she marries a man whom she loves and whom she believes loves her. But a sad awakening comes when she discovers that her husband has married her only for the money she possesses.

Humiliated and indignant, Muriel adopts a course of cold indifference towards her husband and in the meantime falls in love with her brother. The splendid character of the woman he has married and follows her to realize the splendid character that he conceives a plan involving a little tenement girl who resembles his wife, and which brings the story to a startling and novel conclusion.

PROGRAM READER

Girls, what would you do if on your wedding night you found out that the man you married did not love you but wanted you only for the money you possessed? Would you refuse to live with him and have the marriage annulled or would you—well what would you do?

Bessie Barriscale, in her latest Robertson-Cole feature, "Life's Twist," finds herself facing this situation as Muriel Chester, a young society girl.

The production will be shown at this theatre on ——— of next ——— those who care for a story with a vital and dramatic theme and one which will interest to the very end, should see Miss Barriscale in this feature.

For the role of the society girl is only one of the two parts which the star portrays. The other being the undeveloped, ragged product of the great city's slums.

These two characters, extreme in contrast, are interpreted by Miss Barriscale in masterly fashion.

The cast is a strong one and includes Walter McGrail, King Baggot, Claire Du Brey and Truly Shattock.

SUGGESTIONS

Bessie Barriscale is your big exploitation angle in this one, for she plays two roles and gives a splendid characterization in both.

Do not forget, however, to play up the story which is a good one, especially from an exploitation angle.

The principal scenes are those in which the young wife, dejected and humiliated at the thought that her husband loves her only for the money she possesses, adopts a course of cold indifference towards him, and the scenes in which the husband seeks forgetfulness with another woman.

Play these sequences up as strongly as you can in your town papers and run as many catch lines as you can upon them.

And do not forget that the cast is a good one and includes such prominent players as King Baggot, Walter McGrail, Claire Du Brey and Truly Shattock.

CATCH LINES

He married her for her fortune and she found it out. What did she do? See "Life's Twist," it will tell you.

In what way did he discover that he loved her when his first thought was of the money she possessed? See "Life's Twist."

Her mother, anxious to get into society, engineered a marriage between her daughter and a man who did not love her. How did it turn out? See "Life's Twist."

"UNDER NORTHERN LIGHTS"

(Universal)

Interest and Incident Strong in This One

STORIES of Canadian border life with the Northwest Mounted Police playing prominent roles and the French inhabitants introduced to give a proper balance, are always interesting, for the spirit of the French, counterbalanced by the stern discipline of the M. P.'s, gives the right blending provided the story has entertaining value.

"Under Northern Lights" is a picture of this type with the elements of romance, incident and dramatic moments mixed in the proper portions.

Interest is aroused when the young mounted policeman falls in love with the French girl and it never lags from beginning to end.

To give the story contrast and action two characters are introduced, one the girl's brother and the other, "the bold bad man." These two characters furnish plenty of action and "put up" a thrilling fight in which the villain is killed.

And then a very touching moment is that which follows, when the young officer is called upon to decide between love and duty. When his decision is made it is on the side of the law and he arrests the brother.

But the latter escapes when opportunity presents itself, the lover nearly losing his life in a shooting affray which follows.

Comedy relief is also furnished in the form of a negro who is always "seeing things." It is ludicrous indeed when he is seen pursued by a young bear, who does not hesitate to climb a ladder, in his efforts to "get" the negro.

This picture should give satisfaction wherever played. Length, 5 reels.—Frank Leonard.

PRESS NOTICE STORY

"Under Northern Lights," Universal's latest production with a prominent cast will be the attraction at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week. It is a picture that is full of incident, dramatic moments and romance, the being laid in Canada where the Northwest Mounted Police hold sway over the domain.

This picture is given a new twist in that the French inhabitants play a prominent part and lend a certain charm which is sure to excite interest.

Douglas MacLeod, a constable of the Royal Northwest Mounted Police, is in love with Suzanne Fouchard. She is a beautiful girl and loves the young constable with all her heart.

Her brother returns from a mining trip and becomes involved with a "bad man" a thrilling fight in which the latter is caught cheating, the result of which is a fight now up to the constable to arrest the young man and in this he is called upon to decide between love and duty. When his decision is made it is on the side of the law and he arrests the brother, who escapes at an opportune moment, the young officer nearly losing his life in a shooting affray which follows.

The result of the latter scenes bring the young couple together, their love growing stronger.

PROGRAM READER

Manager ——— announces that the Universal feature, "Under Northern Lights," will be the attraction at this house on ——— of ——— week.

This feature should attract interest from the fact that it is a picture of the great outdoors filled with incident, dramatic moments and romance.

The locale is laid in Canada among the French-Canadians, with the Northwest Mounted Police playing prominent roles.

The principal characters are Douglas MacLeod, a constable in the Royal Northwest Mounted Police and Suzanne Fouchard, a beautiful French-Canadian.

Romance enters their lives and they are about to be married, when a brother of the young girl appears on the scene.

He becomes involved in a bitter quarrel with a "bad man" because he discovers the latter cheating at cards, the result of which is a thrilling fight in which the villain is killed. And then the young officer is called upon to decide between love and duty.

What decision did he make and what was the result? See "Under Northern Lights," and let it tell you.

SUGGESTIONS

This is an interesting picture especially from the story angle. Exploit it as strongly as you can, it contains the elements of interest.

If you care for street advertising a good idea would be to dress up some young fellow in the uniform of the Canadian Mounted, place him upon a horse with a pole streamer attached to the stirrup announcing the feature, and let him ride through the town.

As stories of this kind always excite interest you should try and run as many short accounts as possible of the principal sequences in your town papers.

For instance, the scene in which the young constable decides between love and duty could be played up in many ways.

Tell your patrons that it is a story of the great outdoors with the elements of romance, incident and dramatic moments intermingled.

And do not forget to mention the comedy elements introduced by the negro, especially his scenes with the bear.

CATCH LINES

She loved him with all her heart and he loved her. And then something happened which interrupted their romance. What was it? See "Under Northern Lights."

"GO AND GET IT"

(Neilan-First National)

Fast-Moving Melodrama Furnishes Thrills and Excitement

YOU can take off your hats to Marshall Neilan for putting forth one of the most entertaining melodramas of the season. "Go and Get It" is modeled on the lines of a serial which means that it stretches beyond the lines of plausibility and possibility. But that is nothing against it. The fact that it holds the attention through its fast-moving action with the sequences compact and following one another with perfect continuity, and providing an unadulterated quota of thrills are sufficient proof of its power to intrigue the imagination. Two distinct plots with minor counterplots present the series of incidents—yet the scenes are so deftly directed that one can follow the most intimate detail without becoming entangled in the familiar serial skein.

While it is rampant melodrama there seems to be a reason for everything. Even for the humor which comes at a time when one is gasping for breath. The details are perfectly executed so that the offering has the appearance of being well rehearsed. "Go and Get It" in its main plot has to do with newspaper life. A crooked publisher is determined to weaken the circulation of the paper so that he may buy it. His star reporter gathers in several scoops which somehow leak out to the rival sheet. The other thread in the narrative is like a page from Poe at his graphic best.

A feminine interviewer is sent out to cover a surgeon and his amazing discovery wherein he transplants a human's brain into the head of an ape. A murder occurs. And several more. And the two reporters are determined to run the astounding crimes to earth. Here is where the picture uncovers its quota of thrills. They know that the surgeon had an ape who has disappeared. By reading his diary they are able to piece together the evidence. The dead convict's brain is active again in the gorilla who exacts vengeance upon his persecutors just as he had promised to do when sentenced to hang. An aeroplane, a seaplane, a passenger train, and a steamer are called into service. And stunt after stunt is offered. The picture travels on high throughout and only loses its punch when the assassin is caught and the publisher punished. The two reporters are rewarded with the posts lately vacated by the publisher and his city editor. Pat O'Malley and Agnes Ayres play these parts convincingly. Wesley Barry scores again as the boy comic.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Marshall Neilan's latest contribution to the screen is "Go and Get It," which will come to the theatre beginning _____ with a cast that includes such prime favorites as Pat O'Malley, Agnes Ayres, Wesley Barry, J. Barney Sherry, and others. "Go and Get It" is said by many to be the melodramatic treat of the season. Certainly there is no doubt that it entertains since it presents fast-moving action, a full portion of thrills, a rich flavor of adventure, suspense, romance and humor.

It details the adventures of a newspaper reporter who is determined to bring his crooked publisher to account. While gathering evidence in this direction, his "nose for news," involves him in the task of running several murders to earth. He is accompanied in his assignment by a feminine interviewer who is sent out to get a story about an eminent surgeon's amazing discovery. The latter has experimented successfully in substituting the brain of a man for that of a gorilla thus giving the animal the impulse to exact vengeance upon the persecutors in the mind of the man. They solve the mysteries after undue complications, unmask the villainy of the publisher, and are rewarded with their own romance and the editorship of the paper. Marion Fairfax scenarioized the story.

"THE GIRL IN THE WEB"

(Hampton-Pathe)

A Splendid Production from All Angles

JESSE D. HAMPTON has produced one of the most beautiful pictures the writer has ever seen, as far as production qualities go, in "The Girl in the Web."

It is really a pleasure to sit and watch the screening of a picture of this type where scene after scene is flashed upon the screen showing either beautiful landscape shots or interiors that are up to date in arrangement.

The exteriors in this feature stand out because of the fact that they have been taken at the right angle, causing plenty of sunlight to fall upon the faces and forms of the actors which gives a splendid effect. And then again they have been selected with exquisite care.

Careful direction of a good story is another important factor in the making of this feature, for the action is never blurred, but is brought out in such a quiet, natural painting way that the sun-titles could be eliminated, so to speak, and yet the action could be understood.

The story has a rather new twist in that, it is an erring daughter and not a son who turns thief and robs the family safe of its valuable jewels in order to pay off old gambling debts. But she repents in the end through the efforts of a young private secretary.

Blanche Sweet in the latter role is convincing at all times and gives a splendid performance. She has to share honors, however, with a good cast among whom are Thomas Jefferson, Adele Farrington, Haywood Mack, Christine Mayo and Negel Barrie.

The picture which is full of incident and dramatic moments has a surprise finish which should interest those who see it. Length, 6 reels. —Frank Leonard.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Blanche Sweet, in her latest Jesse D. Hampton production for Pathe release, will appear at the _____ theatre beginning _____ of _____ week.

From a production standpoint this picture is by far the most satisfying Miss Sweet has done to date, and in the opinion of the reviewers it is one that should make a host of new friends for the star.

The picture contains many beautiful exteriors which are a delight to the eye and the direction is such that the story which is full of incident, dramatic moments and romance, is told in a way that is most pleasing to witness.

The story has a rather new twist in that it is an erring daughter and not a son who turns thief and robs the family safe of its valuable jewels in order to pay off old gambling debts. But she repents in the end through the efforts of a young secretary.

Blanche Sweet is seen in the latter role and gives a splendid performance which is equaled by a well selected cast.

PROGRAM READER

If you want to see a splendid production, one that will excite your emotions to the highest pitch and make you feel that you have witnessed something worth while, don't fail to see Blanche Sweet in "The Girl in the Web," a Jesse D. Hampton feature released through Pathe, which will appear at this theatre on _____ week.

Romance, dramatic moments and incident abound in this picture, which is considered by reviewers to be the best production Miss Sweet has appeared in to date. As the young secretary whose efforts to bring about an understanding in a wealthy family which seems on the edge of a precipice through the erring ways of a married daughter, the star is at her best.

The erring one seems to hesitate at nothing, even to robbing the family safe of its valuable jewels in order to pay off old gambling debts, until she is conquered by the strong will of the star.

Miss Sweet is convincing in the role she plays and is supported by a capable cast.

SUGGESTIONS

This is a good picture in every way and you can go as far as you like in advertising it without being afraid of a comeback.

Send out as many letters or cards as you can to your patrons with a little detailed account of the story, and place as many stills as you can in the neighboring stores or hotels.

Play up the part of the erring daughter as strongly as you can in your town papers, for it will certainly make good copy.

The story has a surprise finish in that the detective hired by the erring one to secure her child from kidnappers, turns out to be the kidnapper himself. And all the while you believe it is her husband who has committed the crime. Play this up. And don't forget the star or cast.

CATCH LINES

She would gamble, and of course got into trouble. How did she get out of it? See "The Girl in the Web."

She hesitated at nothing, even to robbing the family safe. How did she come out? See "The Girl in the Web."

Why did the husband tell the wife that he was tired of her? See "The Girl in the Web," it will tell you.

"FIREBRAND TREVISON"

(Fox)

Buck Jones Practically Duplicates His Last Picture

IF you have shown "Forbidden Trails," Jones' previous picture, this latest production may seem familiar to your audience. Both stories are accredited to Charles Alden Seltzer, and the plots are almost identical, the picture being simply dressed up with different sets, incidents and stunts. The star is the owner of a Western ranch, which the heavy, played by Stanton Heck, is trying to steal from him by corrupting the judge. Winifred Westover is the railroad president's daughter, abused by the villain and saved by Trevison. These people were seen in the same roles in the previous picture.

Jones does his best stunts to date in this picture. One thrill especially will make them hold their breaths. The star's horse is shot from under him as horse and rider are descending a perilously steep hill. Jones somehow seems to shoot five feet in the air and the horse turns into a first class acrobat.

The picture is replete with fights. The villain begins his villainy very early, and as a result there is a rough and tumble affair between him and the star that leaves both in a gory and torn condition. An effective make-up adds to this effect. Jones also shows off his broncho-breaking ability as well as lassoing runaway ponies.

The climax proves good for another thrill. The star shoots the heavy (who, however, draws first, and very evidently aims at the roof) and overcomes several corrupted deputy sheriffs.

The villainy just oozes out of Stanton Heck. We still fear that the patrons will consider it a little overdone. Winifred Westover makes an attractive appearance, but there is a monotonous sameness about her in every scene. The remainder of the cast is not called upon for any great amount of acting.

Jones should continue to gain admirers. He is attractive and has a pleasant personality.—Length, 5 reels.—Matthew A. Taylor.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Buck Jones, star of "Firebrand Trevison," which will be shown at the amount of histrionic talent with unlimited daring and unsurpassed horsemanship. He proves all this in his latest picture. In the emotional scenes, and there are plenty of them, he shows that he knows how to handle a difficult situation, and his daring efforts to add realism to the picture, make it one that is sure to produce thrills from beginning to end.

Probably the most gripping scene is one in which Jones' horse is shot from under him as horse and rider are descending a perilously steep hill. The horse is sliding down, straining backwards to keep his footing, and Jones has the reins taut in his hands, leaning far back. Then, in an instant, the rider is thrown from his horse, and the wounded animal turns several complete somersaults. It is one of the most thrilling pieces of horsemanship that has reached the screen in many a moon.

Winifred Westover, the dainty blonde star, plays opposite the cowboy and helps make the love scenes interesting. And incidentally shows that she can ride a horse as well as she can make love, or be made love to, which is equally difficult. The story is by Charles Alden Seltzer, and the picture was made in the famous Mount Desert in California, and has, therefore a wealth of beautiful outdoor photograph.

PROGRAM READER

If thrills are what you are looking for—thrills to brighten a workaday world—we have them for you. When we will have them for you on when "Firebrand Trevison," Buck Jones' latest starring vehicle, will be seen at this theatre. In those five reels of film there is enough excitement, thrills, and adventure to make your heart jump, turn somersaults and then stand still. It is a story of the West, with the cowboy actor as the central figure. Winifred Westover, who is rising in fame almost as fast as the star himself, plays the leading female part, and besides looking exceedingly pretty, proves herself an excellent horsewoman. This picture is full of honest-to-goodness fist fights between the energetic star and the powerful Stanton Heck, and all you young men who have ambitions to be movie stars had better see just what "realism" on the screen means before applying at the studios. If you have never seen Buck Jones, don't miss this opportunity to be introduced to the inimitable cowboy star. And if you have seen him before—well, there's no argument needed to make you attend.

SUGGESTIONS

Emphasize the thrills in this picture. Street stunts will fit in here also. A cowboy riding through the streets should carry such a sign as "Who was the rightful owner of Diamond K ranch? on one side, and on the other, "Buck Jones is coming! Firebrand Trevison will be at the theatre on —" Be sure that the stills give a good view of Jones—a close-up would be good. The usual costumeing of unshaven dandies or cowboys or cowgirls would get over the setting. For a teaser you could use "Why did they call him 'Firebrand'?"

CATCH LINES

A thrilling romance of the West, with Buck Jones furnishing the thrills.

What matters the Eighteenth Amendment when you have such a picture as "Firebrand Trevison" to furnish you with thrills!

"WOMAN'S MAN"

(Arrow Film Corp.)

An Exciting Story Full of Incident

TAKEING this feature as a whole and analyzing it from an amusement point of view, it should hold its own on any program with the possible exception of the larger downtown houses.

The story is full of incident which is continually cropping up. Its principal faults lie in the fact that it seems to be overcrowded with happenings which spring up entirely unexpected and give a delightful surprise. In fact it appears at times as if the story was figured out on this angle and too much attention given to twisting it about in the view of exciting the emotions rather than letting it run along in its true course.

The thrills, dramatic moments and love interest, the latter being very strong, are all here and in order to give the audience something to think about a head-on collision between two trains is introduced, which is spectacular indeed.

The locale, which is laid in Arizona and New York, shows some interesting views of the cactus country which are true in color, even to a sand-storm on the desert. Some elaborate settings are also introduced in the big town scenes which give the picture the proper atmosphere.

Romaine Fielding is convincing in the role of the young mining engineer who goes west, falls in love with a Mexican dancer and after many heart breaking trials finally takes the villain's place in the marriage ceremony.

Violet Behan as the Mexican girl and William Tooker as the villain deserve credit for their splendid acting.—Length, 5 reels.—Frank Leonard.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"Woman's Man" is the name of the feature that will be seen at the theatre on —

It stars Romaine Fielding, who has an international reputation for portraying characters of the strong, virile type.

The story is full of incident which is continually cropping up and is chock full of thrills, heart interest and romance. Then, as if this is not enough, a train wreck, caused by a head-on collision, is introduced in order to keep up the action. In fact nothing has been neglected to make this feature one that should be long remembered as a most thrilling, exciting and at the same time interesting production.

Romaine Fielding plays the role of a young mining engineer who goes west, becomes involved with the sheriff of a mining town, in Arizona, over the love of a Mexican dancer and is ordered out upon the desert for his daring.

But his sweetheart follows him and in the events that take place, she is rescued by the villain and he is left to die.

Fortune favors him, however, and he lives to take the schemer's place in a marriage ceremony arranged by the latter.

PROGRAM READER

Do you like pictures that thrill your very heart strings, that are strong in dramatic moments and romance? If so, do not fail to see Romaine Fielding in "Woman's Man," for it will excite, interest and grip you.

And then again, have you witnessed a real, modern head-on collision between two fast going trains?

If not do not fail to see this thrilling scene which is only one of the many introduced in a story of Arizona and New York life, which shows the love of a Mexican girl for a young American engineer and the trials and tribulations they went through until marriage finally united them.

The supporting cast is a strong one and includes such well known players as Velvet Behan, William Tooker, D. W. McReynolds, Emile La Croix and Julia Hurley.

SUGGESTIONS

This is a good average program feature and should interest your patrons, provided they care for this sort of entertainment.

Advertise Romaine Fielding as strong as you can, but do not forget to exploit the story.

Tell your patrons about the Arizona sand storm in which the hero and heroine are lost and the great train wreck.

Tell them also about the strong love of the Mexican girl for her American sweetheart and how she braved the desert in order to be with him.

This feature has a comedy finish in which the wedding guests are seen asleep on chairs while hero and heroine are waiting for a marriage license on the courthouse steps. Good comedy catch lines should arouse interest in these scenes.

CATCH LINES

Have you ever seen a head-on collision between two fast moving trains? If not see "Woman's Man," it will interest and thrill you.

What did the young Mexican girl do to prove that her love for the American engineer was stronger than anything she possessed? See Romaine Fielding in "Woman's Man."

See the desert sand storm in "Woman's Man," it will impress you.

¶ Last week we told you about the test of trade paper strength recently completed by one large film concern—and its result in proving Motion Picture News the “Four to One Paper” of the field.

¶ This test cost this company a good sum of money and considerable labor. But it will save many thousands of dollars of wasted advertising next year.

¶ If you are worrying about your appropriation for next year why not make a test of your own—and know the truth? Ask exhibitors what paper they prefer and read alone!

Meum and Tuum

THE business that has learned where the "me" ends and the "you" begins has learned something.

Folks as individuals are most interested in themselves, their possessions, their likes and dislikes, their own wants or accomplishments.

Very few of the folks who go to see motion pictures are interested in booking policies, percentage contracts or distribution problems.

They want to see good pictures. They have learned, too, that good pictures are not made by hap-hazard chance but are born of ideals that are able to find expression only as the result of unlimited resources of men, money and material,—resources that only Organization can supply.

They want to see talented artists in entertaining stories, directed—lavishly, humanly, wisely—by the masters of motion picture art.

The producers of Paramount Pictures have long since expanded beyond the "me" stage and have been and are now reaching toward the "you" ideal, the "you" of a public that has learned to accept nothing but the best.

Not the best for one performance or for one week, but the best, day after day, week in and week out.

And in producing for the public "you," the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation is producing directly, unequivocally for the exhibitor "you." All its might of resources, all its wealth of the world's great stories, all the brains of its continuity writers, all the talent of its popular artists, all the genius of its great directors, all the thousand and one things of motion pictures that are benefitted directly and unquestionably by the power of a great organization with a great ideal—all are working for the "you" of the public.

And the success of the exhibitor "you" is bound up in that work and that ideal.

 NEW YORK

A "Dope Sheet" Written By Five Great Exhibitors

Five of the nation's most powerful first run exhibitors sat in New York the other night and figured a "form chart" on the twelve big producer and distributor factors in the motion picture industry

These five men sat and figured in cold blood—they are not the particular friends or allies of anybody making or releasing pictures—how many really big productions (big in box-office earning power) would be delivered by these twelve organizations in twelve months from September 1st., 1920. Here is the table they prepared:

Company No.	Est. Big Pictures
1.	2
2.	2
3.	2
4.	4
5.	4
6.	4
7.	4
8.	8
9.	8
10.	16
11.	16
12. [Associated Producers]	20
Total big pictures	90

It is highly significant that the big first run factors expect more big pictures from the strong, capable, successful men who comprise Associated Producers, Inc. than from any other source in the industry.

To establish the above table the exhibitors listed every company in the industry; listed 150 directors and listed 250 stars or so-called stars.

We say to the exhibitors of the industry that if there are to be a total of 100 big pictures in the market next season Associated Producers will make and release 30 of the national total.

MADNESS

"The Most Beautiful Blonde Since Venus" is the phrase a famous artist used to describe

Rubye De Remer

as she appears in

Joseph Levering's Production

As a nurse she falls under suspicion and so down into poverty and want. She answers a strange newspaper ad: "Wanted: A Temporary Wife".

How she marries and wins the man of her heart leads to a smashing and thrilling climax.

Rubye De Remer and Mary Boland both wear rare and beautiful gowns. Women delight in the big wedding dinner scene.

The celebrated cast also includes Edmund Breese, Eugene Strong-Armond Cortes and W. T. Carleton. Joseph Levering directed the production of "His Temporary Wife"—a screen picturization of Robert Ames Bennett's popular novel.

Fox Entertainments

Fox Eastern Studios and Executive Offices, New York

FOX Film Corporation enters upon its seventh season with the emphatic statement that greater productions, bigger profits and assured success are coming to exhibitors who are users of its pictures during the season 1920-1921, than ever before.

This is a season of splendid progress for FOX. The principle of sound business dealing, plus experienced showmanship, has been applied to the productions offered this season.

Stories, production, direction, acting, scenery and studio efficiency have combined in one big unit to make Fox Pictures the talk of the world during the coming season.

Under the Fox plan of booking and contract, every exhibitor is his own boss, subject to no monopoly or control from outsiders.

The Fox method of doing business is well and creditably known to exhibitors throughout the world. Our slogan is to please patrons and pay profits to exhibitors.

Step into the Fox Exchange, and ask to have a 1920-1921 new production screened for you. They are ready. They await your inspection. The pages which follow carry a few details—any Fox projection room will tell you the whole story.

The Author's Tribute to the Production and Its Star

3, Inverness Mansions,
Moscow Road, Bayswater, W. 2, London.

Mr. William Fox:

Dear Sir:-

I witnessed the Fox Film Company's presentation of my story "If I Were King" with a keen interest, which soon became a warm approval that ended in cordial admiration. The tale has been retold vividly and brilliantly in the terms of the new art. The characterization is excellent, the setting remarkable for its beauty, and the handling of the great crowds towards the close a marvel of effect.

But the triumph of the film was William Farnum's interpretation of the part of Francois Villon. Humor, poetry, rascality, gallantry, valor, passion, tragedy, played in their turn upon William Farnum's face, so eloquent in its wordless action that I could almost believe I was hearing William Farnum's voice.

NOT for years past has there been any picture with the exploitation possibilities of this amazing production, not one of whose 2,000 scenes was staged. We know this because of our success at the ASTOR Theatre in New York and the LA SALLE in Chicago—both houses playing to capacity from the first day of showing. Simply show the stills of these barbaric people, whose abysmal savagery is shown in every line of their faces, and you'll have an audience that will crowd your house to the limit. Exploit it and you'll have to ring up the traffic squad. Book this authentic and amazing record of humanity at the depths for a regular, old-fashioned clean-up. Get after this today.

THIS photoplay is a warning to girls. It is high-class but the appeal is direct. It conclusively proves all is not gold that glitters beneath an Old World title. It permits women to discover that polish doesn't make the man. The Prince appeared to be all that a man should be. His smartness, gallantry and fine talk were the heroine's only guides. They were very poor guides.

IN BOOKING

"UP IN MARY'S ATTIC"

YOU ARE ASSURED OF THE PATRONAGE OF MEN

AND HERE'S WHAT THE WOMEN HAVE TO SAY:

Miss Lillian Duffy in the New York Daily News

After all it wasn't Mary's Attic, but the attic of the school which Mary attended, that figured so prominently in title and picture.

After getting us all worked up and putting over some unheralded press agency Fine Arts Pictures, Inc., went to work and outsenneted Mack Sennett's best bathing girl efforts.

There are bathing girls galore posing on the beach, dashing in and out of torch-lit caves and grouped about a beautiful swimming pool. Athletic girls box in the gymnasium and throw one another roughly about. There are pajama-clad girls getting the usual drenching in the rainstorm. In fact there are girls, girls everywhere, and very few men to see.

We are offered girls participating in midnight marshmallow feasts in the boarding school dormitory; and last, but certainly not least we have the "Vampires' Nest," an underworld dive.

Everything considered I believe we have enough girls to last for some time to come.

Believing we've gotten everybody in we'll tell you about the story.

Mary had been married to Jack for two years, and the question was, when sent off to boarding school, where to hide the baby. Y'see she didn't dare tell she was married, because she would have lost her inheritance, which could not be hers until she was twenty-one. At any rate she decided to hide baby in the attic of the school, and the discovery is what all the "to do" is about.

Aileen St. John-Brennon in New York Morning Telegraph

There isn't a vacant seat at the Broadway Theatre this week. The California bathing girls are there in profusion. They appear in person in "A Beach Promenade," in six gasps and three shocks.

These young damsels of "Wim, Wigor and Vitality," appear in the Fine Arts Pictures production, "Up in Mary's Attic," which is used to display their charms and attenuated raiment. We first met them in a correct seminary for young ladies in which they figure prominently. A matrimonial tangle, a pouting blonde with a baby stare and a fake clergyman provide something of a plot about which the bathing beauties cavort in every conceivable form of disarray to the manifest pleasure of the large audiences which are flocking to the theatre. Talk about your first nights! There is a bald-headed row at every performance at the Moss house.

The costumes, even conservatively speaking, would fit into a week-end bag, they are elaborate and there are many pleasing effects.

Grace Vail in New York American

The Broadway Theatre presented a unique combination of screen and jazz entertainment last evening when the farce comedy film "Up In Mary's Attic" and a girl-revue entitled "A Beach Promenade," opened for an indefinite engagement. Combining comedy, a semi-promise of something nicely naughty, and fifteen girls, the latter mostly in bathing suits, the picture should prove popular with seekers of frothy diversion.

The film opens in a girls' seminary with the usual array of thrilled young things, sapling-like antics, and vast confusion. Mary, the central figure, has been left a fortune by one of those uncles who exist in comedies only—he has left her a fortune on the proviso that she must not marry before she has reached the ripe age of twenty-one. But little boy Cupid has already beaten old man Uncle, and Mary has gone and done it. Furthermore, there is a "Mary-kin" to complicate the plot. This child is the cause of the title. Mary keeps her baby hidden up in the attic. And naturally the six reels of action prance up and down and in and out of that attic. The film is breezy and diverting.

The Test that Proves Every Test

¶ About a year ago we published the complete returns in a test of motion picture trade paper strength conducted by one large film company. The voting in that test found Motion Picture News a THREE to ONE leader over its nearest competitor.

Two weeks ago another large film company completed an exhaustive direct-to-the-exhibitor test. The plain, straightforward question was asked: "What trade paper do you find most useful to you in your work?"

¶ The result? Naturally, Motion Picture News in the lead. And, of course, in the lead by a wide margin. But the big, outstanding fact:

"It takes the votes cast for the four nearest trade papers combined to equal the number cast for Motion Picture News."

The "Four to One" paper of the field—Motion Picture News!

¶ The exact figures as to each trade paper are interesting. Eliminating the scattered votes and narrowing it down to the four leading trade papers, we find Motion Picture News a three-and-one-third to one preference over the trade paper now carrying the nearest number of advertising pages.

The figures give it slightly better than a three-and-one-third to one lead over the trade paper carrying the next nearest number of advertising pages.

And two-and-two-thirds times as strong as the paper ranking second in the test.

¶ A total of 1779 exhibitors expressed their preference. Of these votes, 1525 were divided among the first four trade papers. And here are the figures:

Motion Picture News.....	777
Second paper.....	287
Third paper.....	231
Fourth paper.....	230

The total cast for the three nearest papers falls shy of meeting the Motion Picture News vote by twenty-nine votes!

¶ The remaining 254 votes were scattered among twenty-eight papers. One sectional publication received three times as many votes as were given to one national medium.

Out of the total votes cast Motion Picture News alone received practically as many votes as were cast for thirty-one other publications put together.

First National Exhibitors Circuit,
Milwaukee, Wis.

Dear Sirs:

Replying to yours of recent date relative to the value of your releases, beg to state that in my opinion your releases are the most consistently satisfying pictures released under any brand today.

The service out of the Milwaukee office is the best that I have so far experienced, since being in the business, from any source. As far as my experience with you, I have always received the fullest co-operation from every angle, and have always found your office ready and willing to give me a square deal at all times. The latter, as you know, is something to be proud of in this industry, and you are to be congratulated in having attained this end.

As you know, I have taken out a franchise and believe that it is for my best interest to do so, feeling that with it, I am going to protect my investment in the theatre, as well as assure myself of a supply of REAL HONEST TO GOODNESS PICTURES at a reasonable price that will give me a chance to keep some of the receipts for myself.

If I did not have full confidence in First National, I would not have taken this franchise, for I have no opposition here, and unless one felt that he was to derive benefit from same, it would be foolish to make the investment and tie himself down to any franchise, but I am satisfied that in doing so, I have made a wise move.

Yours truly,

(Signed) W. R. VINCENT.

Denver, Colorado.

I also want to acknowledge receipt of your letter telling me that I am one of the first exhibitors to take advantage of your franchise plan in this territory.

From the viewpoint of the independent exhibitor your organization offers practically an ideal arrangement. The First National Exhibitor knows exactly what he is going to get in the way of pictures, this precludes buying something sight unseen and he knows that all of his pictures are coming to him with a known box-office value and not a valuation as high as the producer thinks the exhibitor will stand.

The exhibitor is afforded protection and does not have to stand a constant raise in prices and bidding against fellow exhibitors for pictures. I wish to express my appreciation for the very fair treatment I have received in working out the details on the franchise for Colorado Springs and wish to extend my endorsement on the franchise plan together with best wishes for your continued prosperity.

Very truly yours,

"GO AND GET IT" (Neilan-First National)

Fast-Moving Melodrama Furnishes Thrills and Excitement

YOU can take off your hats to Marshall Neilan for putting forth one of the most entertaining melodramas of the season. "Go and Get It" is modeled on the lines of a serial which means that it stretches beyond the lines of plausibility and possibility. But that is nothing against it. The fact that it holds the attention through its fast-moving action with the sequences compact and following one another with perfect continuity, and providing an unadorned quota of thrills are sufficient proof of its power to intrigue the imagination. Two distinct plots with minor counterplots present the series of incidents—yet the scenes are so deftly directed that one can follow the most intimate detail without becoming entangled in the familiar serial skein.

While it is rampant melodrama there seems to be a reason for everything. Even for the humor which comes at a time when one is gasping for breath. The details are perfectly executed so that the offering has the appearance of being well rehearsed. "Go and Get It" is determined to do with newspaper life. A crooked publisher is determined to break the circulation of the paper so that he may buy it. His ardent reporter gathers in several scoops which somehow leak out to the rival sheet. The other thread in the narrative is like a page from Poe at his graphic best.

Exhibitors Trade Review

Go and Get It," an Interesting Melodrama

That large percentage of movie patrons which delights in highly colored melodrama will find "Go and Get It" an unusually interesting specimen of its kind. The wild adventures usually incident to land and sea, and in the air could not of the reporter hero on the most thrilling of serial offerings, but the story is nevertheless neatly compressed into seven reels and the travel, smoothly up to a satisfactory climax. Although the plot bristles with glaring improbabilities, Marshall Neilan has handled his material so craftily that he has obtained an atmosphere of startling realism. It is a thoroughly entertaining feature and should prove a valuable box office asset.

Points of Appeal:—There is plenty of suspense, sensational incidents galore, heart interest and bright comedy relief.

Star:—Pat O'Malley plays the hero reporter role with praiseworthy vim and dramatic force.

Supporting Cast:—Agnes Ayres is a phrasing heroine and capable support is given the principals by others of the cast.

Photography and Lighting:—The marine and aerial scenes are tremendously effective, there are many fine long shots, excellent closeups and well-filmed interiors. The lighting is admirable.

Direction:—Perfect continuity is preserved and fast action prevails throughout.

"GO AND GET IT"

"Go and Get It" is dedicated to newspaper reporters and so it is only natural and proper to have a reporter for the hero. And such a reporter! He would bring in the interests of his art he jumps from one aeroplane to another, in mid-air, and trains. He should be awarded the Pulitzer journalistic prize.

"Go and Get It" is Marshall Neilan's most entertaining production. It has an ingenious story and the director has put in plenty of thrills and bangs to enliven that thread of suspense. Mr. Neilan must have enjoyed filming it. None of its scenes are dull.

As he does with "Go and Get It" has so much more than just that it will appeal to audiences of any sort. It played at the Strand last week and the patrons obviously enjoyed it.

Mr. Neilan's cast is an excellent one. Pat O'Malley and Agnes Ayres have leading roles. Wesley Barry has a supporting role. Bull Montana is seen as an actor, while Walter Long and J. Barney Sherry also do considerable work.

"Go and Get It"

Marshall Neilan Production for First National Program is an Absorbing Mystery Story.

reviewed by Edward Weltzel.

THE best part about "Go and Get It," the Marshall Neilan picture released by First National, in which Pat O'Malley and Agnes Ayres are the featured players, is that the reporter hero obeys instructions and brings in a scoop for his paper. The picture itself also is in form that exceedingly popular operation author has "bringing home the bacon." The sole object of getting a firm grasp on the odds until the end of the last reel. "Go and Get It" is a mystery melodrama produced with the care and skill that is expected of the highest grade pictures.

In book form it would have delighted the man who found the best sort of relaxation from his duties as President in "bully yarns" of this nature. Transferred to the screen it is more engrossing than ever and is shot through with humorous bits that relieve the gruesome motive of several of the situations. The love motive is well defined and the lovers a handsome pair, whose clear thinking and right acting make them steady favorites. There isn't any moralizing or any attempt to teach anything at all in the picture—just to be entertaining first, last and always. And that is precisely what "Go and Get It" does.

Marshall Neilan has not forgotten his old trick of putting in the human shading in every scene; also of supplying a cast of uniform excellence. Pat O'Malley is a news hound, and Agnes Ayres would brighten the corner of any publication editorial rooms. Wesley Barry is its resolutely amusing as Dinty Barry is groggy as Jim Hogan and Bull Montana as the gorilla contribute strong specimens of the character acting.

The airplane scenes demand a special word of praise. They are thrilling in the extreme, the landing of the hero from a flying machine on the top of a rapidly moving train and his return to his aircraft being handled with great skill.

Our One Purpose

All of the time, and thought, and effort, and care, that is put into a RITCHEY poster, is put there with one single solitary purpose. That purpose is to sell tickets for the exhibitor! The one intention of the RITCHEY LITHO. CORP. is to be of service to the exhibitor. In other words, our one reason for existence is to sell his tickets for him.

Upon our ability to do that our prosperity depends. All of the data available has positively proven that ability on our part. Further, the individual exhibitor can at all times check the truth of that statement.

But to know that there are such posters as the RITCHEY posters, and to procure them with sufficient regularity, are two very different things. Getting them is largely up to the exhibitor, but it will inevitably result from the demand that is based upon the necessity for satisfactory box-office returns.

What Is Independence?

AFTER an experience of over seven years in this field and a previous editorial experience in other fields perhaps we may be permitted to define just what, in our opinion, is an independent trade paper.

Our idea, generally, is not that of the other fellow.

The other fellow, be he producer, distributor or exhibitor—or whatever factor in the trade—almost always decides a trade paper to be independent when it agrees fully with him in his contentions with other trade factors, when it promotes his interests ahead of the other fellows; when, on the other hand, it reverses this situation, when, editorially, it seems to favor a competitor or antagonist, when it appears in its news or review columns to bear toward some one else—then, snap judgment is passed that the paper has “sold out.”

We used to get considerably excited over this sort of unfairness; but no more. We smile and go on. It's human, that's all. We are probably just as selfish, biased and suspicious, ourselves.

The road isn't easy to travel. Never a week passes but we get a sound whack or hear the unintentional lie passed. We wish we could have sold out as often as claimed; we wouldn't be facing publishing costs today.

All the time we try only to be honest and helpful.

We claim no omniscience. Whatever value we lend is simply that from a group of commercial outsiders looking in on the evolution of a big industry and able perhaps to look ahead and give advice and service because of this same detached, bird's-eye impartial and unselfish viewpoint.

We make our share of mistakes; just the same they are human errors, and mistakes or not they are done on the level. As for being honest we make, also, no Godlike pretensions. It is good business. No journal ever thrived except it was utterly impartial and commercially disinterested.

So, that, briefly, is our idea of trade journal independence: to stand on your own feet all the time, to speak out in meeting at the proper time, to do so without any ulterior motive whatsoever save always the best interests of the trade as a whole—and never the paper's immediate and business interests nor the selfish interests of any other individual or concern or faction of the trade.

That's what the NEWS has done to the level best of its enterprise and judgment. That's what it expects to do and can do. If any one at any time thinks otherwise let him say so in print.

Our main interest is the exhibitor; because, in the main, the exhibitor is our reader. We are ready to take his judgment, and his alone, upon the subject of trade paper independence. He is dependent upon our independence; and he knows. He's got to know. And we are glad to say and very proud to say that he holds the NEWS highest to-day, highest by far (and we say this advisedly), because by long and close observation he has not found this publication wanting.

When the Organization Steps In

THE question has been raised: Should we not fight our own battles upon the screen by espousing the political candidate who is friendly, etc. Last week we issued a warning on the general subject of political screen activity.

We should fight our own battles on the screen, yes: we have done so, as with censorship. But the support of a friendly political candidate or opposition to another who has done an unfriendly thing, is another and decidedly a ticklish matter. It has its practical aspects, to say the least; they are obvious.

The matter should be left, we believe, to the exhibitor, or rather to the exhibitor's organization, local and national.

And if the exhibitor organization exists and is sufficiently representative there will be no need of using the screen to acknowledge the friendly act or decry the unfriendly act of the political candidate. Organization in itself is enough to make and uphold friends; it is sufficient, always, to secure justice; it is a power in itself with the politician.

Universal Bans Booking Agencies

"UNIVERSAL exchanges throughout the country have been instructed to sever all relations with booking agencies," reads an announcement from Universal's headquarters. "Instructions from Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, emphatically orders that Universal films henceforth are to be sold directly to the individual exhibitor," continues the statement.

In a long cablegram from Paris, where he now is passing a few days on his vacation tour of Europe, Mr. Laemmle recently outlined Universal's new stand on the subject of film middlemen. The cable was addressed to the exhibitors of the country and will be prepared for mailing to each exhibitor in the next few days.

The Universal chief cabled as follows: "Paris, France, July 21, 1920.

Dear Mr. Exhibitor:

"Universal has watched with growing interest the formation of booking agencies in various parts of the country. Knowing well from past performances the evils of collective bookings, we desire to sound a note of warning to our friends, the exhibitors, and caution them not to rush headlong into one of these organizations without first considering all the facts in the case.

"The fundamental principle of booking through a central agency is wrong—dead wrong. The moment an exhibitor ties up with such an agency, he sounds his own death-knell. From that moment his progress ceases; healthy competition becomes a thing of the past; and the small theatre owner becomes but a pawn in the hands of a blind, floundering machine.

"The individual exhibitor himself is the best man to decide what pictures are to go on his screen. He knows the likes and dislikes of his audience, and he alone is the logical man to select the program for his theatre. Promises made by the booking agencies sound good on paper, but they all end the same way—in smoke!

"Every time the exhibitors of America have been engaged in a fight for recognition, Universal has been with them, body and soul. We have lent our financial as well as our moral support. Now, when we see our friends standing on the brink of a dangerous precipice, we feel it our duty to warn them to pause and consider well what they are doing.

"Other industries are at this moment making every effort to eliminate the middleman. Why then should the motion picture industry do the opposite and deliberately create a middleman? The ring-leaders informing these booking agencies are not thinking of the exhibitors; they are thinking of themselves and fat salaries and percentages.

"In other words, they are creating jobs at your expense.

"Can you afford to share your profits with a middleman? We think you cannot!

"Effective immediately, Universal will not deal with any booking agency. The only way we will sell our product is directly to the man who owns the theatre. This is our final and unalterable stand.

"You can't book pictures by machinery!"

Signed—"Carl Laemmle."

Goldwyn Pictures Elects Six New Directors

Additional directors were elected to the board of the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation at a meeting held at the executive offices, 469 Fifth Avenue, Friday, July 23rd. The new directors are: T. Coleman du Pont, Mesmore Kendall, president of the Moredall Realty Corporation, controlling the Capitol theatre; Edward Bowes, managing director of the Capitol theatre; Robert W. Chambers, the novelist; William Braden, capitalist, and Frank H. Hitchcock, former Postmaster General during the Taft Administration.

New Houses Acquired by Lesser and Gores

Two additional theatres were added to the chain in Los Angeles, controlled by Sol Lesser and Gore Brothers, this week when the Rosebud and New Central theatres on Central avenue, Los Angeles, were purchased. Ralph Granauer, who has conducted the Lyric theatre at Stockton, California, has been engaged to manage the two houses. Numerous improvements will be made at each of the two theatres. These additional theatres give the Lesser-Gore organization twelve houses, the largest of which is the Kinema theatre. The list includes five other houses in the business district of Los Angeles and also the new house in Hollywood, which will have a seating capacity of more than 2,000, which is now in construction, to say nothing of the big picture palace that is to be built by these interests on Mercantile Place, in the heart of Los Angeles, at a cost of more than a million.

Exchange Managers War on "Bicycling"

A large delegation representing the Buffalo Motion Picture Exchange Managers' Association journeyed to Rochester on Tuesday, July 20, and there "laid down the law" on "bicycling," which it is alleged has been carried on much too often by certain exhibitors in the outlying districts of the Flower City.

Arriving in Rochester a brief meeting was held in the Hotel Seneca, and then the exchange men marched in a body to the Hotel Bayard, where a meeting of the Rochester Motion Picture Exhibitors' League was in session. In the possession of the exchange men were names of pictures, dates and other facts, proof conclusive, as it were, of the wrong-doing. The evidence was duly submitted and the exhibitors involved told that they must either pay up or be barred by the exchanges.

In defense, the exhibitors said that frequently films failed to arrive on time and that rather than disappoint their audiences and return the coin of the realm from whence it came, they had borrowed films and when the occasion arose to return the favor had done so. The exchange managers, however, contended that they should have a monetary return for all films so used. The exhibitors involved, when threatened with being "blacklisted," promised to adhere strictly to the rules of the exchanges in the future.

New Colonial Will Be Built in Richmond

Jake Wells' Colonial theatre at the northwest corner of Eighth and Broad streets, Richmond, was closed after the last performance last Saturday evening. On Monday, its attractions, with an increased orchestra, were moved to the Strand, and on Tuesday morning workmen demolished the old building to make way for the new Colonial, to be erected on that site.

Plans for the new theatre have already been approved, the contract awarded, and a part of the excavations on the adjoining lot already begun. The new Colonial will be the largest and best equipped moving-picture theatre in Virginia, and it is hoped that it can be rushed to completion in time for the opening on Christmas or New Year's.

The new building will be of fireproof structure, seating 1,970 people and designed for moving pictures only, having no stage in the usual theatrical sense. It will cost approximately $150,000.

Paramount Gets Foot-hold in Buffalo

Harold B. Franklin, managing director of Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo, representing the Shea theatrical interests and Famous Players-Lasky Corporation have completed arrangements whereby the Star, Buffalo, will adopt a policy of motion picture programs beginning September 1. It will be renamed the Criterion.

¶ When advertising is rotated or duplicated the advertiser only gets in other trade papers from 1-4 to 1-3 the pulling power of Motion Picture News.

Laboratory Workers Continue the Strike in New York

Producers Claim Its Early Death; Strikers Remain Firm, Says Union Leader

AFTER a week and a half the strike of laboratory workers in New York city and vicinity was still continuing on Wednesday of this week, with the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry prophesying that the strike would die an early death, and the Motion Picture Craftsmen, the local union of the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees and Motion Picture Operators, still confident that they had the situation well in hand. The strike was started on the morning of July 20th and was the result of a series of demands presented to all manufacturers of films by the laboratory workers.

Immediately after the strike was started, the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry communicated with the local union, stating that they would consent to meet and discuss the proposed contract, provided the workers should return to their laboratories. The Union refused, believing that the matter might not be settled for several months, as the laboratory owners gave no assurance of when action upon the demands should be taken.

The National Association, on Wednesday of this week, stated that as they had received no word from the strikers concerning the calling off of the strike, they proposed to go ahead and start to reorganize as rapidly as conditions would permit. The Association also states that no new agreements had been signed up to July 28th by any members of the National Association nor those who have stood with the Laboratory Section, though they were not members. It is known that several independent laboratories signed the contract submitted by the union during the early days of the strike.

Reports from the two factions still show great discrepancy as to the number of workers still on strike. The Motion Picture Craftsmen claim a membership of 3,000. Eight hundred of these are now working in laboratories which came to an amicable agreement with the union. There are, therefore, according to the strikers, still 2,200 members of the organization idle. The Famous Players Long Island laboratories and the Paragon laboratories, says the union, have made no effort to even open their doors. Other studios and laboratories are in a thoroughly depleted condition it was said, and to prove their statement, officials of the union showed the numerous advertisements for laboratory workers which have been appearing daily in the metropolitan papers.

The National Association gives widely divergent figures. "At the various plants

Rickards and Nace Deny They Have Sold Out

IN a telegram just received from Rickards and Nace of Phoenix, Ariz., a request is made for the publication of their formal denial to the rumor that they have sold their circuit to a producing concern. The wire reads as follows:

"We are sole owners of all our houses, and this rumor finds its incipency in opposition circles. It's a grave injustice to us, and we hope you will grant us the correction, as the News reaches them all. The rumor, perhaps, started in our signing contracts for the entire output of the Famous Players-Lasky and cancelling another brand. We considered that no house where more than one change a week was made could possibly get along without Paramount, and the decision caused the story."

canvassed," reads their statement, issued July 28th, "a big increase in the working force has been noted. The Evans Film Laboratories reported a considerable increase in the working forces over the last week; Universal reported an increase in the morning, and many of their old employees returned after lunch; Fox Film reopened its laboratory July 26th with about 20 per cent. of its employees; this number was augmented from hour to hour as others reported for work, and the last report shows that they have passed the halfway mark. A number of those returning reported that they had been deterred by open threats of bodily harm. The Craftsmen Laboratories report that conditions are much better; Kessel and Eclipse also report an improvement in numbers over last week. The Republic continues 100 per cent, as does Pathe at Bound Brook. Pathe at Jersey City is running 90 per cent. Erbograpn continues to gain."

The Motion Picture Craftsmen state that Pathe's Bound Brook laboratory is out of their jurisdiction, but that only a very few workers are at the Jersey City laboratory. Republic, they state, is running 75 per cent.

The two organizations also take issue on the length of time necessary to train new workers. The National Association claims that this can be done in some cases, in a month's time, while the union declares that at least six months is necessary to develop even an unskilled worker. "Moreover," stated Abe Heller, president of the strikers' organization, "there are not enough old workers left in the laboratories to train new ones. We have the figures and we can prove what we say. The very advertisements in the help wanted columns form an indictment."

That the strikers are solidly behind their leaders in remaining firm, was said to be evidenced by a parade held on Monday evening, July 26, at Fort Lee, where over a thousand workers were heartily cheered as they walked through the streets. "If anything," said Mr. Heller, "we have increased in numbers since the beginning of the strike. We had 150 new members come to us on July 26, after the laboratory issued this propaganda."

The effect of the strike upon the industry is not at present apparent to any great degree, probably owing to the fact that most of the companies are well ahead on their prints. News weeklies have been printed, but the strike was given as the reason for the cancellation of a feature at a Broadway theatre recently.

Mr. Heller stated that there was no danger of the spread of the strike unless the situation got beyond the control of the local union, in which case it would be turned over to the national body for action. Mr. Heller also stated that one laboratory owner had been in conference with him, being dissatisfied with the method of the National Association in conducting the affair.

The report of the National Association on conditions during the second week of the strike was augmented by a reiteration of the unjustness and impracticability of the workers' demands.

"The strike situation," says the National Association, "if it has done nothing else, has welded the laboratory units together into a closer body. The laboratory section of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry bids fair to become a miniature board of trade or chamber of commerce in its own particular line. The outcome of this welding together will no doubt be the interchange of helpful information; a suggestion as to wages, working conditions, and those other things which ultimately follow a well conducted co-operative unit wherein the manufacturers of a product learn more and earn more through the interchange of information and ideas. Another outcome of the welding together of the laboratory units may be co-operative advertising along the lines of that now being done by other trades and of a tenor similar to that of the telephone company throughout the United States."

¶ Every dollar spent in advertising in Motion Picture News is worth just 34 cents in another trade paper, 26 cents in another, and 24 cents in another.

$600,000 Film Loss in Exchange Explosion

A great gust of flame last Friday afternoon in the new Film Exchange building in Kansas City destroyed many reels of motion picture films in the vaults of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation and the Metro Pictures Corporation. The managers of these exchanges estimated the loss in films to be $600,000 and the damage to the building at $7,500.

The films were to have been released the last of this month and in August and September and had never been exhibited. Within two hours of the moment of the explosion, Joseph H. Gilday, manager of the Kansas City branch of the corporation, was at his desk dictating telegrams for films to replace those that had been destroyed.

The fire is believed to have been caused by spontaneous combustion from the sun's rays shining in at a south window on a metal film "spool" from which the black paint may have been chipped. Heavy fire walls and iron doors, which close automatically by weights, confined the blaze to the shipping room and six small vaults in which the films were stored.

The Film Exchange building was completed April 15, being under construction since July, last year, at a cost of $786,000. The building is the first of its kind constructed in the United States with special mechanical features in it to guard against fire. The construction feature of the building was the vaults, made of steel and believed proof against explosion and fire damage.

Alleged Contract Breach Basis of Law Suit

The New York Times recently carried a court announcement of the fact that the Equity Pictures Corporation had been sued in the Supreme Court of New York for five hundred thousand dollars damages by the Fine Arts Film Corporation of Michigan, for alleged breach of contract in connection with the financing of Fine Arts Productions of Clara Kimball Young pictures.

The break in relations between Fine Arts and Equity occurred more than three weeks ago during the filming of one of the Young pictures at the Garson Studios in Los Angeles.

Fine Arts gave as a reason for the cancellation of the Young contract their allegation that Equity Pictures Corporation had defaulted in a contract with Fine Arts. In other words, Fine Arts had a contract with Equity Pictures Corporation by which Equity had contracted to finance the Fine Arts production of Clara Kimball Young pictures.

According to a recent test, Motion Picture News advertising rate should be at least four times that of any other paper—either that, or in the advertiser's own best interests, the News should carry ALL of its announcements ALL the time and most of his selling campaign.

Gabriel Hess Replies to Suit by Madge Kennedy

The attention of Gabriel L. Hess, general counsel for Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, was called to a published report stating that Madge Kennedy has brought suit against the Goldwyn Corporation for salary said to be due. Mr. Hess said:

"It is true that suit has been begun by Miss Kennedy against this company to recover certain instalments of salary covering a period of approximately ten days. The position of this company is that no services were performed during the period for which compensation is claimed and that therefore nothing is due. Miss Kennedy is still associated with this company, is now engaged in the production of pictures under the contract upon which she is suing and is receiving the stipulated compensation provided to be paid her."

Jesse Lasky Leaves for Coast Conference

Home only a week from London, where he engaged several British authors to write directly for Paramount Pictures, Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, departed recently for Hollywood, where he will spend the next few weeks in close consultation with those in charge of production at the Lasky studio.

Mr. Lasky, on his arrival in Hollywood, will confer with Cecil B. DeMille, director general of the Famous Players-Lasky Corp., who is planning a super-production of a famous play.

Kansas State Exhibitors to Meet in September

A letter received from the headquarters of the Kansas State Exhibitors Association in Kansas City, Mo., advises that the organization is now conducting a state-wide campaign to effect a 100-per-cent membership. There are now two hundred and sixty members enrolled. Plans are also being considered for the holding of a state convention on or about September 27 and 28, at which action will be taken on matters appertaining to the national organization and state affairs.

Arthur Ziehm of Goldwyn to Visit Europe

Arthur Ziehm, foreign sales manager for the Goldwyn Distributing Corporation, has booked passage for Europe and will sail on August 4. He will arrive on the other side in time to be present at the opening of the International Motion Picture Exposition to be held in Amsterdam, Holland, from August 12 to September 21 and will see that the Goldwyn productions are given the proper emphasis at the great show.

He will leave Amsterdam before the exposition closes to attend the Kino Messe, or motion picture exposition, of Germany, which will be held in Leipzig the latter part of August. While abroad Mr. Ziehm will devote considerable time to looking after the interests of Goldwyn in European countries, particularly in Norway, Sweden, Denmark, Italy and Spain.

Exhibitors' National Association Tackles Music Tax Problem

Some Distributors Have Arranged to Publish Cues for Tax-Free Music Only

A STATEMENT received during the week from the headquarters of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America takes up the question of the music tax and emphasizes the fact that several of the larger concerns have arranged to publish cue sheets of tax-free music only. This statement is submitted as follows:

"You all know the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers has succeeded in making the motion picture theatre owners pay a royalty on all copyrighted music written by members of their Society. The Motion Picture Theatre Owners do not wish to deprive any person or corporation of their just rights and recognize the right of property to music. We maintain, however, that we return more than one hundred per cent. value for every benefit we have ever derived or are likely to derive from the playing of this copyrighted music. Nothing tends to popularize songs and music more quickly than their use in motion picture theatres. Indeed, there is no other way in which they can be brought to the notice of the music-loving public of this country in such an incredibly short time as in the motion picture theatre.

"We hold that there is a fair exchange of values and that the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers is doing itself an injury in laying this embargo on its own musical creations in the motion picture theatres of the country. We have written a letter to all music publishers, setting forth our views in this matter.

"In the meantime many producers and distributors of motion pictures, who make a habit of providing musical cue sheets to exhibitors using their service, have gone on record as telling their patrons that they will hereafter only use tax-free music in their scores. Among the companies who have taken this wise and progressive step are the Metro Pictures Corporation, which announced that its compilers of musical cue sheets have been instructed to use none but tax-free music in the cue sheets. A similar position has been announced by the Pathe Exchange, Inc. Pathe in a communication, declared that they have assured themselves of tax-free music. They say that they are very ready to co-operate with progressive exhibitors' organization, and they look upon this method of co-operation as a practical demonstration of their good-will.

"A third prominent distributing concern, the Robertson-Cole Co., have gone on record in the same way. They say that instructions have been issued to the organization handling their music cues to designate tax-free music in connection with each production. The Hallmark Pictures Corp. is another company on the path of progress. They say that the concern which furnishes their cue sheets has been instructed to designate only tax-free music and that in all cases they will insist on avoiding taxable numbers.

"With these big concerns to lead the movement away from taxable music for use in motion picture theatres, it is clear that very little of the taxable music will be played in motion picture theatres in the near future. The good-will of the exhibitor is worth very much more to the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers than the profits which are collected under the present system, and which resulted in no great advantage to the members of the society but only created sinecures for a small group of clever collectors and manipulators."

Following is a copy of the letter addressed by Sydney S. Cohen, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, to the individual members of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers:

"We find your name enrolled on the membership list of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers.

"We do not know whether you fully appreciate the harsh and somewhat peremptory measures that the society, through certain of its agents, has adopted in proceeding against motion picture theatre owners who are using music originated by members belonging to your society. This is not the place to write in detail of some of the petty and almost ludicrous means your agents have employed in creating trouble for exhibitors. It may be that here and there a timid exhibitor has been laid under tribute in this way, but now with the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America organized on a national basis, we will use all lawful means to keep your music out of our theatres. In doing this we take it that we are complying with your own wishes in the matter. This brings us to the question—what is more valuable to you as a music publisher, to have your music popularized in 15,000 amusement centers of the country practically for nine hours a day, generally seven days of the week, or to collect a few dollars on nominal royalties? It seems to me that the rule of reason and equity ought to make us profitable partners rather than antagonists.

"You contribute something to this equitable partnership by foregoing a petty sum of money, and we contribute to the partnership by making your work known and enabling you to realize on its merits, whenever it has any merits. Not only will you and we benefit by such an arrangement, but it will be to the distinct advantage of the general public as well.

"As matters stand today, the return to you personally of an expensive campaign for the enforcement of nominal royalties is negligible and not to be compared with the loss of the exhibitors' good will. The money which is collected in ways that may be perfectly legal, but not always decent and honorable, goes to a small group of your aides and provides resources for them. It is insignificant as far as any direct personal benefit to yourself is concerned.

"There is every reason why the Motion Picture Theatre Owners and the Music Publishers, Composers and Authors should work together instead of being at cross purposes.

"May I not offer the suggestion to you to join the growing list of music publishers who are now co-operating with exhibitors and to recognize the force and validity of my reasoning as outlined above? These gentlemen have given us the right to play their music without exacting any toll whatever. It seems to me that enlightened self-interest, if no other consideration would induce you to forego the paltry sum that you may receive some day, if the insiders declare a dividend. In connection with this, it may interest you to read the typical letter enclosed from an exhibitor in Fort Smith, Arkansas, owning the New theatre. The letter speaks for itself.

"In conclusion, I beg to say that you are now maintaining at great expense a complicated machinery of collection, which at its best is of doubtful value. On the other hand, if you co-operate with the exhibitors in the manner indicated, I will notify every motion picture theatre owner in the United States, and you may be assured of their earnest, active and practical support."

Georgia Press Solidly Against Censorship

Arthur Lucas at Head of the Anti-Censorship Forces Is Promised Cooperation

THE question of motion-picture censorship has been claiming the attention of the Georgia state legislature. Arthur Lucas has been leading the anti-censorship forces, and the National Association of the Motion-Picture Industry has engaged Judge Albert Foster of Madison, one of the most successful lawyers of Georgia, to represent it in the fight to defeat the legislation. One of the most encouraging features of the campaign waged by the picture interests against the proposed bill is the whole-hearted backing given the screen representatives by the state press.

A large number of communications have been received by Mr. Lucas from the editors of the various dailies throughout the state, declaring their opposition to the proposed censorship on the grounds that this bill threatens the fundamentals of our free government and is but an entering wedge to curtail later on the freedom of the press. Some promise tangible support in the way of vigorous editorials against the proposed legislation. From Gray Adams, editor of the Moultrie Observer of Atlanta, Ga., comes the following telegram:

"I am vigorously opposed to the censorship bill, and the Observer on Monday will carry an editorial against it. The people of the state are tired of being told what to do and what not to do. They are sick of the attempts of reformers to set up an intolerant paternalistic form of government. The men and women of Georgia know what kind of pictures they should see and permit their children to see just as well as Georgia lawmakers do or any board of censors."

W. S. Kirkpatrick, editor of the Times-Recorder, Americus, Ga., wires Mr. Lucas as follows:

"The passage of the picture censorship law in Georgia would not only be a mistake but would strike a blow at the fundamentals of our free government and prove the opening wedge for the curtailment of the free press. We now have laws to punish offenders against morals and decency. Who shall have the right to tell me or any one else what pictures coming within the present law we shall not see if we choose? Such a move contains a positive danger. It should be defeated by all means."

The following comes from the Free Press of Quitman, Ga.:

"Admitting that some pictures, like some people, are not all they should be, we do not believe a state censorship as proposed by the Georgia Legislature is feasible or wise."

M. E. Brewster, editor of the Brunswick Banner, Brunswick, Ga., expresses the following opinion:

"Next to newspapers I consider the motion pictures the greatest form for good in the country today. I am seriously opposed to muzzling pictures as much as I would be to muzzling the press. I consider the attempt as small, and it favors things that might be done in the Rock Ages or in Bolshevik Russia or downtrodden Germany."

H. J. Rowe, of Atlanta, has the following comment to make:

"Censorship of pictures does not improve the morals; neither does censorship aid in causing the producer to improve on pictures. The successful producer is alive to that which is sought by the public, and the best that can be produced is economical and profitable. Local censorship boards will result in no good but are calculated to bring on dissatisfaction caused by diversity of opinions of inexperienced boards."

J. D. McCartney, editor of the Tribune-Herald of Rome, Ga., says:

"The Tribune-Herald is opposed to the proposed censorship bill for motion pictures, believing it wrong in principle, not feasible in practice and not necessary in morals."

Bowdre Phinesy, publisher of the Augusta Herald, wires:

"Please enter our protest in behalf of the public against the proposed censorship bill introduced in the Georgia Senate. We are confident that local authorities and local public sentiment are fully able to protect their own communities in Georgia without proposed legislation."

W. H. Tucker, editor of the Columbus Enquirer, comments as follows:

"I am unable to conceive of even a remote necessity for the enactment of movie censorship law in Georgia."

British Manager Here to Study Methods

Major Charles Bell of Famous Players' London Branch to Succeed Milton Hoffman

MAJOR CHARLES H. BELL, assistant general-manager of the Famous Players-Lasky British Productions, Inc., arrived in New York from England on last Saturday aboard the Baltic. He is here to study American production methods, preparatory to assuming the general-managership of the Famous Players-Lasky's London branch, succeeding Milton Hoffman, who will return to this country. In the early part of the week, Major Bell visited the Famous Players-Lasky studio in West Fifty-sixth street, New York. He started for the Coast Wednesday afternoon where he will remain for about four weeks, then returning to New York. It is his intention to reach England the early part of September.

During the course of an interview with a News representative on Wednesday morning, Major Bell declared that his observations of New York studios had convinced him that the new Famous Players-Lasky

London plant was built along the right lines and that the right ideas were being put into practice on the other side. He said that in some respects the London plant was ahead of the New York studio, especially in the possession by the former of a huge tank which permitted underwater photography and the reproduction of waterfalls and the like based on actual exterior settings.

"The English manufacturer enjoys another advantage. With the advance of aviation he finds it possible to ship a small cast and equipment in a few planes of the Handley-Page type within a few hours to many of the numerous spots on the continent famous for their natural beauty or social importance. Thus Paris lies within two and a half hours' flying distance from London. Marseilles can be reached within five hours, and Monte Carlo and the grandeur of the Riviera are but another hop beyond.

"In England itself the chief barrier to the shooting of exteriors is the climate. However, we have a plan to offset this disadvantage by transporting powerful lighting equipment to exterior locations aboard motor-lorries. By means of these new lights we will be enabled to convert the flat light on a murky day into an intensity equal to that of the natural sunlight.

"Another most important innovation we have effected is the arrangement with Parisian designers of fashions. English pictures are usually seen by the public from twelve to fifteen months after their completion. This means in many cases that the gowns worn by the cast are months behind the fashions prevailing at the time when the picture is shown to the public. Now we have arranged to have advance plates of gowns, parasols and the like sent to us by the Parisian wholesalers as soon as they have been made up. From these

Baumann and Kessel to Resume Active Production Work

Old-time Organization Re-enters Production Field to Star "Babe" Ruth

CHARLES BAUMANN and Adam Kessel, Jr., after three years' absence from the production field, announce their plan to re-engage in active production work in the near future. Their decision to resume production was made following negotiations with "Babe" Ruth, the crack batsman of the New York American Baseball Club, who has been signed to appear in the stellar role of "Headin' Home," to be made under the Baumann-Kessel auspices. The following statement has been issued in connection with the production plans of the Baumann-Kessel organization:

"After three years of non-activity in motion pictures the famous firm of Kessel and Baumann announced this week its return to big things in a big way with orders for full steam ahead in production and distribution. For their second debut these pioneers have chosen 'Babe' Ruth, whose home-run championship has made him an international figure. Ruth will be starred in a photodrama called 'Headin' Home.'

"Kessel and Baumann waited until 'Headin' Home' was fully under way before announcing the capture of their prize, in order that they might have opportunity to judge the story and the actual production merits from a box-office point of view.

"More than twelve years ago Charles Baumann and Adam Kessel, Jr., entered the motion-picture business as a firm and were among the most, if not the most, successful of the early big figures in the industry. Their names became a house word in the theatres of America and Canada and subsequently throughout the world through an unbroken line of successes, conspicuous among which were 'Mickey' and 'Tillie's Punctured Romance.' Charlie Chaplin, Mack Sennett, Thomas Ince and many other great names of the picture world today had their first success under the Kessel and Baumann banner, and the New York Motion Picture Company was one of the sensational financial successes of the early picture period.

"Three years ago they ceased active participation in producing, being content to take care of the business which had accrued during their period of successful effort. Within the past few months it has been understood in Longacre Square that something was to be expected, but that the firm would not resume its participation except in a big way.

"As is unusual in the making of a motion picture with a non-motion picture hero, they found their big story first and then chose 'Babe' Ruth as the star because he fitted the picture. With the luck which usually attends good management,

Charles Baumann and "Ad" Kessel

'Babe' Ruth batted himself into a greater hero by eclipsing his own home-run record and setting the baseball world and the public in general talking over his sensational exploits.

"The scenario was completed and direction begun on the very day before 'Babe's' home-run record was broken by himself. Since that time the most interesting personality in baseball today has become a magazine writer of considerable distinction and a popular idol more talked about than presidents, kings and candidates.

"Kessel and Baumann now describe 'Headin' Home' as 'The greatest independent photodrama for matinee and evening business in independent picture history—to be exploited by independent buyers and road showmen with special territorial campaigns warranted by its tremendous drawing power.'

"Babe" Ruth

"It was announced at the Kessel and Baumann offices in the Longacre Building that arrangements are now being made to such dealers for the handling of the production territorially.

"The return of Kessel and Baumann to big figure life in motion pictures will be welcomed by those concerned in the larger activities of the business and their future efforts will be watched with the greatest interest by exhibitors.

"'Headin' Home' is scheduled for release September 20."

Another statement, describing the new venture about to be undertaken by the Baumann-Kessel organization with "Babe" Ruth as the star attraction, comes as follows from the office of Arthur James at 3 East 44th street, New York:

"'Babe' Ruth, who has startled the baseball world and aroused more daily conversation than possibly any man in the United States this year, has become a screen star. He will appear in 'Headin' Home,' a Kessel and Baumann production which, it is announced, has a real drama of American life.

"In selecting Ruth as a star the producers had in mind the tremendous box-office value attaching to the name of a popular national hero, together with the fact that Ruth's personality was almost as interesting as his ability to drive a baseball farther and oftener than any other man in the world.

"The production has been under way for a considerable time, but no announcement was made until it had reached a stage where Charles Baumann and Adam Kessel could place their stamp of approval upon it. Their especial reason in this instance was the fact, that it constitutes the vehicle for their re-entry into the big things of motion pictures after three years of non-activity.

"'Babe' Ruth is the idol of boys from six to ninety-six throughout the United States and Canada and wherever baseball is played or known. Children are being named after him. Magazines seek him as an author. Publishers have besieged him for an authentic history of his career. His name appears with amazing frequency on the front page of daily newspapers throughout the land because every day or two he again breaks his own home-run record, and it has also become a matter of news when he fails to bat a home run in any game in which he plays.

"The producers assert with considerable confidence, that 'Babe' Ruth has al-

Japanese Agent in East to Inspect Market

Kenzo Taguchi, chief director of the Shochiku Kinema Company of Tokyo, Japan, a theatrical concern which practically controls the show business of the Flowery Empire and which has lately made elaborate plans for the production of motion pictures, is in America making extensive investigations for his employers prior to the opening of the Japanese studios.

Mr. Taguchi has just arrived in New York from Los Angeles, where he has been stopping for some time studying the American methods of making pictures and where he purchased the equipment for the new studios. One of Mr. Taguchi's principal objects in visiting New York was to secure the services of an American representative since the Japanese company will depend largely on the United States for the technical part of production operations although the players and directors will be Japanese.

Through H. T. Koshio, a Japanese photographer, who has been a resident of New York for several years with a studio at 661 Fifth avenue, and who has been engaged to represent the Shochiku company in New York, the matters mentioned above will be arranged. Mr. Koshio will also purchase American-made pictures for distribution throughout Japan.

Cohen Suggests Meeting on Uniform Contract

Sidney S. Cohen, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, has written a letter to all manufacturers and distributors in the industry in an effort to fulfill his task of bringing about uniform contracts, as instructed by the national convention at Cleveland. Mr. Cohen suggests a conference in which the matter can be discussed. He states that if the exhibitor had a voice in the framing of the conditions of the contract, he would live up to it conscientiously, and thus the faithful observance of the contract would redound to the direct benefit of the distributor.

"In a spirit of perfect amity," writes Mr. Cohen, in his letter, "I therefore suggest that you appoint a person clothed with authority to attend a conference between representatives of the manufacturers and the exhibiting interests. This conference is to consider the question of a contract that will be deemed fair and equitable to all the parties concerned. Surely the effort is worth while. If the exhibitors of the country feel that they are signing a form of contract that is approved in a formal way by the leaders of their organization, it is safe to assume that they will observe its conditions to the best of their ability."

¶ The test proved that exhibitors prefer Motion Picture News to any other trade paper upwards of four to one.
